The principle of law is firmly established that a person asking the Court to exercise its discretionary jurisdiction must make out a strong prima facie case in support of the title which he asserts, and must satisfy the Court that its interference is necessary to protect him from irreparable or at least, serious injury before the legal right could be established at the trial. Being an exceptional remedy, an injunction will be refused in the first instance except upon a clear prima facie case and "upon positive averments of the equities on which the application for relief is based." I am unable to see what equities there are in favour of the plaintiff entitling him to the temporary injunction granted by the Court below, nor am I satisfied that the plaintiff is likely to suffer any injury while his alleged rights are being investigated. The rule of law is that the Court should, before disturbing any man's legal right or stripping him of any rights with which the law has clothed him, be satisfied that the probability is in favour of his case ultimately failing in the final issue of the suit. This, in my opinion, the plaintiff has not been able to establish, and I do not, therefore, think that a temporary injunction should have been granted in this case.

As to plaintiff's sustaining irreparable injury by the defendant's continuing to act as a Municipal Commissioner pending the determination of the suit, the apprehension appears to be more imaginary than real. If the suit is decided in favour of the plaintiff the result would be that the election would be set aside and a fresh election ordered, but I am wholly at a loss to understand how the plaintiff would be injured by the defendants continuing to discharge the functions of a Municipal Commissioner during this time. It appears to me that there is no substance in the application made by the plaintiff for the issue of a temporary injunction and that he is obviously prompted by a desire to cause injury to the defendant.

I accordingly accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the Court below, dismiss the petition for the temporary injunction with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—This application has been made against an order passed by the Officiating Additional District Judge of Patna on the 31st January 1923 reversing the order of the Subordinate Judge of Patna dated the 10th May 1922. It appears that on the 18th April the Subordinate Judge of Patna sold certain immoveable properties belonging to the two petitioners and their co-judgment-debtors in execution of a money-decree. On the 5th May the petitioners applied for permission to deposit the money under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil Procedure Code and to have the sale set aside. On the same date the decree-holder made an application stating that he had received the full amount of his decretal claim from the judgment-debtors and asking that the payment should be certified. On the 6th May the petitioners deposited in Court the compensation due to the auction-purchaser. On the same date the auction-purchaser paid into Court the balance of the auction purchase-money. Thereupon the Subordinate Judge adjourned the case till the 10th May in order that the petitioners might produce a Treasury Chalan showing that the necessary sums had been paid into the Treasury. On the 10th May the case was duly put up and the sale was set aside. Against this order the auction-purchaser appealed to the Additional District Judge who held that, as the auction-purchaser had not been made a party to the proceedings within one month of the date of the sale, the deposit could not be accepted. He accordingly set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and directed that the sale should be confirmed. The present application is made against the Additional District Judge's order.

It is urged by the petitioners that the learned Additional District Judge declined to exercise jurisdiction in refusing to accept the deposit. Now, O. XXI, r. 92, Civil Procedure Code, nowhere speaks of the auction-purchaser being made a party, it provides that no sale can be confirmed or set aside unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby and, in my opinion, the rule means that the Court is incompetent to make any order at all till such notice has been given. The duty of moving the Court to issue notice lies, of course, upon the applicant and all that the Court has to do is to give him a reasonable opportunity for doing so. On default, the Court may dismiss the application, and there is no obligation upon the Court to issue a notice of its own motion and without the assistance of the applicant. The law requires that the application to deposit should be made within 30 days of the sale, but it does not impose any period of limitation for the issue of notice and so it has been held in Ganesh Bab Naik v. Vithal Vaman Mahalya (1). It is not clear whether the learned Additional District Judge was of opinion that the period of limitation for the issue of notice was 30 days or whether he was of opinion that there must be an express prayer to make the auction-purchaser a party to the proceedings within that period. In either event, his view of the law is wrong. The learned Additional District Judge, however, relies on the decision of a Single Judge of this Court in Sumitra Kuer v. Damri Lall (2) which follows a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Ajiudain Ahamed v. Khoda Bux Khondkar (3). It seems to have been held in these cases that the applicant must make the auction-purchaser a party to the proceedings within one month.

If the view of the learned Judge was that notice must be issued upon the auction-purchaser within one month, then I must respectfully differ. All that the law requires is, that the deposit shall be made within one month of the sale.

With regard to the contention that the auction-purchaser must be made a party, the law does not in terms require him to do so, but assuming that it does, I have not been able to obtain from the learned

Vakil for the opposite party any precise exposition of the applicant's duty in this matter. In the present case the applicants stated in the body of their petition the name and address of the auction-purchaser and asked that the sale should be set aside after payment of Rs. 175 as compensation to the auction-purchaser. I fail to see why this was not an application to make the auction-purchaser a party. The fact is that, as soon as the notice is issued upon him, the auction-purchaser becomes a party to the proceedings and it is, therefore, unnecessary to make a special prayer for adding him as a party. There is no prescribed form of application and, in my opinion, in the present case there was a sufficient application for the service of notice upon the auction-purchaser.

The Subordinate Judge, therefore, acted without jurisdiction in setting aside the sale without fixing a date for hearing the auction-purchaser.

The learned Additional District Judge, therefore, had jurisdiction to set aside the learned Subordinate Judge's order and to remand the case for the issue of notice upon the auction-purchaser or to dispose of the matter finally himself. It appears that as all parties affected by the sale were before him he chose the latter alternative and he held that the applicants were not entitled to get the sale set aside because they had failed to serve the auction-purchaser with a notice within one month of the sale.

Now, it is true that this was a wholly erroneous view of the Law of Limitation, but, all the same, it was a decision arrived at with jurisdiction and it cannot, therefore, be revised under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The principle is now too well-settled, but we have been invited by the learned Vakil for the opposite party to refer to Fazal Rab v. Manzur Ahmad (4) because the facts of that case are somewhat similar to the facts before us. There the sale was held by the Collector on behalf of the Civil Court and the deposit was made in the Court of the Collector because the Civil Court was closed. The Civil Court of first instance set aside the sale, but the Appellate Court confirmed it and upon an aplication for revision being made to the High Court it was held that parties could not by a resort to the revisional jurisdiction secure the benefits of an appeal and that a Court of competent jurisdiction having held that the deposit had not been made within the specified time the decision could not be interfered with under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

In my opinion the order of the Additional District Judge, though erroneous, was final and it cannot be revised in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction.

It has, however, been urged that we should interfere in the exercise of our powers of superintendence, but those powers are not to be lightly exercised. The petitioners were asking for what was really an indulgence and it was their duty to see that the Statute was complied with. If they had put in the process-fee for the issue of the notice at the time of the deposit the Subordinate Judge would probably not have disposed of the case till notice had been served.

In my opinion the petitioners were guilty of negligence and we should not exercise our powers under section 107 of the Government of India Act in their favour.

The application will, therefore, be dismissed with costs, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Bucknill, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, rr. 3, 4, 5, 6, O. VI, rr. 16, 17—Amendment of plaint—Joinder of several causes of action—Alternative claim, whether necessarily prejudices trial—Procedural law, object of.

It cannot be laid down as a general principle in all cases that an alternative claim necessarily prejudices, embarrasses or delays the fair trial of a case. [p. 434, col. 1.]

The whole object of the procedural law is to prevent multiplicity of suits and a plaintiff should not be compelled to institute a second suit if he can obtain appropriate relief in the first suit without in any way embarrassing the defendant. [p. 434, col. 2.]

Owen v. Morgan, (1887) 35 Ch. D. 492; 56 L. J. Ch. 603; 56 L. T. 503; 35 W. R. 705, relied on.

Plaintiffs sued for rescission of an agreement for sale and for an order upon the defendants to refund the sum of money paid by them to the defendants towards the performance of the agreement. Subsequently, the plaintiffs applied for amendment of the plaint asking for a decree for specific performance of the agreement in the event of the Court finding it impossible to give them a decree for its rescission:

Held, that the causes of action could be conveniently tried or disposed of together if the application for amendment of the plaint was allowed and the alternative relief would not prejudice, embarras or delay the fair trial of the case. [p. 435, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—I think this application must succeed. The plaintiffs allege in their plaint that, on the 8th of August 1921 they entered into a contract with the defendants for the purchase of property, fully described in the plaint, for the sum of Rs. 1,54,000 and that they actually paid Rs. 1,32,847-7-2 to the defendants towards the performance of the contract. They go on to assert that the defendants made material misrepresentations to them as to the value of the property, and they ask for a decree for the rescission of the agreement for sale, dated the 8th August 1921, and for an order upon the defendants to refund the sum of money paid by them to the defendants with interest thereon at 12 per cent. per annum. The plaint was filed on the 6th February 1922 on the allegation that the cause of action arose on the 12th August 1921 when the plaintiffs became aware of all the facts entitling them to the reliefs claimed.

On the 17th July 1923, the plaintiffs applied for amendment of the plaint, and it is this application which has given rise to the present proceedings. The whole object of the application was to enable the Court to give the plaintiffs a decree for specific performance of the agreement of the 8th August 1921 in the event of the Court finding it impossible to give them a decree for rescission of the contract. The learned Subordinate Judge, relying upon certain passages to be found in Fry on Specific Performance and Banerji on Specific Relief Act, has refused the application. He also thought that the plaint, even if amended in the manner suggested by the plaintiffs, would not entitle the plaintiffs to a decree for specific performance.

It may be conceded that the opinion of the distinguished author of Fry on Specific Performance entirely supports the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge; and, but for the contrary opinion expressed in some of the cases of high authority to which I shall presently refer, it would be impossible for me to differ from the learned Subordinate Judge. The passage to which the learned Subordinate Judge refers is as follows: "But, for the reason already stated, a suit to set aside a transaction for fraud, or, in the alternative, for specific performance of a compromise, could not be sustained in the Court of Chancery." If the passage stopped here, it would not assist the defendants to any great extent, for the Court of Chancery in the passage means the Court which existed prior to the Judicature Act. Under the practice which prevailed in the Court of Chancery before the Judicature Act a bill was demurrable on the ground that inconsistent and alternative reliefs were claimed, Rawlings v. Lambert (1), Cawley v. Poole (2); but, as is well-known, the Judicature Acts and Orders swept away the old forms and practice of pleading, leaving it open to a plaintiff to claim inconsistent and alternative reliefs, but at the same time giving a power to the Court to order to be struck out or amended any matter in the pleadings which may be scandalous, or which may tend to prejudice, embarass, or delay the fair trial of the action. That the Judicature Acts and the Orders have profoundly affected the practice in this respect is undoubted; and the only question under the present practice is, whether the inconsistent and alternative reliefs claimed do not prejudice, embarass or delay the fair trial of the action. That this is the true position is not denied by the learned author; but, in his view, "notwithstanding the provisions of the Rules of the Supreme Court as to alternative claims for relief, it seems probable that the same conclusion would still be arrived at, on the ground that the claims were inconsistent and embarrassing."

In my opinion, it is a question of fact in each case whether the alternative relief claimed prejudices, embarrasses, or delays the fair trial of the case and that it cannot be laid down as a general principle applicable to all cases that an alternative claim necessarily prejudices, embarrasses, or delays the fair trial of the case. The case of Bagot v. Easton (3), I think, materially affects the value of the opinion of the learned author of Fry on Specific Performance. The plaintiff, in that case, claimed to have an agreement for a partnership with the defendant in a land speculation cancelled on the ground that he had been induced to enter into it by the misrepresentation of the defendant, and in ignorance of its real effect; or, in the alternative, that the partnership created by the agreement be dissolved and the accounts taken, and the defendant restrained from interfering with the management of the works in violation o the agreement. The defendant moved for an order for the plaintiff to amend his statement of claim by confining it to one of the alternative claims. The Court of Appeal came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to claim alternative relief. In my opinion, the case of Bagot v. Easton (3) is directly in point. It was contended by Mr. Sultan Ahmed that a claim for dissolution of partnership is really a claim to put an end to the partnership and is in no way analogous to the alternative relief which the plaintiffs propose to claim in this suit, which is that the contract should be specifically enforced. I am unable to agree with this contention. A claim for dissolution of partnership is, in my opinion, a claim to enforce the rights of one of the partners under the partnership and constitutes an offer by the plaintiff to pay what may be due from him on the taking of partnership accounts. If it be open to a plaintiff to claim a rescission of an agreement for partnership on the ground of fraud, and, in the alternative, for dissolution of partnership and for partnership accounts, it is, in my opinion, equally open to a plaintiff to claim a rescission of an agreement for purchase of a property and in the alternative for specific performance of the agreement. The whole object of the procedural law, both in Engalnd and India, is to prevent multiplicity of proceedings, and I can see no justification whatever for compelling the plaintiffs to institute a second suit, if he can obtain the appropriate relief in the first suit without in any way embarrassing the defendant. This position is also supported by the case of Owen v. Morgan (4).

I have dealt with the position in England because great reliance was placed upon the passage from the well known work to which I have referred. But it is not difficult to show that the position in India is exactly the same as in England. O. II, r. 3 gives liberty to the plaintiff, "save as otherwise provided," to "unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant, or the same defendants jointly." Rules 4 and 5 restrict the power of the plaintiff as to joinder of causes of action in certain specified cases, and they

(2) (1863) 1 H. & M. 50; 71 E. R. 23; 136 R. R. 27.
(3) (1878) 7 Ch. D. 1; 47 L. J. Ch. 225; 37 L. T. 869; 26 W. R. 66.

do not in any way touch the present question. Rule 6 gives power to the Court to order separate trials if, in the opinion of the Court, the causes of action joined in one suit cannot be conveniently tried. Order VI, r. 16 gives power to the Court at any stage of the proceedings to order "to be struck out or amended any matter in the pleading which may be unnecessary or scandalous, or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass, or delay the fair trial of the suit." The result of all these different provisions in the Code is to allow the plaintiff to unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant or the same defendants jointly, subject to the provisions of O. II, rr. 4 and 5, and subject to the supervision given to the Court in O. II, r. 6 and O. VI, r. 16. In my opinion, the causes of action may be conveniently tried or disposed of together, if we allow the application for amendment of the plaint, and the alternative relief now claimed will not prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the case.

The other point is wholly without substance. If the amendment be allowed, there would be sufficient allegations to enable the plaintiffs to claim a decree for specific performance. They allege, that it was agreed that the conveyance would be executed within seven days from the date of agreement, and that the defendants failed to carry out the agreement. They give the date of the cause of action on the footing that the suit is a suit for specific performance of the contract, and they aver their readiness and willingness to pay into Court the balance of the consideration money.

I would allow the application, set aside the order of the Court below, and direct that the plaint be amended in terms of the plaintiff's application of the 17th July 1923. Costs both of the Court below and of this Court will be costs in the suit. Hearing fee in this Court, five gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.

Richardson, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Buckland in a suit brought for the construction of the Will of Sreeman Chandra Mukherji who died in the year 1878.

The plaintiff, as the learned Judge states, is one of the heirs of the testator and the defendants Nos. 2 to 12 are also heirs. The first defendant, Lakhi Narain Ganguly is a great nephew of the testator. He was not alive at the death of the testator, as he was born in the year 1886, and he is interested in this Will as having been appointed by the Will of Bama Sundari Devi, the widow of the testator, who died in 1918—the shebait of the property to which the former Will referred and the dedication and management of which are in question.

By the first clause of his Will the testator gave his interest in a taluq called Dehee Ulasee to his only daughter and her husband.

The second clause calls for no mention.

By the third clause the testator made provisions for the performance of his sradh and for the monthly expenses of his widow. 'By that clause he also provided annuities for certain persons and directed his widow to perform his annual sradh, and also to 'perform prilgrimages to Ishur Gyadham and other shrines and other religious ceremonies." The money necessary for these purposes was to come out of a Taluq Fatabad. The clause ends with these words:—" After deducting all these expenses whatever surplus shall remain from the profits of the said taluq to my share shall be devoted to the under-mentioned Debseva and Atithseva (entertainment of strangers)."

The fourth clause calls for no comment.

The fifth clause is in these terms: "I do hereby dedicate to the Ishur Debseva the whole of my immoveable property and all the residue of the profits save and except the said share in Dehee Ulasee and the aforesaid profits of the said Taluq Fatiabad, My hereinafter-named executrix shall for my salvation consecrate a Shivaloy and a Shiva and shall perform seva, etc., of the said Shiva from the profits of the whole of my property, that is to say, she will out of the profits of all the said immoveable properties cause to be performed the daily and periodical seva of the said Shiva, the feeding of Brahmins and entertainment of strangers, My hereinafter-named executrix will be able, if she shall so desire, to consecrate a Shivaloy and Shiva out of my estate for her own salvation. It is my heartfelt desire that the said Debseva, the feeding of Brahmins and the entertainment of strangers shall be performed daily out of profits of my said immoveable properties."

In the sixth clause the testator referred to certain provisions which he had already made for his widow during his lifetime.

The seventh clause is important. It runs: "I do hereby appoint my wife, Srimati Bama Sundari Debi, my executrix and the shebait, she will perform all the acts according to my aforesaid instructions and the person whom she shall appoint to the duties of executrix and shebait shall be vested with the power to perform all the said acts after her death."

The first point raised before the learned Judge turned upon the meaning of the word "surplus" in the concluding sentence of the third clause which I have quoted, The question, as stated by the learned Judge, was, what was to be done with the amounts of the annuities formerly payable under the Will to persons who are now dead. The learned Judge said: "In my opinion the amounts of such annuities will fall into the surplus and should be devoted to the sevas to be performed under the fifth paragraph of the Will."

In my opinion, that is the natural meaning of the language used and I see no reason to differ from the learned Judge.

Then, as to the fifth paragraph of the Will, it seems to have been suggested that a dedication of property "to the Ishur Debseva" was not a sufficient dedication to a particular Hindu deity. But, as the learned Judge indicates, the clause must be read as a whole, and if the objection may be regarded as having even a superficial plausibility, the subsequent direction to consecrate a Shivaloy and Shiva deprive it of all force. Indeed, if the point has been referred to in the argument before us, it has not been pressed and, in my opinion, the clause contains a valid dedication of property to religious uses.

A further point taken in connection with this clause may perhaps be regarded as having more substance. It is contended that, according to the true construction of the clause, the testator did not dedicate the absolute interest in the property but merely created a charge on the property for the stated purposes. It was argued that the direction to the testatrix was to consecrate a Shiva and Shivaloy and to perform the other duties imposed "out of" or "from the profits of all the said immov able properties." It was also argued that the feeding of Brahmins and the entertainment of Atithis or strangers coming to the house has no necessary relation to the worship of Shiva and that the amount required for those purposes must necessarily rest in the discretion of the testator's representative. The contention was sought to be reinforced by reference to the power given to the testatrix in the following sentence—"if she shall so desire to consecrate a Shivaloy and Shiva "out of my estate for her own salvation." Stress was laid upon the words "out of my estate" and the question was put, how could the executrix consecrate a separate Shivaloy and Shiva for her own salvation unless she had herself an interest in the property from which the necessary funds were to come.

As to these arguments, if the concluding sentence of the third clause and the fifth clause be read together and if regard be had to the express saving in the fifth clause of the share in Dehee Ulasee dealt with in the first clause and the profits in Taluq Fatiabad required for the purposes of the third clause, and if regard be also had to the express mention in the sixth clause of the provision which the testator had already made for his wife during his lifetime, then, it seems clear that the testator intended to dedicate the whole of his estate, both corpus and income, less the excepted items, to religious charity. The language used is sufficient, prima facie at any rate, to express that intention. The direction to feed Brahmins and strangers is a common form of charity in connection with Hindu endowments and affords no reason for putting other than its natural meaning on the language used by the testator. And when the testator gave his widow power to consecrate a Shivaloy and Shiva for her own salvation out of his estate, he was merely authorising her to use a sufficient portion of the trust fund for that purpose. By the words "out of my estate," he meant out of that portion of his estate which he was devoting to charity.

Before us, the decision of their Lordships in Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari (1) has been cited, and it has been suggested that the expenditure which the testator contemplated would not, by any means, exhaust the whole of the profits of an estate so large as that which the testator is said to have left. Unfortunately, this point does not appear to have been raised in the plaint or at the trial; no issue on the subject was framed and there is no evidence on the record either as to the value of the property left by the testator or as to the amount required for the charities ordained.

My conclusion, therefore, on this part of the case is in accord with that of the learned Judge and the contention, with which I have been dealing fails.

A question of some difficulty remains in regard to the seventh clause of the Will. In pursuance of that clause the testator's widow, Bama Sundari Debi, as executrix, carried out his instructions and during her lifetime acted as the first shebait of the endowment. By her Will she appointed the testator's great-nephew, the first defendant, to be her successor. As I have said, the first defendant was not in existence at the testator's death. It is accordingly contended that this appointment contravenes the well-known rule in the Tagore case, [Jotendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore (2)] and is a bad appointment. There can be no question that in a case to which that rule applies, a gift which cannot be made directly cannot be made indirectly by means of a power conferred by the testator on his executor. Authority for that proposition is to be found in the case to which reference was made on behalf of the appellant: Bai Mativahu v. Bai Mamubai (3). In that case a Hindu testator by his Will gave his daughter, in the event of her having no children, power to direct by Will to whom his immoveable property should go after her death. As the head-note states, their Lordships held upon the construction of the Will that the gift of the absolute estate was not to the daughter in the event which happened of her having no children but to such persons as she should appoint by Will. As to the power of appointment it was further held that it could be validly exercised only in favour of persons who were actually or in contemplation of law in existence at the death of the testator. In other words, their Lordships followed the rule in the Tagore case (2). But both in the Tagore case (2) and in the case of Bai Mativahu v. Bai Mamubai (3) the property in question was ordinary private property, the beneficial interest in which was to pass to the recipient. It may be conceded that the managership of such an endowment as the testator here created is 'property.' But it is property of a special kind; the manager has in theory no beneficial interest in the endowment. The question, therefore, arises whether such an appointment as that made by the widow is within the rule in the Tagore case (2).

The reasons on which the rule is based will be found at pages 64 and 65* of the report. Their Lordships said this:—"Inheritance does not depend upon the will of the individual owner; transfer does. Inheritance is a rule laid down (or in the case of custom recognised) by the State, not merely for the benefit of individuals, but for reasons of public policy. It follows directly from this that a private individual, who attempts by gift or Will to make property inheritable otherwise than the law directs, is assuming to legislate, and that the gift must fail, and the inheritance take place as the law directs. This was well expressed by Lord Justice Turner in Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (4): 'A man cannot create a new form of estate or alter the line of succession allowed by law, for the purpose of carrying out his own wishes or views of policy.'"

Their Lordships went on to illustrate this general principle and to deal with the Hindu Law of Gifts. The conclusion is stated at page 70* of the Report, where the rule is enunciated that, according to Hindu Law, "a person capable of taking under a Will must be such a person as could take a gift inter vivos, and, therefore, must either in fact or in contemplation of law; be in existence at the death of the testator." But this express reservation is added: "Their Lordships adopting and acting upon the clear general principle of Hindu Law that a donee must be in existence; desire not to express any opinion as to certain exceptional cases of provisions by way of contract or of conditional gift on marriage or other family provisions for which authority may be found in Hindu Law or usage."

It appears, therefore, that the rule in the Tagore case (2) is a general rule to which there may be exceptions. Property cannot be made inheritable otherwise than the law allows, but there may be exceptional cases in which Hindu Law sanctions a departure from the rule that the donee must be in existence.

Now, if the Hindu Law allows, the founder of a religious trust or institution—it may be within limits which it is not now necessary to determine—to lay down a general rule of succession to the managership, it seems difficult to say that the power given to the widow in the present case was badly exercised when she appointed the testator's grand-nephew to succeed her as shebait, though he was not in existence at the testator's death. The testator has not said that the office of manager is to be heritable and to descend in his family according to some new rule of succession. His direction was that the office should be held first by his widow and afterwards by such person as she might appoint. He might have said that the first and every succeeding manager should be appointed by a Civil Court. Again, as the learned Judge has observed, a trusteeship with power to appoint a successor is well-known to and recognized by Hindu Law. The testator, therefore, might have created such an office, in which case no one would have suggested that the rule in the Tagore case (2) was applicable. The testator did not go so far but he did give his widow power to appoint her successor and it seems inconsistent with the larger direction which the testator might have given, that every succeeding holder should have power to appoint a successor, to say that the widow's choice—she did not die till 1918—was limited to some person who was in existence at the testator's death in 1878. It might be far from advantageous to the testator's descendants or to the interest of the endowment that her choice should be so limited. In my opinion, the appointment made by the widow may be supported by way of exception to the rule in the Tagore case (2) or it may be said that the power given to her is outside the scope of that rule. The appointment does not appear to be inconsistent with the Hindu Law and usage.

Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (5) was much relied on for the appellant but there their Lordships were dealing with an hereditary endowment or office, descendible according to the ordinary rules of inheritance. In connection with the question of limitation, which was before them, their Lordships observed that the successive holders of the office could not be treated as having successive life-estates in the endowment because Hindu Law did not permit the creation of such estates. The observation has little or no bearing on the question with which we have to deal. We are not dealing with the nature of the estate which a shebait takes in his office but with the question whether the widow could lawfully appoint the first defendant to be her successor.

The result is that, on this part of the case also, I agree with the learned Judge, and the appeal fails. I may add that it is not necessary for us now to determine who will succeed the first defendant upon his death or in the event of his vacating the shebaitship.

As to costs, the learned Judge has made the usual order that they should be paid by the losing party, namely, the plaintiff. In view, however, of the nature of the case and the difficulty of at least one of the questions which arise upon the Will, we are of opinion that there is reasonable ground for modifying the learned Judge's decree in respect of costs. We direct that the costs both of the Trial Court and of this appeal do come out of the estate. The executor's costs should be as between attorney and client. Apart from this modification the appeal will be dismissed.

Sanderson, C. J.—I agree. I desire to add a few words as regards the contention of the appellant, which was based upon the 7th paragraph of the Will, namely, that, inasmuch as the first defendant, Lakhi Narain Ganguly, was not born at the time of the testator's death his appointment by the testator's widow was invalid. In my judgment, the two cases which were relied upon, namely Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (5) and Gopal Chunder Bose v. Kartick Chunder Bose (6), are not decisive of the present case. It was, no doubt, decided that the ruling in Jotendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore (2) is applicable to an hereditary office and endowment as well as to other immoveable property. In this case, however, in my judgment, having regard to its terms, the Will did not create an hereditary office or endowment. Consequently, in my judgment, the fact that the first defendant was not alive at the time of the death of the testator does not make the appointment of the first defendant as shebait invalid.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 25 (2), 62—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 19, 20—Contract, breach of—Settlement of damages—Suit to recover damages—Cause of action— Limitation—Extension of time.

An oral settlement between the parties to a contract providing in case of a breach of the contract, for the payment of compensation by the defaulter is not a new contract within section 62 of the Contract Act and the cause of action would accrue on the date of the breach of the contract. Such a settlement does not extend the period of limitation under section 19 or section 20 of the Limitation Act, where the cause of action had already accrued.

Neither section 25 (2) of the Contract Act nor section 92 (4) of the Evidence Act applies to the settlement as there is neither a new contract nor a modification of the original contract

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's case is that on 16th October 1917 defendant contracted to sell 200 khandis of cotton seed at Rs. 13-8-0 per khandi, the date of delivery being 27th January 1918. When delivery was demanded on that date the defendant did not deliver as the price of cotton seed had risen to double. On 1st February 1918 there was an agreement between the parties that defendant should pay at Rs. 21-8-0 per khandi, i. e., compensation at the rate of Rs. 8 per khandi. He has not paid and hence the present suit for recovery of Rs. 1,600 with interest, in all Rs. 2,000.

The defendant admitted the sauda but denied that there was any settlement. He said there was another sauda of 200 khandis dated 11th September 1917 by which plaintiff had sold to him 200 khandis of cotton seed at Rs. 12-8-0 per khandi. Plaintiff lost heavily over that sauda Defendant asked that both saudas be settled at once but nothing was done and that, as the claim of the plaintiff was time-barred, he has made the false allegations as regards the settlement. Interest was said to be penal.

Plaintiff denied the sauda of 11th September 1917, and stated that the suit was within time as it has been filed within three years from the date of settlement. It was further contended that the settlement can be orally proved and that he could claim interest.

The case went to trial on the following issues :—

"1. Was there any settlement as pleaded by the plaintiff?

"2. Is oral evidence to prove such settlement inadmissible?

"3. Is the claim time-barred?

"4. Is the plaintiff entitled to claim interest? If so, at what rate?

"5. Is the interest claimed penal?

"6. To what relief is the plaintiff entitled?"

The Trial Court held the settlement was proved, a entry of the settlement being made in the plaintiff's account books on 1st February 1918. It was also found that the sauda pleaded by the defendant had been entered into and had been settled at Rs. 162-8-0 and a further sauda of 50 khandis in which defendant lost was also found to have been entered into and this had been settled by the defendant's sauda of 11th September 1917. Oral evidence was held to be admissible to prove the settlement. The suit was found to be within time. Defendant was found to be liable to pay interest at 1 per cent. per mensem by way of damages and the full claim was decreed.

On appeal the District Judge, Akola, finds that the plaintiff's right of action accrued on 27th January 1918, the date on which the defendant broke the contract by not delivering the cotton seed agreed to be sold and that the period of limitation could not be extended by any subsequent settlement alleged by the plaintiff. The alleged oral settlement does not fall within sections 19 and 20 of the Limitation Act. The appeal was decided on this point alone and the claim was held to be barred by limitation on the ground that the suit was instituted more than three years after the breach took place.

It is here argued that the settlement could be proved and further that there has been a novation of contract. I am referred to section 62 of the Contract Act. That section runs:—

"If the parties to a contract agree to substitute a new contract for it, or to rescined or alter it, the original contract need not be performed."

But I do not think that the settlement comes within this section. The contract subsisted and had failed and the cause of action would be the failure of the contract. The settlement that a certain amount of money was payable for the failure is not a new contract in my opinion.

Section 25 (2) of the same Act is also relied upon. But I do not think that this again can apply, nor does section 92 (4) of the Evidence Act apply for the contract itself is not modified. Ranglal v. Chunilal (1) is depended on and it is argued that the settlement was an adjustment of the dispute. It seems to me that the case is that there was a sauda and a date fixed for delivery. Defendant failed to deliver. Thereafter, he said he would pay damages at Rs. 8 per khandi. The mere fact that at a later date he said he would pay the damages cannot extend the time where the cause of action already accrued. Take the case of a bond payable on a particular date and suppose that the defendant said he would pay after that date; unless that promise was in writing it would not save limitation and in the present case the settlement does not amount to a promise giving a fresh cause of action. The cause of action was on the contract of delivery. There is no novation of contract and I think the view taken by the lower Appellate Court is correct assuming there was a settlement which question has not been decided by that Court. The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellant will pay the respondent's costs.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of insolvency proceedings. The following facts will disclose the nature of the question which is to be decided in this appeal:—On the 17th of January 1917 Murlidhar, one of the creditors of Umrao Singh, applied under the Provincial Insolvency Act to have him adjudicated an insolvent. Accordingly, Umrao Singh was adjudicated an insolvent by an order dated the 28th of May 1917. On the 3rd of January 1917, i.e., within three months of the application for adjudication, Umrao Singh had created an equitable charge on his house property in Delhi in favour of his creditors, Ludhiana

Mills Co., represented by Dr. Chandar Bhan, for the sum of Rs. 35,684. The wife of Thakur Puran Chand held a hundi executed by Umrao Singh on the 28th of December 1915 for Rs. 5,500. At the foot of this hundi a note is added in the following words:—

"Hamari Delhi wa Ludhiana ki jaitad is qarze ki zimmewar hogi."

The house at Delhi was sold by the Official Receiver for Rs. 14,500. The Company put in a claim under the lien created by the equitable mortgage of the 3rd of January 1917 which was registered by the Receiver. Thakur Puran Chand then put in an application on the 25th of July 1917 on behalf of his wife claiming a prior charge and objecting to the charge created in favour of the Ludhiana Mills Company on the grounds, namely, (1) that no charge as a matter of fact had been created, and (2) that if a charge was created it was void with reference to the provisions of section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act III of 1907. Mr. Jwala Sahai, District Judge, by on order dated the 14th of March 1921, overruled the objection of Thakur Puran Chand and held that the sale of the house must be taken to be subject to the lien in favour of the Ludhiana Mills Company. The claim of Thakur Puran Chand for a prior right was disallowed.

Two appeals have accordingly been preferred by Thakur Puran Chand. Civil Appeal No. 1413 of 1921 relates to the order recognising the equitable mortgage in favour of the Ludhiana Mills Company, and Civil Appeal No. 1788 of 1922 relates to the disallowance of Thakur Puran Chand's claim to a prior charge. Argument has been addressed in respect of both the appeals in Civil Appeal No. 1413 of 1921.

It has been contended by Mr. Har Gopal on behalf of Thakur Puran Chand that the evidence of Dr. Chandar Bhan, Lahori Mal and Simru Ram on the basis of which the learned District Judge has decided that an equitable mortgage was created in favour of the Ludhiana Mills Company by the deposit of title-deeds relating to the house in Delhi is not reliable and must be rejected. The only ground urged for this contention is that these witnesses are partisans of the Ludhiana Mills Company and their evidence is interested. The title-deeds were produced before the District Judge and this fact supports the evidence given by the witnesses and I see no reason for holding that they have not told the truth. An alternative contention was put forward that the evidence of Chandar Bhan went to show that the title-deeds were handed over not with the object of creating an equitable mortgage for the property but with a view to a contemplated sale in respect of the property. The evidence of the witness has been read out and I am not prepared to hold that it bears the construction put upon it by the learned Vakil.

The second contention put forward by the learned Vakil on the basis of section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907, was that the mortgage should be held to be fraudulent and void. Section 37 of the Act provides that, "Every transfer of property or of any interest therein, every payment made, every obligation incurred, and every judicial proceeding taken or suffered by any person unable to pay his debts as they become due from his own money in favour of any creditor, with a view of giving that creditor a preference over the other creditors, shall, if such person is adjudged insolvent on a petition presented within three months after the date thereof be deemed fraudulent and void as against the Receiver and shall be annulled by the Court." The question, therefore, which I have to decide is whether the equitable mortgage was created with a view of giving the Ludhiana Mills Company a preference over the other creditors of Umrao Singh. The facts proved by the evidence in the case are that Umaro Singh being threatened and pressed by Dr. Chandar Bhan escaped from Ludhiana but he was followed and was threatened with proceedings in Court and in order to escape from the threatened proceedings in Court he deposited the title-deeds with Dr, Chandar Bhan which had been produced by this witness in the Court below.

Umrao Singh, under pressure from the Punjab National Bank, had created an equitable charge in favour of the Bank over his Ludhiana house. According to the witness Chandar Bhan he had done this stealthily and had not disclosed the secret to him. Having come to know of this fact he began to press Umrao Singh for the payment of the debt to the Ludhiana

Mills Company. This is what he states in his evidence:—

"We were constantly pressing Umrao Singh for settlement. On 2nd January 1917 he escaped quietly. I heard he was at Gobindgarh and I went there. I had other men with me. We searched him out. He said he was helpless. Again we threatened him with litigation. He offered the mortgage of the Delhi house. He handed over title-deeds to us and mortgaged the house to the Mills for the money due from him."

Umrao Singh, in order to save himself from exposure and from proceedings in Court and in order to appease the Ludhiana Mills Company, made this equitable mortage in favour of the Company. Can it be said under these circumstances that the mortgage was created with a view of giving preference to the Company over the other creditors? I think not. In a similar case in respect of an equitable charge created in favour of the Punjab National Bank a similar question arose and Mr. Justice Wilberforce held, "that the dominant motive of the debtor in making the transfer was to save himself from exposure or from a criminal prosecution, and, in such a case, as the law regards only the motive of the debtor, it cannot be held that the transfer was voluntary or amounted to a fraudulent preference," vide. Puran Chand v. Punjab National Bank, Limited (1). This decision of the learned Judge is based on the rule laid down in Ex parte Taylor, In re Goldsmid (2). I cannot do better in this case than to follow the decision of Mr. Justice Wilberforce as the facts of the case decided by him were almost similar to the facts of the present case. I accordingly hold that the equitable mortgage in favour of the Ludhiana Mills Company was not fraudulent and is not void.

The next question which I have to decide is whether a charge was created in favour of the wife of Thakur Puran Chand by the note appended to the hundi to which I have already referred, I am clearly of opinion that the words quoted do not create a charge but even if they do the document filed to prove this, being unregistered, is inadmissible in evidence under section 49 of the Registration Act to establish the charge claimed by Thakur Puran Chand. It follows that Thakur Puran Chand cannot claim a preference over the debt of the Ludhiana Mills Company. This appeal therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Commissions—Commissioner, duty of—Fees, recovery of, mode of—Mortgage-bond obtained in lieu of fees, whether enforceable.

It is entirely contrary to the duty of a Commissioner to approach an individual party and get him to pay sums of money in discharge of an untaxed bill of costs upon the footing that, unless this is done, the report will not be filed. A Commissioner's duty is to keep all parties at arm's length, to receive no favour from any one, to look to one no more than to another. [p. 445, col. 1.]

The work done by a Commissioner is not work done for any of the parties; it is work done for the Court. If the Commissioner wants the payment of his fees he must look to the Authority that appointed him and whose duty it is to put proper pressure on the right party and to provide for an adequate remuneration for the Commissioner in a reasonable and proper way. For the Commissioner himself to put any sort of pressure on one party so as to make the immediate payment of an untaxed bill a condition without which the Commissioner's duty would not be done or would be done at another time is not merely ill-advised conduct; it is improper and illegal conduct. [p. 445, col. 1.]

A mortgage-bond obtained by a Commissioner from one of the parties in lieu of payment of an untaxed bill of costs is an improper advantage obtained by an Officer of Court by abuse of his position as such Officer and is not enforceable. [p. 445, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Rankin, J.—This is a second appeal brought by the plaintiff who acted as a Commissioner in a partition suit which was referred to arbitration under the Second Schedule of the Code. It appears that an arbitrator having been appointed certain petitions were made to the arbitrator including one by the plaintiff in the suit asking that, in respect of a certain property, there should be a local enquiry. On the 8th March 1915 the Court having appointed the arbitrator to determine all the matters in difference between the parties in the suit empowered him to dispose of all the petitions filed before him including the plaintiff's petition for the appointment of a Pleader Commissioner. The order gave the arbitrator power to appoint "whomsoever he likes" and directed the plaintiff to deposit Rs. 100 at present as Commissioner's fees etc., within seven days. The plaintiff deposited Rs. 100 in terms of that order and the plaintiff in the present suit was appointed Commissioner under that order. His actual appointment was made by the arbitrator under the power given to him by that order of the Court. The present defendant who was then plaintiff was applied to from time to time by the Commissioner to put in certain additional sums as further fees and in the end the Commissioner got ready his report and approached the plaintiff in the suit on the footing that, unless a couple of hundred rupees more were paid, he could not be expected to file his report. Thereupon a mortgage-bond was given to the Commissioner by the then plaintiff promising to pay Rs. 200. On that bond the Commissioner has now sued.

The first Court has decreed the suit and the lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit on the ground that the mortgage-bond taken by the Commissioner in that way is taken contrary to law and cannot be sued upon. I shall, for the present purpose, put on one side altogether any question except this, whether the taking of that mortgage-bond by the Commissioner was such a breach of his duty towards the parties, to the arbitrator and to the Court that it cannot be sued upon as being an illegal contract. In my opinion that proposition ought to be affirmed, and, nonetheless so, that it is good law that when one party at the instance of another has done work or come under an obligation, there may be an implied contract by the party at whose instance the work has been done to indemnify the other. The Commissioner, if sufficient fees were not forthcoming, was quite entitled to go to the arbitrator and to object to do the work without remuneration. It was quite proper for the arbitrator, if he though fit, to require the plaintiff to pay further sums of money into the arbitrator's hands. It was quite open to the arbitrator to enquire as to the amount due, to fix the terms of the Commissioner's remuneration and to deal with the matter as justice should require. It appears that no actual rate was fixed by contract with anybody. It is said that the rate usually allowed under the Rules of the High Court was taken as a guide in assessing what was due to the Commissioner. But the plaintiff was not in so good a position as the arbitrator to dictate the Commissioner any terms, to tax his bills, to query entries in the diary or to see that he did his duty properly. It is quite true that, in all probability, the arbitrator would feel obliged to make the plaintiff and no other party deposit the amount necessary to meet the Commissioner's claim. What happened was that, at a time when the Commissioner was assisting the arbitrator to discharge judicial duties as between one party to a partition suit and another, he was approaching the plaintiff from time to time and getting sums of money on account, and finally as a condition of rendering his report, he took from the plaintiff this mortgage-bond for a fixed sum of money, viz., Rs. 200 which the plaintiff promised to pay. In my judgment, this is entirely contrary to the duty of a Commissioner whether he be regarded as appointed by an arbitrator or whether he be regarded as appointed by the Court, the arbitrator having power to nominate the individual. It is quite incredible that the duties of a Commissioner should be thought consistent with approaching an individual party and getting him to pay sums of money in discharge of an untaxed bill of costs upon the footing that, unless this is done, the report will not be filed. In my judgment, there is no doubt about the principle. The Commissioner's duty was to keep all parties at arm's length, to receive no favour from any one, to look to one no more than to another. If he wanted his money he had the arbitrator as the person whose duty it was to put proper pressure on the right party and to provide for an adequate remuneration in a reasonable and proper way. For the Commissioner himself to put any sort of pressure upon one party so as to make the immediate payment of an untaxed bill a condition without which the Commissioner's duty would not be done, or would be done at another time is not merely ill-advised conduct, it is improper and illegal conduct. No such bargain so procured can stand. It is an improper advantage obtained by an officer of Court by abuse of his position as such officer. The case of Gopalaratnamayyar v. Bupala Narasimma Nayudu (1) is a case with reference to a suit for fees by a Commissioner after the litigation in question has come to an end. That is another matter altogether. It is not the case that the Commissioner is the servant of the party at whose instance the Court or the arbitrator makes the appointment. The work done is not work done for that party. It is work done for the Court and the right to sue a party at whose instance the Court appoints a Commissioner is not the right to sue a party for whom the plaintiff has worked. It must be based upon a different principle of law, namely, that where one party does work, or incurs an obligation at the instance of another there is, in certain circumstances, an implied provision of indemnity. It seems to me necessary that there should be no doubt cast on the broad rule that a Commissioner appointed by a Court must keep himself clear of any ambiguous conduct towards any party in the matter of his fees. I think the conclusions at which the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived are correct and that his decision should be upheld.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

KRISHNA IYER—RESPONDENT—APPELLANT

THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER OF TRICHINOPOLY—PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Procedure—Insolvency—Evidence recorded by Official Receiver—Consent of parties.

Where a matter has to be decided on trial by a Court, the Court should hold the trial itself and retain advantage of seeing the witnesses give evidence following the course of proceedings. It is undesirable that it should delegate its duty to a person whose interest and duty may conflict in the conduct of the proceedings. [p. 446, col. 1.]

In proceedings arising out of an application made by an Official Receiver for the setting aside of an alienation by the insolvent the parties agreed that the statements of the witnesses should be recorded by the Official Receiver and they were so recorded:

Held, that the procedure adopted was extremely undesirable but was validated by the consent of the parties. [p. 446, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Trichinopoly, dated the 5th December 1921, in C. M. P. No. 17 of 192 , in I. P. No. 10 of 1919, (I. P. No. 50 of 1919, on the file of the Official Receiver of Trichinopoly).

Messrs. K. Krishna Menon and N. R. Lakshmana Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachary, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The fist objection taken to the lower Court's order is that it was passed after an irregular trial, in that the witnesses did not depose before it. The facts are that the proceedings began with a report from the Official Receiver in which he applied for the setting aside of an alienation, Exhibit A, by the insolvent. The parties then, it is on the record and it is not disputed, agreed that in the enquiry into this application, the statements of the witnesses should be recorded by the Official Receiver. The objection here is that statements of the witnesses so recorded were not evidence and that the ower Court was not entitled to pass a judicial decision on them. We desire to express the strongest disapproval of the lower Court's procedure. It is clearly undesirable that, where a matter has to be decided on trial the Court should not hold the trial itself and retain the advantage of seeing the witnesses give evidence following the course of the proceedings; and it is further undesirable that it should delegate its duty to a person, such as the Official Receiver in the present case, whose interest and duty may conflict in the conduct of the proceedings. But, at the same time, we must hold that Jainab Bibi Saheba v. Hyderally Saheb (1) applies and that the consent of the parties was sufficient to validate the procedure employed. We can, therefore, only express the hope that the lower Court will not take a similar course in future proceedings of this nature.

This objection failing, we turn to the merits. The lower Court dealt with them in very general language; but we think that its decision is right. Exhibit A was executed within five months of the insolvent's petition. It is a usufructuary mortgage; but possession of the property has not passed, the insolvent's family continuing to occupy it under a rent deed, Exhibit G. The alienee, here appellant, admits that he has never received any rent. In fact, the amount of rent secured by Exhibit G is identical with the total income of the insolvent's family, that which they receive for looking after the timber business said to have been started by the alienee on the premises. The alienee does not know how much the Municipal tax of the house is; and he has even never entered the portion of the building occupied by the insolvents; and, although he says that his accounts are being kept in the upstair of the premises, he could not say whether they were actually there at the time of the enquiry. The insolvents had no property except the house dealt with in Exhibit A.

The consideration for Exhibit A is evidenced mainly by accounts, and, although the accounts may have been kept in the course of business, there is no security of any value for their having been. In fact, one material entry of Rs. 910 is, in our opinion, open to distinct suspicion. It is said that a large portion of the consideration for Exhibit A, Rs. 2,000, alleged to have been paid to Palaniappa Chetty must be regarded as genuine, because Palaniappa Chetty was undoubtedly a creditor for that amount under Exhibit K and, if he had not actually been paid, he would have proved in the insolvency. There is no doubt that Palaniappa Chetty was a creditor; and there is some reason for holding that he has been paid in accordance with the endorsement on Exhibit A. But it does not follow that he was paid with the money raised by means of Exhibit A. Palaniappa Chetty is not examined. The endorsement referring to the payment is paid by one Gnanikkam Pillai on behalf of the alienee; but Gnanikkam Pillai is not examined. In these circumstances, we do not think that the payment under Exhibit K is on any better footing than the others enumerated in Exhibit A.

It is said further that the alienee is a timber merchant of Palghat and that he is not shown to have had any previous connection with the insolvent. He, however, was, as the accounts show, legally indebted to one Appavu Pillai, father of Gnanikkam, already referred to, and connected in business with the insolvents. There is, therefore, nothing in the alienee's favour on this part of the case and there is, in any event, the absence of evidence that the alienee made any reasonable inquiry as to the insolvent's position.

We confirm the lower Court's decision and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Babu Upendra Kumar Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of khas possession on declaration of the raiyati right of the plaintiff after evicting the defendants who are under-raiyats under the plaintiff and who hold under a kabuliyat, the term of which has expired. This is how the plaintiff frames his suit. It was dismissed by the Munsif who held that the defendants were under-raiyats but that no notice had been served under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act on them and, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for ejectment. On appeal by the plaintiffs the learned Subordinate Judge holds that the defendants are not in possession of the land as tenants but as labourers. This view, I think, it was not open to the Subordinate Judge to take because the plaintiff comes to Court on the allegation that the defendants are under-raiyats. The facts, shortly stated, are these:—The plaintiff was a co-sharer landlord with regard to a certain occupancy holding which has been found to be non-transferable. He purchased the occupancy holding and then let it out to the defendants under a kabuliyat dated 2nd Pous 1317 B.S. for a term of one year only which expired in Pous 1318 B. S. With regard to the meaning of this kabuliyat, there is some dispute which I shall state later on. The defendants continued in possession, after the expiry of the term of that kabuliyat and the present suit was brought in May 1919 which correspond, with sometime in Jaith 1326 B. S. The question is, what is the status of the defendants. The learned Subordinate Judge, as I have said, holds that, under the kabuliyat, the defendants are mere labourers. Whatever may, be the true construction of the document the defendants did not hold the land at the time of the suit under the terms of the kabuliyat. The plaintiff mentions in his plaint that the defendants have been "holding over" and that they are korfa raiyats under the plaintiff. There cannot be any question, therefore, that the defendants hold the land as tenants under the plaintiff whatever their status may be. The learned Subordinate Judge next says that the occupancy right of a raiyat prior to the purchase of the plaintiff not being transferable, section 22, sub-section (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application, and he seems to have held that the right of occupancy subsisted in the plaintiff and there could not be any merger. This, evidently is a misconstruction of the effect of section 22, sub-section (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The question of transferability or non-transferability of occupancy right is only relevant with regard to the position of the co-sharer landlords when one of them purchases the occupancy right, that is, whether the other co-sharers would be entitled to joint possession with the purchaser or would be entitled only to receive rent from the purchaser according to their shares in the property. In this case, that question does not arise, because the other co-sharers did not ask for joint possession and they have accepted the position that the plaintiff is entitled to possession by payment of their share of the rent to them. The question then is, what is the position of the plaintiff with regard to this land? The learned Vakil for the respondent does not contend that the occupancy right purchased by the plaintiff subsists as has been observed by the Subordinate Judge; but he contends that the plaintiff would be a non-occupancy raiyat with regard to the land. That position cannot be supported and it would lead to anomalies. Why should the plaintiff be considered to be only a non-occupancy raiyat? If the plaintiff is a settled raiyat of the village and if the contention of the plaintiff be accepted, then by the purchase he acquired a right of occupancy and he would be an occupancy raiyat under himself as well as under his co-sharers. Therefore, although section 22, sub-section (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act (before the amendment in 1907 as that applies to this case) lays down that the occupancy right will cease to exist by such purchase, a new occupancy right would accrue to the plaintiff. Then, supposing that he would be a non-occupancy raiyat, would he be an occupancy raiyat by twelve years' possession of the land? It seems to me that it cannot be so. This question was discussed in one of the many cases which have clustered round section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the case of Ram Lal Sukul v. Bhela Gazi (1) it was observed that a purchaser in the position of the plaintiff could not acquire a new occupancy-right under himself and his co-sharers. Mr. Justice Woodroffe, in delivering the judgment of the Court, says:—"To hold this" that is, that the purchaser acquires a new occupancy right "would, I think, defeat the policy of the section and further the owner of the holding could not acquire a right adversely to himself in his other character as co-proprietor." It seems to me, therefore, that the plaintiff was not a raiyat with regard to the land after his purchase of the occupancy right but was holding it in his right as a co-proprietor. The next question is what the position of the person to whom he lets out the land would be? He would, in my judgment, be a raiyat or a tenure-holder as has now been made clear by the provisions of section 22, sub-section (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, after the amendment in 1907, which says "if such transferee sub-lets the land to a third person, such third person shall be deemed to be a tenure-holder or a raiyat, as the case may be, in respect of the land." The defendants, therefore, would be raiyats and not under-raiyats as is contended for by the learned Vakil for the respondent If that is so, they are not liable to be ejected by service of notice under section 49 of the Tenancy Act. The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Delhi, dated the 31st December 1917.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Manohar Lal and Lalas Jagan Nath, Sardha Ram and Mehr Chand Mahajan, or the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following three pedigree-tables are necessary for the understanding of the matter in controversy in this appeal:—

Umrao Singh (pedigree No. 1) was the owner of considerable property which was held by his widow, Musammat Ram Devi, until her death in December 1903. Three sets of claimants to the succession then appeared, (1) the descendants of Umrao Singh's sister Musammat Uttam Devi, (2)

Ram Saran Das and Kaka Mal who alleged that Saudagar Mal's great grandfather and Telu Mal's great-great-grandfather had been brothers, and (3) Debi Parshad and his sons who also claimed to be descended from a brother of Saudagar Mal's great-great-grandfather. On the 19th January 1904 these rivals entered into an agreement which was signed (1) by Basheshar Nath for himself and as the guardian of his three sons and by Shankar Nath for himself and as guardian of Bhola Nath; (2) by Ram Saran Das and Kaka Mal; (3) by Debi Parshad for himself and as guardian of Sri Ram, and by Kashi Parshad and Joti Parshad. The parties agreed that each set of claimants should be owner of one-third of Umrao Singh's property; that a Succession Certificate or Letters of Administration should be taken out jointly or by one of the three parties, and that all should combine to resist any other claimant.

Four years of litigation about Letters of Administration ensued, and Letters of Administration eventually were granted to Basheshar Nath alone on the 11th January 1908, the order being upheld by the Chief Court on 12th February 1909.

On the 8th March 1909, Debi Parshad and his sons sued for possession of one-third of the property by partition on the basis of the agreement of 19th January 1904. Among the defendants named in the plaint were Basheshar Nath and his sons Suraj Bhan, Arjan and Phulli who were described as minors under the guardianship of their father Basheshar Nath. The body of the plaint contained no mention of the minority of the sons of Basheshar Nath nor was it prayed that Basheshar Nath should be appointed their guardian ad litem. There was no separate application for such appointment and no order of appointment was passed by the Court. No notice under O. XXXII, r. 3 (4) was issued to the minors. They were never served personally with summons in the suit.

Basheshar Nath was served with a summons on 1st May 1909 in which he was designated guardian for his minor sons On the 4th May 1909 he gave a power-of-attorney to B. Wazir Singh, Pleader, to defend the suit and described himself as guardian of his minor sons.

B. Wazir Singh appeared in Court on 13th May 1909, as Pleader for defendants Nos. 3 to 8, i.e., Basheshar Nath and his sons, Shankar Nath and Bhola Nath. He had previously filed written pleas on behalf of Shankar Nath and Bhola Nath. On the 14th May 1909, he is recorded as stating certain verbal pleas on behalf of "the defendants." Preliminary issues were struck on that day and were decided on 19th July 1909. On 7th October 1909, Suraj Bhan and Arjan were declared to be of age and on 13th October, all the defendants Nos. 3 to 8 were declared to have been served with notice. Issues were struck as follows on 18th October 1909:—

(1) Was the execution of the mutual settlement, dated 19th January 1904, obtained by false representations alleged?

2. Is the deed of settlement (i.e., the agreement of 19th January 1904) otherwise invalid for reasons stated in the pleas or not?

3. Did defendants Nos. 3 to 8 subsequently ratify by their conduct the settlement?

4. Is the suit within time?

5. Are the defendants barred from raising the plea of invalidity of the agreement because they have failed to get it set aside within time?

On that day Mr. Kirkpatrick, Advocate, appeared for defendants Nos. 3 to 8 and the suit was ordered to proceed ex parte against the other defendants. Counsel for the plaintiff demanded an explanation of the pleas of defendants Nos. 3 to 8 with reference to issue (2) and an explanation by Mr. Kirkpatrick was recorded that the words "otherwise invalid for reasons given in the pleas," included, "except matters covered by issue (1) (a) without consideration, (b) contrary to law, i.e., against public policy, (c) that it was never acted upon, (d) that the plaintiffs themselves acted contrary to it."

On the next day of hearing, 4th January 1910, B. Wazir Singh appeared for defendants Nos. 3 to 8. Two witnesses were examined for the plaintiffs and their case was closed. The case for the defendants was also closed "Except previous file for historical purposes." On the subsequent date fixed for arguments both Mr. Kirkpatrick and B. Wazir Singh appeared for defendants Nos. 3 to 8 and Mr Kirkpatrick argued on their behalf. The Court delivered judgment on 21st March 1910, and acknowledged in the judgment the help given to it, "by the able arguments of Mr. Kirkpatrick, Counsel for defendants Nos. 3 to 8, and Lala Piara Lal, Counsel for plaintiffs." The plaintiffs were given a preliminary decree for possession by partition of a one-third share in the property. It was remarked in the judgment that the question of minority had not been taken in the pleas; that during the pendency of the suit defendants Nos. 4 and 5 (Suraj Bhan and Arjan) had become major and had not pleaded that the agreement was not binding on them because they were minors at the time; that no such plea had been taken on behalf of the sole remaining minor defendant (i.e., Phulli) by his father, and that the Court did not propose to discuss the point.

The defendants Nos. 3 to 8 appealed to the Chief Court and specifically pleaded in their memorandum of appeal that the Trial Court was not right in not discussing the question of the effect of minority on the compromise. The appeal was presented by two Advocates, Mr. Shadi Lal (now Sir Shadi Lal, Chief Justice of this Court) and the late Mr. Sukh Dial. It was argued by Sir Shadi Lal. The decree of the Trial Court was affirmed on 6th June 1912 by a Division Bench, which held on the point of minority that the District Judge should not have taken it up on his own motion and proceeded:—

" * * * * * in any case the contention is prima facie untenable, as the defendants-appellants, who are alleged to have been minors at the time of the agreement were members of a joint Hindu family with the other defendants who were adults, and the latter acted as de facto guardians on their behalf and for their benefit in entering into the agreement in question. The agreement must, therefore, be treated as binding upon them equally with the other members of the family."

Then followed a final decree by the Trial Court which is dated 6th January 1915 and against which appeal has again been made to this Court. We are not concerned in this judgment with that appeal but with a fresh suit instituted on 2nd May 1914 by Phulli, minor son of Basheshar Nath, through another next friend, Deoki Mal, against Devi Parshad and his sons, the successful plaintiffs in the partition suit, and all the other defendants in that suit including Basheshar Nath.

In its amended form the plaint asked for a declaration that the preliminary decree in the partition suit is null and void, and inoperative against the plaintiff and the property mentioned in the said decree for the reasons:—

(a) that Basheshar Nath was not appointed guardian ad litem of the plaintiff in the manner required by law;

(b) Basheshar Nath was not a fit and proper person to represent the plaintiff as he was a signatory of the agreement of 19th January 1904, which agreement was collusive and to the prejudice of the plaintiff;

(c) Basheshar Nath did not conduct the case properly on behalf of the plaintiff, he did not defend it on the basis of the plaintiff's minority and he did not produce any evidence to refuse the agreement for the plaintiff's benefit.

The claim was resisted by the defendants other than Phulli's own father and brothers. The Court framed a single issue as follows:—

Whether the decree, dated 21st March 1910, is not binding on the plaintiff for all or any of the following reasons:—

(a) the invalidity of the appointment of defendant No. 7 (i.e., Basehshar Nath) as his guardian ad litem;

(b) the unfitness, incompetency and negligence of defendant No. 7 as guardian ad litem.

Thereafter, the Court held that the plaintiff was of age and permitted him to continue the suit in his own person.

The oral evidence consisted of the statements of Basheshar Nath as witness for the plaintiff and of Debi Parshad as witness for the defendants.

The Court dismissed the suit and Pulli's appeal against that order is before us.

PHULLI v. BEBI PARSHAD.

The main arguments on his behalf are, firstly, that in the previous suit there was no order appointing Basheshar Nath guardian; that no notice was issued to the plaintiff under O. XXXII, r. 3 (4), and that consequently he was not in law represented properly; and, secondly, that if Basheshar Nath is to be regarded as guardian ad litem, he showed his unfitnes and incompetency by his neglect to raise the plea that he (Basheshar Nath) had not acted in the interest of the plaintiff by entering into the agreement of January 1904 and surrendering gratuitously valuable rights belonging to the plaintiff.

On the first point it is argued that the well-known Privy Council ruling Wallan v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (1) is out of date since the enactment of the 1908 Code of Civil Procedure, and that under the present law notice to the minor is essential before any person can be recognised as acting on his behalf in a suit.

In Wallan v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (1) it was held that, where a Court by its action has given its sanction to the appearance of a person as guardian to a minor in a suit, the absence of a formal order of appointment is not necessarily fatal to the proceedings, and that, in that particular case, the absence of a formal order appointing a mother as guardian ad litem she having appeared throughout the proceedings in that capacity, and the fact that no attempt was made to serve either the minors (who were members of a joint Hindu family) or their motherp ersonally with summons before serving it on the only adult male member and manager of the family constituted mere irregularities under section 578 of the then Code of Civil Procedure, there being nothing to suggest that the interests of the minors were not duly protected and the defects in procedure not having prejudiced them.

Three cases are cited by the learned Counsel for the appellant.

The first is Rajendra Prasad v. Probodh Chandra Mitra (2), and is not in point, because the question dealt with was not the effect upon a decree of the irregular appointment of a guardian ad litem. The Trial Court had appointed a certain person guardian without notice to the minor concerned and had refused to listen to subsequent objections by the minors, and the actual order of appointment was taken to the High Court on revision and was set aside.

The second is Syed Ali Sarkar v. Manikjan Bibi (3). Here two Judges disagreed on the question of the imperative necessity of notice to the minors and the appeal was decided on other grounds. The opinion of one learned Judge that notice was imperative was thus an obiter dictum.

The third is Ghanshyam Das v. Hardei (4) in which the learned Judicial Commissioner delivered himself of a dictum, which supports the present appellant on this particular point, but which also was obiter, since the minor in question was held not to have been a minor at all.

On the other hand, here are several decisions passed after the present Code came into force in which absence of formal orders of appointment and of notice to the minors were regarded as errors or irregularities not affecting the merits of the case.

In another and recent Oudh case reported as Sat Dei v. Jai Nath (5), there had been no formal order appointing the major defendant guardian ad litem of the minor defendants, members of a joint family of which the major defendant was manager. It was held, on the authority of Sheo Shankar Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (6), that the minor defendants could not escape their liability under the decree for this reason and that the major defendant as manager had sufficiently represented their interests.

In Rambrichh Ram v. Tarak Tewari (7) in a suit by a minor to avoid a decree passed against him, it was held that his interests had been properly defended by the manager of the joint family of which he was a member in spite of the facts that the manager had refused to act as his guardian, that a stranger had been appointed guardian without notice either to the minor or to the manager of the family, and that the stranger guardian had done nothing and had not even appeared. It was remarked by Mr. Justice Walsh that, where there has been an irregularity in the appointment of a guardian ad litem in suit, the moment it is shown that there has been no fraud and that the minor's interests have not been prejudiced by the irregularity the minor's right to set aside the proceedings must be denied.

This decision was approved by the Madras High Court in Enuga Sundararama Reddi v. Bezwada Pattabhiramireddi (8), and we have no doubt that the view taken of the law in these two latter cases is correct, and that the principles laid down in Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (1) are still the broad principles which should be applied. Too much may easily be made of the new provision in O. XXXII, r. 3 (4) for the issue of notice to the minor, since the minor may be an infant in arms. In the case with which we are dealing it has not been shown affirmatively that the appellant was capable of reading and understanding the notice which the Court might have sent to him in the 1909 suit. His own brothers were parties to the suit and were of age before issues were framed and it is impossible to surmise that the issue of notice would have resulted in some other relative receiving information of the suit for the first time and coming forward to protest against the appellant being represented by his father. What we have to look to is the substance of what occurred and not the shadow and to interfere with the former proceedings only if it appears that the minor's interests were neglected by the person who understook and was permitted by the Court to represent them, and who, moreover, is the plaintiff's father while the family is Hindu and presumably joint.

(8) 42 Ind. Cas. 421; (1917) M. W. N. 495 6 L. W. 272.

This brings us to the second point urged for the appellant that there was neglect on the part of Basheshar Nath. We regard the deposition of Basheshar Nath in the present case that he was negligent merely as confirmation of the Trial Court's view that the suit was collusive. The history of the proceedings in the partition suit given above makes it clear that the appellant was substantially represented by his father as guardian ad litem, that in both Courts eminent Advocates appeared for him, that the case of his family was pleaded exhaustively in the First Court by Mr. Kirkpatrick, and that in the Chief Court the special plea of minority at the time of the agreement was also raised and argued on his behalf. It is contended that this plea should have been taken in the Trial Court but the judgment of the Chief Court to the effect that the plea was without force does not support this complaint, and actually the decree which the appellant must succeed in getting set aside is the decree of the Chief Court in which the decree of 21st March 1910 specifically attacked in his plaint was merged.

The agreement that Basheshar Nath surrendered valuable rights belonging to his sons when he entered into the agreement is one which does not stand the test of examination. Actually, the sole rights in Umrao Singh's estate which the sons could claim were those conferred on them by the action of their father in making them parties to this same agreement about which the appellant complains. Anything inherited by Basheshar Nath through his maternal grandfather would be obstructed heritage, his male issue would not take any interest in it by birth, and it would be his self-acquired property (Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, pages 197 and 205). The appellant's learned Counsel objects that the Court below refused explicitly to go into the question of the appellant's status as an heir in the presence of his father, and says that the appellant might have been able to prove either that the family was governed by custom in this particular or that Basheshar Nath had amalgamated the separate acquisition with the co-parcenary property. It is true that the learned Subordinate

Judge excluded from consideration certain matters raised in the pleadings with which he might well have dealt and we do not understand what he meant by saying "All these matters may and can be urged in such further proceedings which plaintiff may be advised to take if successful in the present suit," especially when he proceeded to dismiss the suit. But what did the appellant plead upon the point. All the contesting defendants specially pleaded that the plaintiff had no right to Umrao Singh's property in the lifetime of his father. The appellant filed a replication as follows:—

"The plaintiff's father, Basheshar Nath, paid no regard to the plaintiff's rights, and he having colluded with the defendants executed the agreement against the facts and law which is not in any way binding upon the plaintiff. The plaintiff can be held entitled to get the property left by Umrao Singh in the presence of his father, especially when his father "is in collusion with the opposite party, and does not safeguard the plaintiff's rights." Not a word about custom and not a word about a voluntary throwing of self-acquired property into the common stock. The plaintiff's pleadings merely reiterated questions which had been dealt with on his behalf in the partition suit and, as we have held, adequately dealt with. In that suit, his interests were identical with those of his father and brothers and were properly protected.

We find no reasons for interfering with the order of the lower Court and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Ryves, J.—This appeal came on originally for hearing before a Single Judge of this Court. He was of opinion that, in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bilas Kunwar* v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (1) and of the decision in Pusa Mal v. *Makdum Bakhsh (2), it was advisable that this case should be heard by a Bench of two Judges. It has consequently come before us for hearing.

After full argument it seems to me that the question referred to this Divisional Bench is really irrelevant, and I think the appeal can be disposed of on a short point.

(2) 3 Ind. Cas. 566; 31 A. 514; 6 A. L. J. 584.

BISHESHAR NATH v. KUNDAN.

The facts of the case are as follows:—The plaintiff was the lessor. He, by a lease dated the 19th of July 1892, leased some premises to the father or predecessor of the defendants for a term of three years. At the expiry of the term, the lessees (or their representatives) remained on in possession until the date of suit which was brought on the 18th of June 1919. The plaintiff asserted that the rent fixed by the lease had been regularly paid by the defendants until within three years of the date of suit.

The main defence to the suit was that the defendants had been in adverse possession for more than twelve years, that they never paid rent, and that the suit was barred by limitation.

The first Court decreed the suit.

On appeal, however, the learned District Judge of Moradabad has dismissed the suit. He has found that, since the expiry of the lease, no rent whatever has been paid by the defendants. He has also found that no new tenancy was created otherwise than by the lease, and he, therefore, dismissed the suit as barred by limitation. On appeal before us it has been argued very strenuously that, having regard to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (1), it must be held that the defendants continued to be tenants of the plaintiff after the expiry of the lease until notice was served on them by the lessor under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. It seems to me that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council does not apply at all to the question of limitation and has no application to Art. 139 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, which, in my opinion, governs this case. That Article runs as follows:—"A suit by a landlord to recover possession from a tenant.....twelve years.....when the tenancy is determined." It seems to me, on the facts of this case, that the tenancy was determined on the 19th of July 1895 It has not been proved that any new tenancy was created. By holding over without paying rent, it seems to me that the defendants became what is known as tenants by sufferance. Their position in English law has been summed up in Addison's Law of Contract, 10th Edition, page 618 in the following words:—"The difference, therefore, between a tenancy-at-will and what is called a tenancy by sufferance is that in the one case the tenant holds by right and has an estate or term in the land, precarious though it may be, and the relationship of lessor and lessee subsists between the parties; in the other, the tenant holds wrongfully and against the will and permission of the lord and has no estate at all in the occupied premises. When the tenancy at sufferance has existed for twenty (now twelve) years, the landlord's right of entry is barred by Statute, and the tenant becomes the absolute and complete owner of the property." So far as the question of limitation is concerned, the law in India is not different, in my opinion, although it may not be good law to hold that a tenant holding over is in adverse possession to his landlord. In my opinion this view is supported by Chandri v. Daji Bhau (3), where the facts were similar, and which case was followed in Madan Mohan Gossain v. Kumar Rameswar Malla (4). In my opinion the suit was clearly barred under Art. 139 of the Limitation Act. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Stuart, J.—I would like to add a few words to the decision of my learned brother. It was I who referred this case to a Bench and I did so in view mainly of the position created by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (1). The law governing this case appears to have been laid down in Chandri v. Daji Bhau (3). There, as here, it appears that there was a tenancy by instrument, which had expired more than twelve years before the date of the suit. There, as here, after the expiration of the tenancy, a tenancy at sufferance had come into existence. There had been no payment of rent. The same was the case here. There had been no explicit recognition of the authority of the landlord. The same was the case here. It would be difficult to find two cases in which the facts were so similar as in the present case and in the Bombay case. It was held by Jenkins, C. J., that Art. 139 must govern the case and that the period from which the period of limitation began to run was the period from which the tenancy by instrument had expired. In the absence of any other authority, I should consider the Bombay decision conclusive in the matter, and it only remains to be seen whether there is anything in the Privy Council decision to which I have already referred which can be invoked to overrule the decision of Jenkins, C. J. Their Lordships of the Privy Council say: "A tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title, however defective it may be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord." That clearly is the law, but does it in any way affect the present case? I think it does not. The defendants cannot be permitted to deny the plaintiff's title. They have foolishly denied it but they cannot be permitted to do so. The plaintiff is undoubtedly the landholder and the defendants are tenants by sufferance, but once having recognised that the tenants are so estopped, the fact still remains that the suit has been instituted beyond the period of limitation allowed by the law. In these circumstances, I accept the view of my learned brother and would dismiss this appeal.

By the Court.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Electricity Act (IX of 1910), Sch. cl. VI, Pro. (2) (c)—Defective cut-out causing loss of energy—Electric Company, whether justified to discontinue supply.

Where the seals on the cut-outs on a consumer's premises are not in good order and condition, as a result of which there has been a leakage of energy, the Electric Company is entitled to discontinue the supply of energy to the consumer, as such a state of things must be deemed to be, "likely to affect injuriously the use of energy by the licensee or by any other person," within the meaning of clause VI (1), proviso (2) (c) of the Schedule to the Electricity Act. [p. 457, col 1.]

Lahore Electric Supply Company v. Durga Das, 45 Ind. Cas. 171; 85 P. R. 1918; 79 P. W. R. 1918; 77 P. L. R. 1918, followed.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 10th November 1919, affirming that of the Sub-Judge, Second Class, Delhi, dated the 12th March 1919.

Mr. Shamir Chand, for Mr. Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dalip Singh and Sarda Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant sued the respondent Company for damages alleged to have arisen by reason of the latter having disconnected the supply of electricity to the former's Mills. The respondents in defence contended that they were justified in the course they had adopted in view of the fact that the seals on the cut-outs on the appellant's premises were not in good order and condition, with the result that the supply of electric energy was injuriously affected.

The justification relied upon is alleged to be contained in the statutory provisions which govern the Company's contractual rights and liabilities. The particular provision relied upon is to be found in clause VI, (1) proviso (2) (c) of the Schedule to the Indian Electricity Act of 1910, which provides that the licensee (i.e., the Electric Company) shall be entitled to discontinue the supply of electricity to the consumer—"if the electric wires, fittings, works and apparatus in such property are not in good order and condition, and are consequently likely to affect injuriously the use of energy by the licensee, or by other persons."

The Court of first instance held that this clause did not apply to the facts of the present case; but further held that the appellant had not proved that he had suffered any loss from the act of disconnection and dismissed the suit on that ground. The learned District Judge agreed with this finding on the question of damages, and held, for that reason, that it was unnecessary to give a decision on the other issue, but suggested that, assuming the defective condition of the cut-out was due to it's having been tampered with by the appellant, sub-clause (1), proviso (2) (d) of clause VI might be applicable.

We find ourselves unable to agree with the views of the lower Courts as to the proper construction of the enactment.

It has been found as a fact that a part of the electric apparatus on the appellant's premises, namely, the seals of the cut-out were not in good order and condition. As a result of this defect there had been a leakage of energy whether by theft of the current or otherwise it is unnecessary to decide. Such a state of things must certainly be deemed to be "likely to affect injuriously the use of energy by the licensee or by other persons," and, accordingly, the respondents were entitled, upon discovering this condition of things, to discontinue the electric supply.

The attention of the Courts below does not appear to have been called to a decision on this very point in Lahore Electric Supply Company v. Durga Das (1). The powers of an Elecrtic Supply Company under the Indian Electricity Act, IX of 1910, were, there, very fully considered by Scott-Smith, J., and amongst other questions the effect of clause VI (1), proviso (2) (c) was a subject of decision. It was held in that case that, where a main fuse was burnt out—in other words, where the cut-out became defective—the Company was entitled to discontinue the supply of energy to the consumer. Precisely the same facts appear here the only difference being that in the reported case the cause of the defect in the cut-out was apparent whereas in the present case the cause is only to be conjectured.

As we hold—following the reasoning in the relevant passages of the judgment above referred to—that the respondent Company was fully justified in the steps they took, it is unnecessary to consider whether or not the lower Courts were justified in their finding as to the failure of the appellant to prove damage.

For the reasons we have given the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Appellant.

Mr. Narain Prasad Ashthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The point that arises in this appeal is fully covered by authority. The suit was brought by a mortgagee on the foot of a mortgage to recover the loan. It was instituted against the mortgagor who executed the mortgage and his minor son. After attempts had been made by the plaintiff to get various persons appointed guardian ad litem to the minor, the Nazir of the Court was ultimately appointed. The suit was heard, evidence was given and it was ultimately decreed in favour of the plaintiff against both the father and the son. Thereafter an appeal was presented to the District Judge by one Bhagwanji on behalf of the minor. He was not the guardian ad litem and had never applied to be made guardian. On the appeal coming before him, the learned District Judge refused to hear it on the ground that there was no valid appeal before him. He held that the Nazir having been appointed guardian ad litem his authority must be held to continue as long as the lis continued and that until he had been removed from the guardianship by the Court, he and he only was competent to file an appeal. He, therefore, dismissed the appeal. It is from this decree dismissing the appeal that this second appeal was brought, and it is urged that the authority of the Nazir ended with the decree of the First Court and that thereafter it was open to the minor defendant to appeal through his next friend. In Jwala Dei v. Pirbhu (1), a Bench of this Court decided that where a guardian ad litem has once been appointed, his appointment enures for the whole of the lis in the course of which it was made, unless and until it was revoked by the Court. In Venkata Chandrasekhara Raz v. Alakarajamba Maharani (2), the same proposition was laid down. That case was followed by a Divisional Bench of this Court in Bawan Das v. Bishnath (3). These three cases were referred to and followed by a Single Judge of this Court in In the matter of the application of Sukhdeo Rai (4). We see no reason to differ from this consistent authority. Our attention has been called to Bhagwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Das (5). In that case, however, this point did not arise and was not considered. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Punjab Courts Act (V I of 1918), s. 41 (3)—Custom—Inheritance—Finding that Muhammadan Law applies—Second appeal—Certificate, necessity of.

Where on the question of the right of inheritance the lower Appellate Court finds that the parties are governed by Muhammadan Law and not by custom, that finding cannot be challenged in second appeal without a certificate. [p. 459, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge at Campbellpur, dated the 24th October 1921, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Attock, dated the 24th February 1921.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellants.

Mr. Moti Sagar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Zedullah, a Pathan of a village in the Attock District, died in 1903 leaving 45 kanals 11 marlas of land, which was his self-acquired property. Half of the land went to his widow and half to his mother, Musammat Hawasi. The latter sold her share in 1920 for Rs. 3,500, and the present suit was brought by Zedullah's collaterals in the third degree for a declaration that the sale should not affect their reversionary rights. The defendants pleaded that the parties followed Muhammadan Law; that Musammat Hawasi's possession had been adverse; that there was a sister of Zedullah named Musammat Said Jan alive, and that even if the parties were governed by custom the plaintiffs had no right to sue.

The First Court passed a decree in the plaintiffs' favour allowing a sum of Rs. 3,050, out of Rs. 3,500 as a charge on the land.

On the defendants' appeal the District Judge has held, relying on Fatima Bibi v. Shah Nawaz (1), that the question of the right of inheritance to Zedullah's self acquired property must be decided in accordance with the Muhammadan Law. He holds that under that law Zedullah's sister is the heir and not the collaterals and from this he has concluded that the plaintiffs cannot control Musammat Hawasi's alienation of the property, and he has, therefore, dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal in this Court.

On behalf of the respondent a preliminary objection is taken that as the lower Appellate Court has decided that the plaint-tiffs are governed by Muhammadan Law and not by custom a second appeal is not maintainable without a certificate from the District Judge under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act, and Aso v. Harnami (2) and Tulsi Ram v. Amar Singh (3) are cited in support of this contention. To this Mr. Bhagat, on behalf of the appellants, replies that as there was no issue regarding the question of Musammat Said Jan's right of succession, the lower Appellate Court was not competent to give a decision on the point, and that, therefore, no certificate is necessary and he relies on Nur Ali v. Bahawal (4), in which it was held that as the lower Appellate Court had decided the question on a point not properly before it a certificate was not required.

It is true that in the present case no specific issue was framed on the question whether Musammat Said Jan was entitled to succeed but this question appears to be included in the first issue, which was whether the plaintiffs have a locus standi to sue.

That issue was framed in consequence of the plea taken by the defendants that Zedullah's sister was alive, by which they evidently implied that she was an heir and that in her presence the plaintiffs could not sue and if it had been found that she was not an heir the first issue would necessarily have been decided in the plaintiffs' favour.

I hold, therefore, that the question as to the respective rights of inheritance of Musammat Said Jan and the plaintiffs was a matter of fact in issue, and that the learned District Judge's finding that the parties are governed by Muhammadan Law and not by custom on this point cannot be challenged in the absence of a certificate.

But this does not conclude the case, and the other issues have yet to be determined. In the first place, even though Musammat Said Jan is an heir her presence does not necessarily debar the plaintiffs from contesting the alienation. In the second place, the learned District Judge is wrong in thinking that under the Muhammadan Law the plaintiffs would not be heirs, for Musammat Said Jan would get only a share in the property and the plaintiffs would also succeed to a portion as residuaries. Thirdly it is not right to assume that because the Muhammadan Law is to be applied in deciding the question of inheritance as between Musammat Said Jan and the plaintiffs, it necessarily follows that Musammat Hawasi's powers of alienation are not subject to control by the collaterals. It is possible that while the former question has to be decided according to the Muhammadan Law, Hawasi's powers of alienation may be restricted in accordance with the customs prevailing among agriculturists. The learned District Judge has given no finding on this point although he has found that the members of Zedullah's family have lived entirely by agriculture.

I must, therefore, accept the appeal, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case to that Court under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code for a fresh decision in accordance with law. The Court-fee on the Memorandum of Appeal will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the case.

HUSAIN BEG—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Vendor and purchaser—Contract to sell—Specific performance—Damages.

Defendant told a friend that he wanted to sell a house and communicated to him the terms on which he was willing to sell it. The latter arranged for the sale of the house and wrote to the former that plaintiff had agreed to purchase the house on the terms proposed and was sending a certain sum as earnest-money. Defendant received the sum, and promised to send a formal receipt by registered post. This he failed to do, and ultimately refused to sell the house on the ground that it belonged to his wife who was not willing to sell it. Plaintiff, thereupon, brought a suit for specific performance and in the alternative for damages:

Held, (1) that there was a completed contract for the sale of the house between the parties; [p. 460, col. 2.]

(2) that specific performance could not, under the circumstances, be decreed; [p. 460, col. 2.]

(3) that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for breach of the contract, the measure of damages being the difference between the market-value of the house and the contractual price. [p. 461, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Agra.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for specific performance of a contract for sale of a house and in the alternative for damages. It appears that the defendant wanted to sell a house, and for this purpose Abdul Aziz, a common friend of the parties to the suit, was negotiating with prospective purchasers. Abdul Aziz wrote to the defendant saying that a certain person was offering Rs. 3,600 for the house and was enquiring if the defendant would agree to sell the house. On the 13th of December 1918 the defendant wrote back to Abdul Aziz saying that if the purchaser was willing to pay Rs. 4,000 for the house and the costs of transfer, he would sell the house. Abdul Aziz, thereupon, on the 21st of December 1918 wrote to the defendant saying that one Panna Lal had accepted the terms proposed by the defendant and was sending a money-order for Rs. 200 as earnest-money and the defendant was to send a formal receipt. It appears that the defendant received a money-order for Rs. 200 on Saturday and wrote back saying that as the next day was a Sunday, he would send the receipt on the Monday following by registered post or under a bearing cover as desired by Abdul Aziz. Matters stopped here for some days. On the 5th of January 1919 the defendant wrote to Abdul Aziz saying that he had received a telegram asking him for the return of Rs. 200 sent as earnest-money and he wanted to know if Panna Lal was going back out of the agreement. Later on he also said that the house really belonged to his wife and she refused to sell it. Ultimately, the defendant refused to execute a sale-deed and then the plaintiff brought the present suit for specific performance of the contract to sell, and, in the alternative for damages.

Several pleas were taken in defence and the main plea was that Abdul Aziz had by misrepresentation induced the defendant to agree to the sale of the house in December 1918, and that it was owing to this misrepresentation that the defendant acted as he did, but that the defendant did not contract with the plaintiff to sell the property. The Trial Court, the learned Subordinate Judge of Agra, came to the conclusion that the defendant had contracted to sell the house but he could not give a decree for specific performance of the contract, because the defendant was not competent to sell the house which belonged to his wife. He, however, gave a decree for damages and the refund of Rs. 200, the earnest-money already advanced. The defendant went up in appeal and the learned District Judge has confirmed the finding of the Trial Court as to the amount of damages, but has allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit on the ground that there was no completed contract for sale. It is not very easy to understand how the learned District Judge came to this conclusion. Having regard to the correspondence to which we have referred above, there can be no question that there was a proposal by Abdul Aziz that the defendant made an offer to sell the house for Rs. 4,000 and the said offer was accepted by Panna Lal who sent Rs. 200 by money-order as earnest-money. The learned Judge seems to be under the misapprehension that a receipt registered under the Registration Act was required for the Rs. 200 sent by Panna Lal as a condition precedent to the completion of the contract. This was clearly the result of a mis-reading of the correspondence between Abdul Aziz and the defendant. In the letter which Abdul Aziz wrote to the defendant, he asked the defendant to send a receipt by post under registered cover or bearing and the defendant wrote back in reply saying that he would send it on Monday following by registered post or bearing. The learned Judge seems to think that this last letter meant that the receipt was to be registered under the Registration Act and then sent to Abdul Aziz. This was no body's case and the learned Judge seems to have misunderstood the defence and erred in deciding the case on a point not raised by the parties. In our opinion the judgment of the Trial Court was correct and should not have been disturbed. We are of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages for a breach of the contract entered into with him by the defendant and that the measure of such damages is the difference between the market value of the property and the contractual price. The learned Judge accepts the amount assessed by the Court below as correct. We, therefore, allow the appeal set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1112 OF 1919.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (b), (2) (vi)—Compromise relating to properties not subject of suit, recording of—Procedure—Registration, whether necessary.

Where a suit is compromised, but the compromise relates to properties some of which are not the subject of the suit, the proper procedure for the Court recording the compromise is to record the whole of the agreement, and then to pass a decree in accordance with so much of it as relates to the subject-matter of the suit. [p. 463, col. 2.]

Where a suit has been adjusted in the manner contemplated by O. XXIII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the terms and conditions of the adjustment have been reduced to writing by the parties and the Court has duly recorded those terms and conditions and passed a decree in accordance with such of them as are the subject of the then existing litigation, then the writing of the parties may be produced in evidence in any subsequent suit without being registered. A suit relating to immoveable property of the value of more than Rs. 100 was compromised and the parties agreed to divide the property in dispute and some other property in certain proportions. The agreement was reduced to writing and was presented to the Court. The Court made an order thereon to the effect that as the compromise related to property outside the scope of the suit a decree could not be passed upon it, and the suit was dismissed "in accordance with the compromise." In a subsequent suit to enforce the compromise:

Held, (1) that the procedure adopted by the Court in recording the compromise in the previous suit was erroneous and that it should have recorded the whole compromise and then passed a decree in accordance with so much of it as related on the property in dispute; [p. 462, col. 2; p. 4 3, col. 1.]

(2) that the compromise not having been incorporated in the decree or order of the Court, was not admissible in evidence for want of registration. [p. 464, col. 2.]

Second ppeal from a decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 4th March 1919, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Sialkot, dated the 17th December 1917.

Messrs. Aziz Ahmad and Muhammad Rafi, for the Appellants.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The main question in this appeal is whether a certain document, dated the 9th February 1910 is admissible in evidence in a suit brought to enforce its terms, in spite of the fact that it has not been registered in accordance with the provisions of section 77 (1) (b) of the Indian Registration Act of 1908.

The facts out of which the appeal has arisen are shortly as follows:—

In 1909 the respondents brought a suit for possession of certain lands. In the course of the proceedings the parties came to an agreement and the suit was compromised upon terms which were reduced to writing and signed by all the parties to the suit except one for whom one of the signatories appears to have acted. The material facts of this document are as follows:—

"In the case noted above the plaintiff adult for himself and as guardian (wali sarprast) of the minors, Ghulam Jilan, Muhamnad Shafi and Muzaffar Khan on one side, and the defendants on the other have, entered into a mutual compromise to the following effect":—

"According to the conditions laid down in the deed of partition dated the 12th January 1898 we have agreed to partition the lands, situate in the villages of Cha an Nagar, Ainowali. Raya Goraya, Mirak Pur, and Bhoja Dhandsa (as noted in the said deed) in the following shares."

"Rahim Bakhsh, son of Ghulam Muhammad, and Jalal-ud-Din, son of Rahim Bakhsh	1/3rd share.
"Ghulam Nabi, adult, and Ghulam Jilani, Muhammad Shafi and Muzaffar Khan, minors, sons of Inayat Ullah, plaintiffs	1/3rd share.
"Ilahi Bakhsh, son of Ghulam Muhammad, defendant	1/3rd share.

"Thus each of us shall be owner of one third share in all the villages above mentioned. From to-day we have made a settlement in respect of the mortgage-money paid by any co-sharer on behalf of the others for redemption of land or in respect of the payment of debt made by any of them. Nothing now remains due by any party to the other. We have entered into this compromise with the above mentioned conditions.

"We have produced this deed of compromise for being accepted. Jalal-ud-Din, defendant, is not present. Defendant No. 1 is responsible for him."

"Dated the 9th February 1910."

This document was tendered to the Court for the purpose of being recorded under the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court, however, seemed to think that it could not record the agreement embodied in this document as it included some parcels of land which were not the subject-matter of the suit, and the Court thereupon dismissed the suit and at the same time made the following order:—

"The parties have entered into a compromise. As this general compromise is in respect of all the lands and the suit is in respect of one village only, a decree cannot be passed according to the compromise."

"It is, therefore, ordered that the record of the case be consigned to the record-room according to the compromise.

"Dated the 9th February 1910."

The effect of this order is that the suit was dismissed upon the terms of the compromise but the agreement itself was not recorded; nor was a decree passed in accordance therewith.

In adopting this course the Court was clearly wrong. What it should have done was to record the whole agreement, even though it included matters outside the scope of the present suit, and then pass a decree in accordance with so much of the agreement as related to the suit. In Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapore Zemindari Company Limited (1) the procedure to be adopted under section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, which corresponds to O. XXIII, r. 3 of the present Code, was suggested in the judgment of the Privy Council. The view expressed by Lord Buckmaster at page 246 is as follows:—

"In the first place, it is plain that the agreement or compromise, in whole and not in part, is to be recorded, and the decree is then to confine its operation to so much of the subject-matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement. Their Lordships are not aware of the exact system by which documents are recorded in the Courts in India, but a perfectly proper and effectual method of carrying out the terms of this section would be for the decree to recite the whole of the agreement and then to conclude with an order relative to that part that was the subject of the suit, or it could introduce the agreement in a schedule to the decree; but in either case, although the operative part of the decree would be properly confined to the actual subject matter of the then existing litigation the decree taken as a whole would include the agreement."

Had this procedure been adopted in the present case the respondents could have put the document of compromise in evidence in the present suit without having it registered. Such of its terms as were embodied in the decree would have been binding upon the parties as res judicata and the order of the Court incorporating the terms not contained in the decree itself, would have been "judicial evidence available to the appellants," that the respondents had agreed in those terms to the partition of the lands which were outside the scope of the former suit [Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (2)].

The present suit has been brought to enforce the terms of the compromise in respect of part of the land thereby agreed to be allocated to the plaintiff-respondent. The appellant's contention now is that this document cannot be received in evidence as it has not been registered. This contention is founded on the judgment of the Privy Council already referred to, and on an earlier case reported in Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapore Zemindari Company, Limited (1), which definitely decides that a written document embodying the terms of a mutual agreement compromising a suit, can only be received in evidence without being registered if its provisions have been recorded by the Court in the form of a decree. This exception is extended to agreements incorporated in a decree even in cases where the operative part of the decree does not contain all the stipulations and provisions contained in the agreement. In other words, if a suit has been adjusted in the manner contemplated by O. XXIII, r. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the terms and conditions of the adjustment have been reduced to writing by the parties, and if the Court has duly recorded those terms and conditions and passed a decree in accordance with such of them as are the subject of the then existing litigation, then the writing of the parties may be produced in evidence in any subsequent suit without being registered. In the present case the document evidencing the terms upon which the previous suit had been adjusted between the parties, has not been incorporated in a decree of the Court nor has it been embodied in the order of the 9th February 1910. The exception provided in sub-section 2 (vi) of section 17, which declares that nothing in clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section applies to "among other things" any decree or order of a Court does not, therefore, cover this case as the order of the 9th February 1910 connot, in view of the authorities cited above, be regarded as a decree or order within the meaning of that exception. It follows, therefore, that the document is subject to the provisions of section 17 (1) (b) and being unregistered is prohibited by section 49 of the Act from being received as evidence of the compromise arrangement.

The lower Appellate Court thought that Hari Chand v. Maghi Mal (3) was a clear authority for holding that the document did not require registration, but we are unable to understand how the learned District Judge came to that conclusion. In that case the parties in a pending suit settled the matters in dispute by mutual consent. The document embodying the terms of the settlement was presented to the Court in which the suit was pending, for the purpose of having the mutual agreement recorded under the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court refused to act on the compromise on the ground that the document could not be accepted as it had not been registered, and on a further ground not material to the present question. The document was not tendered as evidence of a contract sued upon in that litigation, but was merely a memorandum of the terms upon which the parties had agreed to put an end to the litigation, and which the Court was requested to accept and record in accordance with O. XXIII, r. 3. It, therefore, could not possibly be held to come within the provisions of section 17 (b) of the Registration Act. The Court was bound, under the Civil Procedure Code, to record the terms of the arrangement arrived at by the parties if it was satisfied that the arrangement was a lawful one and that it adjusted the suit either wholly or in part and the appeal was brought against the order of the Subordinate Judge solely on account of his refusal to comply with the provisions of the Code.

That is an entirely different case to the present one. Here the document embodying the terms of the compromise is sought to be given in evidence in a fresh suit brought to enforce those terms, the previous suit which was compromised having been dismissed. The document is here tendered as evidence of the terms of the compromise which is sought to be enforced in the present litigation.

A number of other cases have been cited by Counsel for the respondents, but in all those cases it appears that the document containing the terms of the compromise was in fact incorporated with, and given effect to by, the order of the Court which tried the suit. In one case only amongst those referred to there appears to be some doubt as to the extent to which the compromise was in fact incorporated in the order of the Court of first instance. This is a case reported as Khair-ul-nisa v. Bahadur Ali (4). The judgment in that case discussed at some length the question as to what was the exact nature of the document of compromise, and certain dicta in the judgment of Rattigan, J., have been seized upon by Counsel for the respondents as authority for the somewhat remarkable proposition that a document can be tendered as evidence in a suit without being registered, provided it is merely the record reduced to writing of an antecedent verbal arrangement. We confess we cannot follow this line of reasoning. Most contracts in writing are merely the formal documentary expression of an antecedant verbal arrangement, but it is an elementary principle of law that the antecedent agreement cannot be proved by parol evidence if the parties have reduced the agreement to writing. Where that has been done the writing itself must be tendered in evidence, and such writing by section 49 of the Indian Registration Act cannot be received by the Court as evidence of the verbal agreement unless it is registered. This is subject to the proviso contained in sub-section (2) exempting inter alia any decree or order of a Court.

If Khair-ul-nisa v. Bahadur Ali (4) does, as Counsel for the respondents contend, in fact decide that a compromise which is merely referred to by the Court, but the terms of which are not incorporated in an order or decree, can be tendered as evidence in subsequent litigation, all we can say is that that decision can no longer be a binding authority in view of the judgments of the Privy Council already referred to. We do not, however, agree that those were the facts in that particular case. It appears in the judgment of the Court that "The plaintiff and defendant were both examined by the Court with reference to the document and repeated in full detail all that was set forth in that document, the plaintiff concluding by expressly requesting the Court to dismiss her suit in accordance with the terms of the compromise. The Court accordingly wrote an order reciting the said terms and dismissed the suit as prayed." That case, therefore, cannot be said to conflict with the long series of authorities terminating in the decision of the Privy Council reported in Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapore Zemindari Co., Limited (1). Holding as we do that the documentary evidence upon which the respondents rely is not admissible by reason of its not having been registered, we must accept the appeal, the appellants to have their costs throughout.

Messrs. D. Appa Rao, P. Narayanhmoorthy and A. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. V. Ramadoss and K. Venkata Rama Raju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for our disposal in this appeal is whether the suit lands formed part of an 'estate' within the meaning of section 3 of the Madras Estates Land Act, so as to oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. Both the lower Courts have found that it did not, and after a long argument on both sides we see no reason for interfering with that decision. We must take it as a fact that the suit lands were granted as an inam in the year 1798, at any rate, before 1802. This was not disputed before the lower Appellate Court; and the case proceeded on the assumption that it was so. The argument there adduced by the defendants, the appellants before us, was that, in spite of this fact, the lands should be treated as part of the estate, because it was not shown that the rentals on them had been deducted from the assets of the zemindari for the purpose of assessing peishcush. The lower Appellate Court has considered this aspect of the case and has come to the conclusion that, although the Circuit Committee's accounts prepared with a view to the assessment of peishcush, would only extend to two years before 1798, the date of the grant, yet, nevertheless, it must be found as a fact that the lands were excluded from the assets of the zamindari in calculating peishcush. This we take to be the conclusion arrived at, at the end of paragraph 7 of the lower Appellate Court's judgment.

Mr. Ramadoss for the respondents has drawn our attention to a recent decision of this Court reported in Kuppu Reddi Nookayya v. Mandaluka Bheemanna (1), from which it would appear that the lower Appellate Court might have approached the consideration of the evidence from a point of view much more favourable to the respondents than he did. The learned Judge in that case held that the fact of grant prior to 1802 afforded, at any rate, strong evidence that the lands so granted were excluded from the Permanent Settlement. It may be that this is a rebuttable presumption. But we think it is quite clear that the lower Appellate Court has not found the presumption to be rebutted in the present case. In fact, it has arrived at the conclusion it has, while practically throwing burden of proof on the appellants. We can see no reason for questioning this finding.

The learned Vakil for the appellants has laid great stress on an entry in the 'Remark' column in Exhibit II, the B Register of the village, to the effect that the enfranchisement of these properties was cancelled in 1920. The learned Subordinate Judge referred to the enfranchisement but has not referred to the cancellation. The reason appears to be this: When Exhibit II was originally filed in the First Court there was no such entry in the 'Remark' column. The register, being a public document, appears to have been returned to the party producing it after the disposal of the case by the First Court and, in the interval, before it was produced again on the hearing in the lower Appellate Court, this entry appears to have been made in the 'Remark' column. Strictly speaking, therefore, the entry in the 'Remark' column is not a part of the record in the case, and, if the present appellants wished the lower Appellate Court to treat it as part of the record, a special application should have been made to that effect. Nothing of the kind appears to have been done, and, although we are told that the learned Subordinate Judge's attention was drawn to this 'Remark' column, he makes no reference to it, and it may quite well be that he declined to consider it in the absence of such a special application. We can see no reason for interfering with the lower Appellate Court' finding of fact as to exclusion of the suit lands from the zemindari and we must dismiss this second appeal with costs.

We see no reason to interfere with the lower Appellate Court's order as to costs.

The Memorandum of Objections is dismissed with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

REFERENCE UNDER SECTION 5 OF THE COURT-FEES ACT, 1870.

February 20, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Greaves.

In the goods of G. T. WILLIAMS—DECEASED.

Government of India Act, 1919, (9 & 10 Geo. V, c 101), s. 80 (A)—Court-Fees Act (V I I of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 11—Bengal Court-Fees (Amendment) Act (I V of 1922), whether ultra vires—Fee payable on Letters of Administration, whether tax.

Under the provisions of section 80 A of the Government of India Act, a local Legislature may, subject to the limitations mentioned in sub-section (3) of the section, repeal or alter as to that Province any law made before or after the commencement of the Act by any authority in British India. [p. 468, col. 1.]

The limitations imposed by sub-section (3) of section 80 A of the Government of India Act relate under clause (a) to the imposition of new taxes other than those set out in Schedule I of the Scheduled Taxes Rules and under clause (h) to the Acts set out in the Schedule to the Previous Sanction Rules. [p. 468, col. 1.]

The Court-Fees Act is not set out in the Schedule to the Previous Sanction Rules, and a Court-fee not being a stamp duty within the meaning of Schedule I of the Scheduled Taxes Rules, the amendment of the Court-Fees Act by a local Legislature does not require the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council. The Bengal Court-Fees (Amendment) Act of 1922 was not, therefore, ultra vires the Bengal Legislature for want of such sanction. [p. 468, col. 1.]

The sum charged under the provisions of the Court-Fees Act upon a grant of Probate or Letters of Administration is not a tax or duty levied upon the property upon which the Probate or Administration operates but is merely a fee levied by the Court issuing the Probate or Letters of Administration for the work done in this connection, and must be paid according to the scale prescribed in the Province in which the grant is made, irrespective of the fact whether the whole of the property in respect of which the grant is made is or is not situate within that Province. [p. 468, col. 2.]

Mr. R. Westmacott, for the Administrator-General of Bengal.

Mr. S. R. Das, Advocate-General.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under section 5 of the Courts-Fees Act, 1870, for the purpose of determining the amount of the fees to be paid in respect of the grant of Letters of Administration in the above estate. Two questions are raised. The first is whether the Bengal Court-Fees Amendment Act of 1922 (Act IV of 1922) is ultra vires. The second question is whether, assuming the Act is not ultra vires, the fees to be levied at the enhanced ed rate prescribed by the Bengal Court-Fees Amendment Act of 1922 (Act IV of 1922) on the whole estate, or whether the enhanced fee is payable only on that portion thereof which is situate in Bengal, the fee in respect of the assets outside Bengal being leviable at the lower rate prescribed by the Court-Fees Act of 1870, as amended by subsequent Acts of the Imperial Legislative Council.

On behalf of the Administrator-General of Bengal to whom a grant has been issued, and who has paid under protest the fee at the enhanced rate prescribed by Bengal Act IV of 1922 in respect of all the assets, it is contended, first, that the Bengal Court-Fees Act of 1922 is ultra vires; second, that if it is intra vires it was not competent to the Bengal Legislature to enhance the fees on assets outside Bengal.

I will deal first with the first point. Section 80 (A) of the Government of India Act provides, sub-section 1 (2), that the local Legislature of any Province may, subject to the provisions of the sub-section next following, repeal or alter as to that Province any law made either before or after the commencement of this Act by any authority in British India other than that local Legislature. And sub-section (3) provides that the local Legislature of any Province may not without the previous sanction of the Governor-General make or take into consideration any law (a) imposing or authorising the imposition of any new tax unless the tax is a tax scheduled as exempted from this provision by rules made under this Act or (b) altering or repealing the provisions of any law which, having been made before the commencement of the Government of India Act, 1919, by any authority in British India other than that local Legislature, is declared by rules under this Act to be a law which cannot be repealed or altered by the local Legislature without previous sanction.

By the rules framed in respect of section 80 A (3) (a) of the Act it is provided (1) that the Legislative Council of a Province may, without the previous sanction of the Governor-General, make and take into consideration any law imposing, for the purposes of local Government, any tax included in Schedule I to these rules. Schedule I (2) includes a tax on succession and Schedule I (8) includes a stamp duty other than duties of which the amount is fixed by Indian Legislation. By the rules framed in respect of section 80A 3 (h) it is provided (2) that a local Legislature may not repeal or alter without the previous sanction of the Governor-General (1) any law made by any authority in British India before the commencement of the Indian Councils Act, 1861, (2) any law specified in the Schedule to these rules or any law made by the Governor-General in Council amending a law so specified.

Now the Court-Fees Act, 1870 (Act VII of 1870), under which the fee payable on a grant o Letters of Administration is levied, which is an Act of the Governor-General of India in Council, is not one of the Acts specified in the Schedule to the rules framed in respect of section 80 A (3) (h).

It will be convenient at this stage to consider the material provisions of that Act. Section 3 provides (inter alia) that the fees chargeable in the different High Courts under No. 11 of the First Schedule (which prescribes the fee payable in respect of Letters of Administration) are to be levied in manner thereinafter appearing; that it is to say, by stamps under section 25.

Now, as I understand the argument for the Administrator-General on this first point, it is this that the fee is a stamp-duty because it is collected by stamps under the provisions of section 25 of the Court-Fees Act, 1870, and inasmuch as that Act is an Act of the Governor-General in Council, it is a duty, of which the amount is fixed by Indian Legislation and that it cannot, therefore, be altered without the previous sanction of the Governor-General, which admittedly has not been obtained in this case.

The Advocate-General contends that the provisions of section 80A (3) relate only to new taxes and not to the enhancement of existing taxes and that the taxes referred to in Schedule I of the Scheduled Taxes Rules, which can be imposed without leave, all relate to new taxes and that sanction is only required for the imposition of a new tax which does not fall within the provisions of Schedule I and not to the enhancement of an existing tax. And he contends that, under the provisions of section 80 A (3) (h), the local Legislature can amend any Act of the Imperial Legislature except those mentioned in the Previous Sanction Rules.

I think that these contentions are correct. Under the provisions of section 80A (1) the local Legislature has power to make laws for the peace and good Government of the territories of the Province, and under section 80 A (2) the local Legislature may, subject as therein mentioned, that is to say, subject to the limitation mentioned in (3), repeal or alter as to that Province any law made before or after the commencement of the Act by any authority in British India.

The limitations imposed by (3) relate (a) to the imposition of new taxes other than those set out in Schedule I of the Scheduled Taxes Rules. Now it is quite true that duties which are collected by means of stamps are, in a sense, stamp duties, for instances, in England, Estate Duty, Probate Duty and Succession Duty are stamp-duties because they are so collected, but I feel very great doubt whether a Court-fee becomes a stamp-duty within the meaning of the Scheduled Taxes Rules, Schedule I, because it is collected by means of stamps. I think that the stamp-duties referred to in Schedule I mean some such duties as are imposed by the Indian Stamp Act, see section 3 of that Act, and do not comprise Court-fees comprised in the Court-Fees Act, even although in a sense they are stamp-duties as being paid by stamps. As to 3 (h) the limitations extend only to those Acts set out in the Schedule to the Previous Sanction Rules, which does not, as already stated, contain the Court-Fees Act. For these reasons, in my opinion, the first point fails and Bengal Act IV of 1922 is not ultra vires of the local Legislature, as no previous sanction was necessary.

I now come to the second point. On behalf of the Administrator General it is contended that the Bengal Court-Fees (Amendment) Act, 1922, extends only to Bengal and that the Bengal Legislature cannot impose a tax on property in another Province. The real question is whether the enhancement of the Court-fees payable on a grant of Administration is a tax or merely a Court-fee. It is said that it is a tax or duty because this has to be paid before the Court exercises any jurisdiction in the matter and because, under the provisions of section 19 H (2) of the Court-Fees Act, notice of the application has to be given by the High Court to the Revenue authority of the Province and because of the provisions for valuation in section 19 A, E and F and the provisions for deducting debts in 19 B. The Advocate-General, however, contends that it is merely a Court-fee and that if a man chooses to take out Probate or Administration in Bengal he must submit to the laws of the local Legislature, and that if the imposition is viewed as a Court-fee and not as a duty or tax it is quite immaterial where the property is situate. I think that this contention is correct, the sum charged upon a grant of Probate or of Letters of Administration is not a tax or duty levied upon the property upon which the Probate or Administration operates, and it is not charged thereon as is Estate Duty in England, but it is merely a fee levied by the Court issuing the Probate or Letters of Administration for the work done in this connection. And I do not think that this is any less the case because the fee is levied upon the value of the property.

In my opinion, therefore, the Court-fee was rightly levied at the enhanced rate on the value of all the assets, whether in this Province or outside.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 16, 20—Decree improperly passed—Proper remedy—Suit for declaration that decree not binding on plaintiff, nature of—Cause of action—Jurisdiction.

Where a decree has been improperly passed, the proper and convenient course is for the party aggrieved to go to the Court that granted the decree and get it set aside by that Court. [p. 470, col. 2.]

Before a Court can entertain a suit for a declaration that a decree granted by another Court is not binding on the plaintiff it must be shown that there is a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the Court. [p. 470, col. 1.]

A mortgage decree in respect of properties situate within the jurisdiction of the Patna Court was passed by the Court at Benares. The judgment-debtor instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna for a declaration that the decree was inoperative against him:

Held, (1) that the suit was not a suit for land and section 16 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply; [p. 470 col. 1.]

(2) that the cause of action did not arise within the jurisdiction of the Patna Court; [p 470 col. 2.]

(3) that the plaint should, therefore be returned for the purpose of being filed in the proper Court. [p. 470 col. 2.]

Revision from a decision of Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Patna, dated the 16th May 1923.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Gangadhar Das and Ram Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—I think this application must succeed. The petitioner Bank was the plaintiff in a mortgage action at Benares. The suit was filed against the opposite party and various other persons whose names it is unnecessary to mention. The Benares Bank Limited, obtained the usual mortgage decree on the 17th December 1917. The decree, as I have said, was against the opposite party and others by compromise.

The opposite party, sometime in 1922, instituted a suit in the Third Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna for a declaration that the consent decree passed in Benares was wholly inoperative as against them. One of the questions which the learned Subordinate Judge had to try was, whether the Court at Patna had jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

I am clearly of opinion that the suit is not a suit for land and that section 16 of the Code has no application to the facts of the case. Mr. Gangadhar Das has insisted that the suit is for the determination of a right to or interest in immoveable property. His argument is based upon the view that it is impossible for him to succeed in the action unless he establishes his title to the properties which were mortgaged by defendants Nos. 5 and 6 in favour of the Benares Bank, Limited, and that, in so far as he is inviting the Court to adjudicate the title of his clients to the mortgaged properties which are situated within the jurisdiction of the Patna Court, he is in effect asking the Court to determine the right to or interest of the petitioners in immoveable property. In my opinion the argument is unsustainable in point of law. The only question which the learned Subordinate Judge has to decide is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree declaring that the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Benares in 1917 is inoperative and void as against the plaintiffs in the present action. The plaintiffs in their action, no doubt, have asked the Court to adjudicate their title to the properties in dispute and also to hold that the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 were not entitled to mortgage the properties which belonged to them to the Benares Bank, Limited. But as the learned Chief Justice has pointed out in the case of Ramsumran Prasad v. Gobind Das (1), "the Court is in all cases bound to adjudicate upon the matters in issue between the parties and it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to pray that this should be done. The real relief which the plaintiff seeks is the delivery of possession of the property by dispossession of the defendant, and if he asks for a decree in those terms when he is not bound first to ask for a declaration before such relief can be granted, I do not think that, merely because he asks the Court to adjudicate upon the matters in issue, the suit should be treated as a suit to obtain a declaratory decree with consequential relief."

The question which the learned Chief Justice had to decide in the case to which I have referred was a question of Court-fees payable on a certain plaint which had been filed by the plaintiff, but in my opinion we are entitled to refer to that decision in order to determine the question whether the suit should be regarded as a suit for land because in giving the appropriate relief to the plaintiffs the Court may have to determine some question as to the right to the property as between the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants. I do not say that the Court may necessarily have to determine those points; but it may have to do so. In my opinion the suit which has been filed by the plaintiffs in this case cannot be regarded as a suit for land, having regard to the relief which they prayed in this action.

The next question is, whether part of the cause of action may be said to have arisen within the jurisdiction of the Patna Court. If section 16 does not apply, the only other section to which we may refer is section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides as follows:—"Subject to the limitations aforesaid, every suit shall be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction,—

"(a) the defendant, or each of the defendants, where there are more than one, at the time of the commencement of the suit actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business or personally works for gain or,

"(b) any of the defendants, where there are more than one, at the time of the commencement of the suit, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain, provided that in such case either the leave of the Court is given or the defendants who do not reside, or carry on business, or personally work for gain, as aforesaid, acquiesce in such institution; or

"(c) the cause of action wholly or in part arises."

It is conceded that the terms of clauses (a) and (b) have not been complied with. The only other question is, have the terms of clause (c) been complied with? That leads us to consider the meaning of the term "cause of action." All that I need do is to refer to the decision of the late Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Dan Dial v. Munna Lal (2). That was a case where a decree had been obtained by the respondents as against the appellant in Calcutta. The appellant instituted a suit in Mainpuri for a declaration that the decree passed by the Calcutta High Court had been obtained by fraud. No application for execution had been made as against the appellant and the Subordinate Judge held, and the High Court confirmed the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge, that the Mainpuri Court had no jurisdiction whatever to entertain the suit. No doubt, if an application for execution had been presented as against the opposite party in Patna, that itself would have given rise to a cause of action of which the respondents might have taken advantage; but it is conceded that the petitioner Bank has not presented any application for execution of the decree which it has obtained as against the opposite party and it does not seem to us right that this suit should have been instituted in the Patna Court. As was pointed out by the late Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court, where a decree has been improperly obtained the proper and most convenient course is for the party aggrieved to go to the Court that granted the decree and get it set aside by that Court. I do not for a moment suggest that under no circumstances would another Court have jurisdiction to entertain a suit for a declaration that a decree granted by another Court is not binding upon it, but it must be established that there is cause of action within the jurisdiction of the Court. In my opinion the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

I must accordingly allow the application, set aside the order passed by the Court below and direct that the plaint be taken off the file and returned to the opposite party for the purpose of being filed in the proper Court. The petitioners are entitled to their costs throughout and we assess the costs in this Court at five gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—This is a second appeal from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, in a partition suit. The plaintiff was the son of the first defendant and they were puisne members of a joint Hindu family. At one time before the suit the first defendant became insolvent. The plaintiff joined in the partition suit certain alienees of the joint family property alleging that the consideration was such that the transactions were not binding on him. The case came up before the District Munsif and then on to the District Judge who remanded the matter to the District Munsif again for finding on the question whether the consideration for these assignments was of a nature to bind the son. The findings were given and the case came up again and was heard on the findings by the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge took no notice of the finding and did not enquire at all into any of the matters considered by the District Judge as relevant, but accepted the contention that, as the first defendant had become an insolvent, the whole joint family property vested in the Official Receiver, and, therefore, the son had no claim to partition and could not take any steps to recover this alienated property from the alienees. In my judgment, that is not the law. The matter has recently been before this Court in the Official Assignee of Madras v. Ramachandra Aiyar (1) when I expressed my views to be that, on the insolvency of the managing member of a joint Hindu family, the Official Assignee succeeded to the undivided interest of the insolvent in the joint property and his rights as managing member so far as they can be exercised for his own benefit, but he is not entitled to have vested in him the shares of the other members though he is entitled to deal with them as the insolvent would lawfully have done if there be no insolvency.

There has since been a decision of the Full Bench in Lahore, Bihari Lal v. Sat Narain (2) in which the Court, though expressing preference for the view of this Court which was not before it, held itself bound by authority to decide that the whole joint family property vests in the Official Assignee. I think we must follow the decision of the Bench of this Court. It follows from that that the decision of the Subordinate Judge in this case is wrong and the matter must be remanded to the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, to be heard from the stage at which it had arrived on return of the findings called for by the District Judge. It seems to me necessary that the Official Receiver of the second defendant should be a party. The point was raised early in the case, and notice must be given to him so that he may come before the Court, if so advised.

The plaintiff is entitled to his costs o this appeal.

Coleridge, J.—I concur.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 9th of September 1920, modifying that of the Munsif, Meerut, dated the 29th of April 1920.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen and Munshi Kailas Chandra Mital, for the Appellant.

Babu Harendra Krishna Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arsise out of two suits brought by a subsequent mortgagee for the recovery of the money due on two simple mortgages. The claims were resisted by a person who had purchased the mortgaged property in execution of a simple money-decree due by the mortgagor. That person also held certain prior mortgagees on the same property. He asserted that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue for the recovery of the money due on the subsequent incumbrance until he had paid the money due on the prior mortgages. The First Court decreed the claim without requiring the plaintiff to pay the money due on the prior mortgages. The view taken by it was, that the prior mortgages had ceased to subsist and that the defendant could not set up those mortgages as a shield against the claim brought by the subsequent mortgagee. The lower Appellate Court, however, held otherwise and granted a decree to the plaintiff subject to his redeeming the prior mortgages set up by the defendant-respondent.

It is urged on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the prior mortgages had ceased to be subsisting, becauee no step had been taken to enforce them within the period allowed by law. The mortgagee, however, had purchased the mortgaged property in execution of a simple money-decree due by the mortgagor, and it was not open to him to sue for the recovery of the money due on his prior mortgagees after the rights of the mortgagor had merged in him. Section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down that where the owner of a charge or other incumbrance on immoveable property is or becomes absolutely entitled to that property, the charge or incumbrance shall be extinguished unless he declares by express words or necessrary implication that it shall continue to subsist, or such continuance would be for his benefit.

The ordinary rule, as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukhdas (1), is that, if a man is entitled to act in either of two ways, he shall be assumed to have acted according to his interest, and the presumption, therefore, is that the mortgagee intended to keep his prior incumbrances subsisting, in order that he might be able to use them to protect himself against any subsequent incumbrancer. That being so, the defendant respondent could set up these prior mortgages as a shield against the claims brought by the subsequent mortgagee.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant contends that no such shield is available to a person who has purchased the mortgaged property otherwise than in execution of a decree on the prior mortgage; but he has not been able to cite authority in support of that proposition. He relies on the decision in Athan Kutti v. Malavil Illoth Sutarjanam (2), but that was a case in which a suit was brought to redeem a usufructuary mortgage against a person who also held a simple mortgage of a subsequent date on the same property. The latter was barred by time. There were certain conditions in the simple mortgage which imposed fetters on the right of the mortgagor to redeem the former, and all that was laid down in that case was that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the usufructuary mortgage irrespective of those fetters, and that, as the liability of the mortgagor under the simple mortgage was quite independent of his liability under the usufructuary mortgage, the simple mortgage could not, in any case, be set up as a shield against the claim of the mortgagor to redeem the usufructuary mortgage. There was no covenant therein for tacking or consolidation and no shield was available. He has also relied on the decision in Mutiullah Khan v. Banwari Lal (3), but that was not a case in which the mortgagee had purchased the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property. There was a certain person who had mortagaged the property in succession with two different persons and subsequently sold it to a third party. The third party made a mortgage in favour of a person who, thereafter, redeemed the first mortgage out of the money left with him for the purpose by his mortgagor. He subsequently filed a suit for the recovery of the money due on his mortgage and obtained a decree in satisfaction whereof the rights of the mortgagor were sold by auction and purchased by a person against whom an attempt was afterwards made by the intermediate mortgagee to enforce his mortgage. One of the defences taken by the auction-purchaser was that the mortgagee, in satisfaction of whose decree he had purchased, had acquired the rights of the prior mortgagee by payment of his money, and it was held by this Court that he was entitled to use that mortgage as a shield against the claim of the intermediate mortgagee if the right to enforce that mortgage was subsisting.

There is, however, a considerable difference between cases where a subsequent mortgagee has acquired the rights of a prior mortgagee by payment of the money due to him under section 74 of the Transfer of Property Act and cases where the rights of the mortgagors have merged in the mortgagee within the meaning of section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is no question of merger in the former as there is in the latter. Under the latter section, if at any time the purchaser is sought to be deprived of the mortgaged property, it is open to him to set up his original rights as a prior mortgagee as a shield against any rights which might be claimed under a subsequent incumbrance. Having purchased the mortgaged property, he can redeem any subsequent incumbrance but he is under no obligation to do so. He can retain possession of the mortgaged property until an attempt is made by a puisne mortgagee to oust him by redemption or sale.

The shield of a subsequent mortgagee, who acquires the rights of a prior mortgagee, is essentially different in character from the shield of a mortgagee who acquires the rights of the mortgagor. The former can protect himself so long as the rights under the earlier mortgage subsist. In the case of the latter, his rights as a morgtgagee merge in those of the mortgagor or remain in suspense, as it were, till they are needed for purposes of defence. So long as he retains the rights of the mortgagor, he is not affected by any question of limitation, for, as pointed out in Laxman Ganesh v Mathurabai (4), he cannot be required to sue for the recovery of the money due on his mortgage from his own property. Indeed, being both the mortgagee and the mortgagor, he cannot have any cause of action against himself.

It makes no difference how the rights of the mortgagor are acquired by the mortgagee. In Baldeo Parshad v. Uman Shankar (5), a mortgagee, who had, in the exercise of a right of pre-emption, purchased the property mortgaged to him, was held to have a right to be re-paid the money due in respect of his mortgage before a subsequent mortgagee could bring such property to sale in execution of a decree on a mortgage held by the latter.

The other pleas taken in the memoranda of appeals have not been pressed. A question was raised as to the right of the defendant-respondent to claim interest beyond the date on which he got possession of the mortgaged property, but the lower Appellate Court has not awarded interest beyond the date on which possession was so obtained by the defendant-respondent. The appeals, therefore, fail and we dismiss them with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which have given rise to this appeal have been set out at length in the judgments of the Courts below, and it is, therefore, unnecessary for us to repeat them here. The plaintiff prayed for declaration of title to and separate possession of the lands in schedule 2, for declaration of title to one-fourth share of the lands in schedule 1 and for recovery of that share on partition, and for declaration of title to one-fourth share of the lands in schedules 6 and 7 and for recovery of joint possession of the same and for other reliefs mentioned in the plaint. The defendant No. 1 contended that the plaintiff being a leper did not inherit the properties left by his maternal grandfather, one Jagannath, and that, in any event, the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 pleaded that the plaintiff had no cause of action as against them. The defendant No.4 supported the defendant No. 1. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was not disqualified to inherit the properties which belonged to Jagannath on account of his leprosy and that the suit was not barred by limitation. The lower Appellate Court on appeal found, according to the medicel evidence which had been adduced in the case, that the plaintiff had anæsthetic leprosy of the mildest kind and that it was not of a bad type and was not ulcerous and accordingly held that at the time when the succession opened, he had no leprosy of such a kind as could disqualify him from inheriting the properties which belonged to his maternal grandfather. On the question of limitation, the lower Appellate Court found that, inasmuch as Jagannath's widow, Sreemati Bhagbati, was in possession of the joint properties till 1321 B. S. when she died, time began to run as against the plaintiff only from the death of Bhagbati when the succession opened, and, therefore, the plaintiff's suit was not barred by limitation. The lower Appellate Court accordingly affirmed the decree of the First Court. Against this judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court the present apppeal has been preferred by the defendants Nos. 1 and 4 and on their behalf it has been contended before us that, on the findings of the two Courts below, it should have been held that the plaintiff was excluded from inheritance, and, secondly, that it had not been shown what the condition of the plaintiff was at the time when the succession opened.

Now, under the Hindu Law, the grounds of exclusion from inheritance fall under the following six heads: (i) physical and mental defects, (ii) incurable or agonizing diseases, (iii) degradation from caste by reason of crime or otherwise, (iv) vicious, criminal or irreligious conduct, (v) becoming naisthika brahmachari (perpetual student); vanaprasthasrami (hermit) or sanyasi (ascetic.) The physical and mental defects expressly mentioned in the text are impotence, dumbness, deafness, lunacy, lameness, blindness and idiocy. Manu has a further vague ground of exclusion nirindriyatwa, i.e., absence of limb or sense which ncludes according to Saraswati Vilasa females as a class. Among the diseases, lunacy has already been referred to. Other deseases expressly mentioned are leprosy (Vishnu) and elephantiasis (Devala). Yajnavalkya has a general ground acjikitsya roga (incurable disease) of which consumption is given as an illustration by the Mitakshara, and Narada has a similar general ground deerghteeraroga obstinate or agonizing disease. There is some difference of opinion as to some of these defects, whether they should be congenital. Sir Thomas Strange distinguishes between infirmities, such as blindness, deafness, dumbness, etc., which to disqualify must be coeval with birth, and disqualifying diseases such as leprosy, etc., which the Hindu religion regards as visitations not only for sins committed in a preceding state, but also for sins committed in this life; and, therefore, such visitations are not necessarily congenital in order to disqualify.

Of the smriti writers, the only one who expressly excludes a leper is Devala, whose text runs as follows:—"When the father is dead, an impotent man, a leper, a madman, an idiot, a blind man, an outcaste, the offspring of an outcaste, and person wearing the token (of religious mendicity) are not competent to share the heritage." Manu excludes one who is a nirindriya, that is, devoid of an organ, after expressly mentioning eunuchs and outcastes, one born blind or deaf, an insane, an idiot and a dumb man, but a leper is not referred to by him. See Buhler, Ch. IX, sloka 201. Apostamba and Vasistha do not exclude him. Narada excludes persons afflicted with a chronic or acute disease (see Sacred Books of the East, Volume 33, page 194), or, as otherwise translated, an acute or agonizing distemper. Atrophy or pulmonary consumption is instanced as a chronic, and leprosy as an acute, disease in the Ratnakara: Yajnavalkya and Vishnu exclude persons suffering from an incurable disease. So far as leprosy is concerned, the later Hindu Law books generally lay down that to be a ground of exclusion it must be of the sanious or ulcerous and not of the anæsthetic type: see Janardhan Pandurang v. Gopal Pandurang(1), Ananta v. Ramabai (2), Rangayya Chetti v. Thamkachalla Mudali (3), Helan Dasi v. Durga Das Mundal (4), Bhagaban Ramanuj Das v. Ram Praparna Ramanuj Das (5), and Kayarohana Pathan v. Subbaraya Thevan (6).

The presumption of Hindu Law is against disqualification and the burden of proof of disqualification lies on a person who seeks to exclude another who would be an heir, should no cause of exclusion be established. It is also settled that where it is contended that a person is excluded from inheritance by reason of disease, the strictest proof of the disease as will disqualify him at the time the succession opened will be required. On the findings arrived at by the two Courts below and on the authorities referred to, with which we are in agreement, we must hold that the plaintiff was not disqualified from inheriting the properties which belonged to his grandfather after the death of Sreemati Bhagabati Dasi. In this view of the matter the two contentions advanced on behalf of the appellants fail, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Malabar Law—Tarwad—Karnavan—Renewal of kanom before date of expiry—Bona fide dispute as to validity of prior renewal—Compromise, whether binding on Tarwad—Powers of Karnavan—Costs when payable by successful party.

The karnavan of a Malabar tarwad executed a kanom demise for consideration in renewal of an existing tenure, before the date of its expiry in settlement of a bona fide dispute with the kanomdar relating to the validity and binding character of a still earlier renewal by which the existing tenure was created by a prior karnavan. In a suit by the senior anandravan of the tarwad to set aside the demise as not binding on the tarwad;

Held, that the kanom having been executed in settlement of a bona fide dispute between the parties and for the benefit of the estate so as to avoid litigation was valid and binding on the members of the tarwad and it was immaterial that the sum received by the karnavan was spent for the benefit of the estate or misappropriated by him for his own purposes, provided there was no collusion between him and the defendant. If a person compromising with a karnavan is satisfied that the compromise is a bona fide one and that, in the ordinary course, a benefit will accrue to the estate, it is not necessary for him to prove that it actually did so as against the allegation that the benefit which should have accured was fraudulently misappropriated by the karnavan unless the person compromising is a party to the fraud and acts in collusion with the karnavan. [p. 479, cols. 1 & 2.]

A renewal of a kanom by the karnavan of a Malabar tarwad before the expiry of its period when such renewal is to take effect from the date of its expiry is not valid unless it is shown to be for necessity, for it is impossible to predicate some years in advance what the state of affairs will be when the original kanom expires and what incidents should be imposed, in order to make the demise beneficial. Where, however, the karnavan obtains the consent of the kanomdar to a premature renewal to take effect at once, it does not necessarily follow that it is an act of bad management even if necessity be not proved, for the karnavan has full powers of management and is in a position to decide whether the transaction is a prudent one or not. [p. 477, col. 1; p. 478, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—The facts of this case are as follow: A previous karnavan of the plaintiff's tarwad granted a kanom of Rs. 12,000 and odd to one Thappan Nair on the 11th of May 1896 and subsequently on the 30th of June 1902 executed a puramkanom deed for Rs. 1,350, under which the original term of 12 years granted in 1896 was extended for another 12 years from 1908. Thappan Nair was, accordingly, entitled to hold the property until 1920. Subsequently Thappan Nair transferred Rs. 6,000 of the kanom to defendants Nos. 1 to 3, the first defendant being the wife of Raman Nair and the daughter of Thappan Nair. The remainder of the kanom passed to Raman Nair, the husband of the first defendant. In 1914 the 10th defendant, who had then become the karnavan, executed two demises one in favour of Raman Nair and one in favour of defendants Nos. 1 to 3. These demises renewed the existing tenure for a period of 12 years from their date, namely, until 1926. The plaintiff, the senior anandravan of the tarwad, has now brought suits to set aside these demises as not being binding on the tarwad. The case against Raman Nair has already been disposed of and we are now only concerned with the demise in favour of defendants Nos. 1 to 3. In the lower Court the plaintiff's suit has been dismissed and he appeals.

It has been consistently held in this Court that renewal of a kanom by a karnavan before the expiry of its period, when such renewal is to take effect from the date of expiry, is not valid, unless it is shown to be for necessity, and it is the appellant's contention that the plaint demise, is, in effect, a renewal of the puramkadam deed granted in 1914 for a period of six years from 1920, and that, therefore, unless the necessity for the transaction is proved, it is not valid and binding on the tarwad. The case is not, however, quite so clear as that; for in all cases of renewal a fee is payable by the tenant to the tarwad varying in amount according to circumstances. Ordinarily, therefore, the renewal fee is payable every 12 years and in this case the tarwad would not have been entitled to a renewal fee until 1920, whereas a fee of Rs. 500 for this document was received by the karnavan in 1914, although the prior demise, for which also a fee had been paid did not expire until 1920. The practical effect of the demise, therefore, is that the tenant has a right to hold the property for an additional six years but has, in fact, paid a renewal fee for 12 years. The tarwad loses the right to redeem for a period of six years but gains, what is, in effect, the renewal fee payable for six years.

The demise has been justified by the defendants on three grounds: (1) that it was executed for necessity; (2) that, as the puramkadam deed was an invalid deed and it was a renewal before the date of the expiry of the kanom, the kanom was the only valid demise in existence in 1914, and (3) that the demise was executed in settlement of a bona fide dispute between the parties. I do not think it necessary to discuss the first two grounds in this judgment, for I am satisfied that on the third ground the defendant must succeed. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were holding the property under the puramakdam demise of 1902, but the succeeding karnavan, the present 10th defendant, sent a notice in 1914 demanding surrender on the payment of the kanom amount and value of improvements. A reply was sent by the first defendant's husband, a High Court Vakil of some standing, to the effect that the kanom of 1896 had been renewed by the puramkadam deed of 1902 and that the 10th defendant had no right to evict until the expiry of the term under the latter. In the first place, it is contended for the appellant that there was no real dispute between the parties and that, therefore, this demise cannot be treated as in the nature of a compromise and, consequently, that, if there was a dispute, the compromise not being entered into for the benefit of the tarwad is invalid. A large number of cases have been cited as to the circumstances in which a compromise entered into by disqualified owner should be recognised as binding on the estate, but most of these refer to the case of compromises entered into by widows. A karnavan's position is, however, somewhat higher than that of a Hindu widow and, in fact, a karnavan of a Malabar tarwad has, in some respects, greater powers than a manager of a joint Hindu family, as pointed out in Ponambilath Parapravan Kunhamod Hajee v. Ponambilath Parapravan Kutiath Hajee (1). He has full powers of management of the family property and is even allowed to give kanoms of the tarwad property without necessity, although a kanom amounts to an alienation of immoveable property. This power is, therefore, one which is not possessed either by a widow or by a manager of a Hindu family except in cases of necessity. The chief reason for holding that necessity must be proved in order to validate a renewal executed before the expiry of the subsisting kanom is, that it is impossible to predicate some years in advance what the state of affairs will be when the original kanom expires, and what incidents should be imposed in order to make the demise beneficial. In this case, however, the plaint demise is to take effect at once and, therefore, the above consideration does not come into play. If, therefore, a karnavan can obtain the consent of a karnamdar to a premature renewal to take effect from that date, in my opinion, it does not necessarily follow that it is an act of bad management even if necessity be not proved, for the karnavan has full powers of management and is in a position to decide whether the transaction is a prudent one or not. A somewhat different view has been taken in Vatavatta Raman Nair v. Kenath Puthen Vittal Kuppassan Menon (2) but in the present case I think the validity of the demise can be supported on other grounds, without deciding this question here. I think that, even if we take it that the karnavan's powers in this instance are not higher than those of a Hindu widow the transaction can be justified on the ground that it was entered into bona fide for the benefit of the tarwad (vide Ramsumran Prasad v. Shyam Kumari (3). The puramkadam demise of 1902 was outstanding and, as it had been granted before the expiry of the prior demise, it would be invalid unless it were granted for necessity.

It was, of course, alleged that it was granted for necessity, but that was a fact which the defendants would have to prove. On the other hand, if they did prove it, the defendants would be entitled to hold without payment of any further renewal fee till 1920. By compromising the claim, therefore, the 10th defendant, allowed the defendants to remain in possession for a further period of 12 years on payment of a renewal fee which would not become due until six years later. There is evidence that there were other disputes also. The first defendant's husband who, as I said before, is a High Court Vakil of some standing, says, "The 2nd defendant repudiated the demise under Exhibit XXI and threatened to recover the property on the strength of Exhibit XX. Therefore, I consented to give up the unexpired period secured by Exhibit XXI and to accept a fresh demise from him." "..I was induced by my friends Mr. P. Kannan Nair and Mr. M. Narayana Menon to give up my term and take a renewal." These two friends are a High Court Vakil and a First Grade Pleader respectively, the former being the Vakil for Raman Nair, the first defendant's husband, and the latter the 10th defendant's Vakil. They were both examined and they both said that there was a dispute about this demise and also disputes with regard to their property and that, in settlement of these disputes, the plaint demise as well as the demise in favour of Raman Nair, was executed.

The next question is, whether that compromise was entered into for the benefit of the estate, the allegation being that the karnavan entered into the compromise in order to secure the renewal fee for his own purposes, and that, as there was no present necessity for the money, it was an improvident action, that it alienated the property for an additional six years. No doubt, it is technically an alienation, but, if the circumstances of the case are thoroughly examined, it is only an alienation in the technical sense. The property was outstanding on mortgage for nearly Rs. 14,000, which apparently the karnavan was not in a position to pay, and the only effect of the renewal was to put it out of the power of the tarwad to redeem the property for a further period of six years and it was very unlikely that they would be in a position to redeem at an earlier date, nor is it apparent that an earlier redemption would be beneficial to the tarwad. No additional money was borrowed and, consequently, no fresh burden imposed on the tarwad, but, on the contrary, a sum of money was received for the benefit of the tarwad. Taking this circumstance into consideration and the fact that litigation was avoided by the compromise, it appears to me that the transaction was certainly entered into bona fide and for the benefit of the estate. I am not prepared to accept the contention that it is necessary for a contracting party to prove that the estate did, in fact, actually benefit and, therefore, the suggestion that the money paid to the karnavan was appropriated by him for his own purposes and that the estate did not benefit at all need not be taken into consideration. If the contracting party is satisfied that the compromise is a bona fide one and that, in the ordinary course, a benefit will accrue to the estate, it is not necessary for him to prove that it actually did so as against the allegation that the benefit which should have accrued was fraudulently misappropriated by the karnavan. A contracting party cannot presume that there will be a fraudulent misappropriation and, unless he is a party to that fraud and acts in collusion with the karnavan, he is entitled to protection. Whether, therefore, the 10th defendant did or did not spend the money received by him for the benefit of his tarwad is in this case immaterial, as it is not alleged that there was any collusion between defendants Nos. 1 to 3, and the 10th defendant in this respect. The money was paid to the karnavan for the benefit of the tarwad, and, consequently, the transaction was one beneficial to the tarwad, although, subsequently, that benefit was misappropriated by the karnavan.

On these grounds I think that the Subordinate Judge's decision is correct and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Devadoss, J.—I agree.

As regards the memorandum of objections we do not think that a successful party should be made to bear the loser's costs, save in exceptional cases, such as when his false contentions have been the cause of unduly swelling his opponent's costs. That is not the case here. We accordingly direct, in modification of the Subordinate Judge's order, that each party do bear his own costs in the lower Court and also of the memorandum of objections.

Appeal dismissed.

—Two appeals—One appeal dismissed as time-barred—Decision, whether res judicata qua other appeal—Refusal of Appellate Court to entertain other appeal—Miscarriage of justice—Irregularity—Revision.

The right of a party to appeal in one out of two cases simultaneously decided must be recognised especially where it does not involve the setting aside of any decree held by the opposite party which has become final by reason of non-appeal. [p. 484, col. 1.]

A porprietor left a Will bequeathing the whole of his property to his two daughters. On the strength of this Will the daughters alienated some land to one person and a house to another. The brother of the deceased proprietor brought two suits for possession alleging that the testator had no power to make a Will and that no title was conferred by it on the alienors. The issue in both the suits was the same. They were heard and decided together by a single judgment which was recorded in the case relating to the land. In the case relating to the house a formal order referring to this judgment was made. The alienors appealed against the decree given in the suit relating to the land. The appeal against the decree given in the suit relating to the house was filed out of time. The Divisional Judge dismissed this latter appeal as time-barred and then held with regard to the appeal regarding the land suit that no appeal could lie because by reason of the dismissal of the other appeal, the only issue had been finally decided and constituted res judicata, and dismissed this appeal also. The alienors preferred an application for revision;

Held, (1) that the refusal of the Divisional Judge to entertain the appeal on the ground that his jurisdiction to hear it had been ousted by reason of the operation of the law of res judicata was wrong and amounted to a miscarriage of justice; [p. 481, col. 1.]

(2) that the miscarriage amounted to an irregularity within the meaning of the law governing revisions; [p. 481, col. 1.]

(3) that the fact that no application for revision had been lodged against the dismissal as time-barred, of the appeal respecting the house, did not debar the Court from entertaining this revision; [p. 484, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The material facts of this case are these. A deceased proprietor left a Will bequeathing the whole of his property to his two married daughters. The daughters, on the strength of the title conferred by the Will, alienated some land to one person and a house to another. Against these alienations the brother of the deceased proprietor lodged two suits for possession on the ground that the testator had no power to make a Will, and that no title was conferred by it upon the alienors. One suit related to the alienation of the land, and the other to the house. The issue in the two suits was the same, namely; as to whether or not the Will was operative. They were heard together and decided on the 28th of February 1922 by a single judgment. The judgment was given in full in the case relating to the land, and in the case relating to the house a formal order referring to the other judgment was recorded. On the 11th of April 1922 the alienors lodged an appeal in the Divisional Court against the decree given in the suit relating to the land. On the 22nd May 1922 they lodged another appeal against the decree relating to the house. This latter appeal was not instituted within time, but it was urged before the Additional Divisional Judge that an extension should be allowed on the ground that the appellants' Counsel was under a bona fide misapprehension that there was only one judgment to be appealed against. On the 17th of June 1922 the Additional Divisional Judge passed orders on both appeals. He took up the appeal regarding the house first and, overruling the contention that there was a ground for an extension of time, dismissed the appeal as time-barred. He then passed orders upon the appeal regarding the land suit. He held that no appeal could lie because, by reason of his dismissal of the other appeal, the only issue between the parties had been finally decided and constituted res judicata as between the parties to the appeal then before him. He, therefore, dismissed also the appeal in the suit regarding the land.

The appellants have now preferred in this Court an application for revision against the dismissal of the appeal in the land suit. A preliminary objection is taken by the plaintiff-respondent that this is not a case in which revisional jurisdiction can be exercised. He quotes my own ruling in a recent case published as Akhi v. Hazratgul (1) to the effect that a wrong decision on the question of res judicata is not a valid ground for interference on revision, unless the decision is so manifestly illegal and inequitable as to amount to a miscarriage of justice. The nature of that case, however, was not the same as that now before me. The question of res judicata had been fought out between the parties in the original suit, and the question related to the decision of the suit itself. The point was one which had been fully adjudicated upon, and in which there was no question of the case as a whole not having been fully tried. In the present case, however, the finding of the Additional Divisional Judge amounts to a refusal to entertain the appeal at all on the ground that his jurisdiction to hear it has been ousted by reason of the operation of the law of res judicata. It appears to me that, if the decision of the Divisional Court can be shown to be wrong, there has been a miscarriage of justice which legitimately amounts to an irregularity within the meaning of the law governing revisions in this Province. To deprive a party of his right to be heard at all upon an appeal by reason of a wrong decision upon a technical point must necessarily amount to a miscarriage of justice. I consider, therefore, that it is incumbent upon me to decide the question as to whether or not the Divisional Court was right in dismissing the appeal on the ground that it was res judicata by reason of its own order dismissing the other appeal as time-barred.

Two separate positions which may be taken up by the petitioners are to be distinguished. The first is based upon the assumption that, as the appeal in the house suit was time-barred, the existence of that appeal must be ignored altogether, and that we must regard the case as one in which there had been two simultaneous decrees passed upon a decision on the same issue, and in which one has been appealed and the other has not. The question for decision is, whether a person against whom two simultaneous decrees of this kind have been passed is obliged to appeal against both. There has been, on this subject, a certain conflict of authority which appears still to exist. The rulings of the Allahabad High Court, Zaharia v. Debi (2), Dakhni Din v. Ali Asghar (3) and Anant Das v. Udaibhan (4), are all quoted as authorities for the view that, unless an appeal is lodged in both suits, the decree which has not been appealed against remains in operation, and that its existence ipso facto bars any fresh adjudication by the Appellate Court upon the same issue. This view appears to be partly based upon the interpretation of the wording of section 11, Civil Procedure Code, and partly upon the practical results which would ensue from an adoption of the contrary view. Explanation I to section 11 recites that "the expression 'former suit' shall denote a suit which has been decided prior to the suit in question, whether or not it was instituted prior thereto." It is argued that, if a suit is decided and not appealed against, the decree in that suit is final from the date on which the decree was passed. The decree in the other suit ceases ipso facto to be a final decree once the appeal was lodged. The issue, then, so far as regards the appeal only amounts to lis pendens and not res judicata. When, however, the appeal comes before the Appellate Court, it is confronted by the fact that there is already in existence a decree of a date prior to that upon which the appeal is now to be decided. This may be said to be a purely technical view of the strict wording of the law. The High Court of Allahabad, however, was governed by other considerations. It was represented that, if the Appellate Court accepted the appeal and reversed the decree appealed against, there would be two conflicting decrees in operation at the same moment, and execution would arrive at an impasse, and that it is impossible that two equally binding orders of a Judicail Court of a contrary nature should exist side by side. A contrary view, however, has been taken by other High Courts notably by the High Court of Calcutta in Abdul Majid v. Jew Narain Mahto (5) and Mariamnissa Bibi v. Joynab Bibi (6), and by the Punjab Chief Court in Rahim Bakhsh v. Fakhar-un-nisa (7). and Jogal Kishore v. Chammo (8). This view also was followed by my predecessor in the present Court in an unpublished judgment Amir Khan v. Shamdas (Civil Appeal No. 21 of 1916). In some of the suits to which these rulings refer, the facts were quite parallel to those of the present case. One related to suits by rival pre-emptors in which the unsuccessful pre-emptor had appealed against the dismissal of his own suit but had failed to appeal against the decree granted to his rival. In other cases also simultaneous suits related to a single property. The learned Counsel for the respondent has quoted Nur Muhammad v. Jamun (9) as being on all fours with the present case, but I cannot see that it is. In that case there were two suits respecting the same property, one for a declaration and one for possession. No appeal was lodged in the suit for declaration but an appeal was lodged in that for possession. It was held that, by reason of the decision in the declaratory suit, there was res judicata which barred the hearing of the appeal in the suit for possession. Here, again, the subject-matter of the two suits was the same. Now, it appears to me that the test is really a very simple one. It is obviously impossible that two distinct and conflicting orders by Judicial Courts, which are both fully operative, can co-exist. I quite agree that in such a case execution would be impossible. I can also understand that, even if there were not a question of execution, two contradictory orders could not co-exist, governing a title in the same property, But I fail to see that in a case, such as the present, the acceptance of the appeal by the Additional Divisional Judge in the case of the land would have produced this anomalous result. There seems to me to have been a distinct confusion between the decision on an issue and the decree which embodies the order of the Court. If the Divisional Court had accepted the appeal, it might have reversed the finding on the issue as to the validity of the Will, and this finding would have prevailed against the finding of the Trial Court so far as regards the question of custom which governed the validity of the Will. On the other hand, it would not have annulled the decree which was passed for actual possession of the house. The decree-holder would have been perfectly entitled to execute his decree for possession, because the operative order of the Court was simply one for possession. It seems to me perfectly reasonable that, if a person is sued for possession of a number of properties, and if a decree is granted against him in respect of them all, he may elect to abandon his claims to some of these properties and face the existence of a decree against him. The operation of these decrees might be regarded as a penalty for his neglect or apathy in not challenging more than one of the decrees. His right to challenge one decree may, however, subsist and, so far as regards the mere question of anomaly or inconvenience, it cannot be siad that he is not entitled to save one portion of the property if he can.

The above, however, only disposes of one aspect of the case, namely, the argument which is based upon the anomalous results which would follow if the right of appeal in one out of two simultaneously decided cases is conceded. There is also the argument that there has been a decision by a competent Court of the material issue upon which alone the decision is based in a former suit between the same parties litigating under the same title. If we regard alone the decision of the two suits by the First Court, it is difficult to see how a simultaneous decision can be regarded as a former decision. As regards the position of the Appellate Court, I must agree with the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Abdul Majid v. Jew Narain Mahto (5) and Mariumnissa Bibi v. Joynab Bibi (6). The existence of two separate findings upon a single issue is really, as has been pointed out, a legal fiction. There has been, in actual fact, a single decision. It cannot really be said that, once an appeal has been lodged against this single decision, it remains operative and unchallenged merely because it is formally repeated in a suit simultaneously decided between the same parties. Rahim Bakhsh v. Fakhar-un-nisa (7) and Jogal Kishore v. Chammo (8) deal with cross suits. It appears to me that the case for a single appeal is even stronger where we are dealing not with cross-suits, but with suits lodged by the same person in respect of different properties proceeding on the same contentions. In a cross-suit it might at least be argued that the decree passed in favour of the opposite party cannot be affected because a plaintiff appeals only against the dismissal of his own suit. He is obliged in his appeal to attack not only the finding on the issue between the parties but also the decree held by the opposite side. Where, however, a defendant has been unsuccessful in resisting two suits brought against him in respect of two different properties, he does not, when he challenges the finding on the issue, in any way attempt to annul the decree which has been passed against him in the suit in which he has not appealed. If we follow the principle adopted by the Punjab Chief Court and by the Calcutta High Court, that a party to simultaneously decided cross-suits may legally appeal in only one of them, it follows a fortiori that the defendant must be able to appeal in one out of two simultaneously decided suits when he has suffered decrees upon the same facts in respect of two separate properties. I hold, therefore, that the defendants in this case had the right to appeal to the Divisional Court and to obtain an adjudication in the land suit without necessarily appealing in the case of the house suit.

A second line, however, is taken up by the learned Counsel for the respondent. He argues that we cannot ignore the appeal preferred after time to the Divisional Court against the decree passed in the house suit, and that, even if the right to appeal in one out of two simultaneous suits be conceded, we are here dealing with appeals which have been instituted in both the suits. He contends that the appeal in the house suit had also the effect of removing finality from the order of the Trial Court, and that it reduced the dispute between the parties, as in the case of the other appeal, from res judicata to lis pendens. He urges that when the Additional Divisional Judge dismissed the appeal against the decree for possession of the house as being time barred, he must be held to have adjudicated upon the appeal and to have confirmed the decree of the First Court, and that, having once done this, his own order constituted res judicata which debarred him from adjudicating upon the same facts on the other appeal. I must, of course, accept the argument of the learned Counsel for the respondent in one respect, namely, that Explanation I of section 11 applies to appeals equally with suits, and that it is quite immaterial that the appeal in the land suit was presented first. At the same time, the argument is, in other respects, open to two objections. In the first place, the Additional Divisional Judge in dismissing the appeal as time-barred, cannot be said to have adjudicated upon the appeal at all. It is true that the decision of a suit ex parte or under O. XVII, r. 3, has been held to be equally operative to create res judicata as any other decision, but I am unable to see how it can be said that the order of an Appellate Court dismissing an appeal as time-barred, which amounts to a refusal to entertain it by reason of a defect in procedure only, can be said to amount to an adjudication upon the issues. It is perfectly true that the dismissal of an appeal ex parte does confirm the order of the Firt Court, but it cannot be held to do more than this. It is not in itself any confirmation of the correctness of the finding by which the order was arrived at. It appears to me that there is only one way in which the dismissal of an appeal as time-barred can be regarded, and that is that it puts the parties into exactly the same position as if no appeal had been lodged at all. We are, therefore, thrown back upon that aspect of the case with which I have already dealt, namely, the right of a party to appeal in one out of two cases simultaneously decided. I have already held that this right must be recognized, especially in cases where it does not involve the setting aside of any decree held by the opposite party which has become final by reason of non-appeal. There is a second and even more serious objection to the view that the Appellate Court, by dismissing one appeal as time-barred, deprives itself of the power of adjudicating in another appeal upon an issue involved in the dismissed appeal. On the respondent's own argument the presentation of a time-barred appeal has the same effect as an appeal within time. It also, he contends, reduces the finding of the First Court from res judicata to lis pendens. The Appellate Court, therefore, has before it two pending appeals. Now, it was perfectly open to the Appellate Court to hear first the appeal which was within time. It might have accepted this appeal upon the merits, and it might have set aside finally the finding by the lower Court on the issue which was appealed against. In that case it could not possibly be said that the finding of the Appellate Court was not a final one. It would then have to take up the question of the time-barred appeal. It would have been open to it either to extend the time and entertain the appeal, or to refuse to do so. Its refusal to entertain that appeal could not possibly be said to have the effect of annulling the orders which it had already passed upon the appeal which was within time. To assume, therefore, that the rejection of the time-barred appeal operates to prevent the Appellate Court from hearing the appeal which was within time is to assume that a party can be deprived of his rights by a wholly fortuitous contingency over which he has no control. Such a view of the law can only be described as impossible. In other words, the dismissal of a time-barred appeal must operate in the same way as if no appeal had been lodged.

It remains to consider a third argument which has been adduced. It is urged for the respondents that the present Court is itself debarred in entertaining this revision by reason of the fact that no application for revision has been lodged against the dismissal, as time-barred, of the appeal respecting the house. I am unable to follow this argument. It can only rest on the assumption that there is res judicata which debars this Court from re-opening a particular issue. The issue before this Court in the revisional proceedings is simply the correctness or otherwise of the finding of the Divisional Court that it could not entertain the appeal which is the subject of this revision because it had dismissed another appeal as time-barred. The fact that no application has been lodged against the dismissal of the appeal as time-barred, does not operate to confirm or give finality to any question which is now before this Court. I must, thererfore, overrule this objection.

The learned Counsel for the respondent also opposes the application on the grounds of equity and convenience. He urges that, even if the appeal is remanded to the Divisional Court for disposal on its merits, the result will be the same as the petitioners have no serious case. I can hardly enter here into the question of merits. The point is that the appeal has never been heard on the merits at all. Further, when considerations of convenience or equity are invoked, Courts must necessarily be in favour of the adjudication of any dispute upon its merits as against any purely technical defect. Again, so far as I can judge, the petitioner, in failing to appeal within time against the other decree, was clearly not actuated by any mala fides. The mistake appears to have been one on the part of his Counsel who had failed to notice that, although there was a single judgment, there were really two decrees. The mistake may imply even gross carelessness, but it was clearly a perfectly honest mistake. It is one no doubt for which the petitioners must be made to suffer but they do actually suffer, for they have lost their entire right to challenge on appeal the decree passed against them in respect of the house. The anomaly of depriving a person of his right to appeal in respect of one property, because he has carelessly failed to do so in respect of another property simultaneously adjudicated upon, might indeed be illustrated by a hypothetical case. It is possible to conceive that a large number of suits might be simultaneously decided, the questions at issue in all being precisely the same, some of which related to extremely valuable property and one to a property of comparatively small value. The judgment-debtor might omit by inadvertance to lodge an appeal in respect of this one small property. He would, of course, by this omission suffer the loss of that property, but it could hardly be consistent that he should not only be punished for his mistake by that loss, but that he should ipso facto lose his entire right to appeal in respect of property which might be of extreme value. The penalty which he would incur would be so out of all proportion to the mistake which had been made, that it is hardly conceivable that it could be recognized as inevitable by Courts of Justice.

On the above findings I hold that the Divisional Court was entitled to hear and to adjudicate upon Appeal No. 200, and that it has wrongly refused to entertain it upon its merits. I, therefore, set aside the order dismissing that appeal and direct that it be decided upon its merits by the Divisional Court. Stamp on revision will be refunded. The costs of this proceeding will be borne by the respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an execution second appeal arising under the following circumstances:—

A compromise decree was passed on the 14th of August 1917 in favour of Purnanand and Bhagwan Ram against Sital Singh and others, judgment-debtors, under which Rs. 2,950 were to be realized by sale of certain hypothecated property, but in case the judgment-debtors paid Rs. 2,500 to the decree-holders within three months of the date of the decree, the judgment-debtors and their property would be released from all liability under the decree or, in other words, the decree for sale would cease to exist.

On the 30th November 1918 the present application was put in by Baijnath, a transferee of the decree from the original decree-holders, for a decree absolute for Rs. 850, the balance alleged to be due under the decree on the allegation that the judgment-debtors had already paid Rs. 2,100. The judgment-debtors preferred an objection to the preparation of the decree absolute on the ground that they had paid the whole amount of the decree in the following manner:—They had paid Rs. 25 to the original decree-holders on the 6th of November 1917, that is, within the three months allowed by the decree and obtained an extension of time up to the 2nd of December 1917 to pay the balance and that on the 29th of November 1917, that is, within the extended time allowed by the decree-holders, they paid Rs. 2,500 to them, and thus the whole decree was satisfied in the manner agreed upon between the parties. This objection was allowed by the learned Subordinate Judge and the respondent's application for preparation of a decree absolute was dismissed.

On appeal by the decree-holders the learned District Judge has agreed with the First Court in holding that the arrangement set up by the judgment-debtors had been proved, but he disallowed the objection of the judgment-debtors on the ground that the preparation of the final decree was a step-in-execution of the preliminary decree and as the settlement pleaded by the judgment-debtors had not been certified to the Court, it could not be recognized in the execution department. He accordingly allowed the appeal and directled the preparation of the decree absolute for sale as prayed by the decree-holders. The judgment-debtors come here in second appeal and their contention is that the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has erred in holding that the proceedings for obtaining a decree absolute for sale are proceedings in execution. This contention seems to have force, and, having regard to the repeal of sections 88 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act and the enactment of O. XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procdedure (Act V of 1908), the proceedings to get a decree absolute for sale are not proceedings by way of execution of the preliminary decree. Such proceedings are not to obtain any order absolute for sale, as used to be the case under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, but they are prodceedings in the suit to obtain a final decree for sale, which would be the only decree capable of execution. This view of ours finds support from the case of Ramji Lal v. Karan Singh (1), where this matter has been fully discussed.

It is, however, urged by Dr. Katju on behalf of the respondents that, having regard to O. XXXIV, r. 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure, a payment like the one alleged by the judgment-debtors to have been made out of Court would not be valid and could not be recognized. In our opinion this contention must fail because the decree originally prepared was not prepared in strict accordance with the provisions of O. XXXIV, r 4, and hence O. XXXIV, r. 5, would not apply to this decree. It was a decree based on a compromise arrived at between the parties and the terms of the compromise were embodied in the decree. Strictly speaking, O. XXXIV, r. 5, has no application to such a decree. This view of ours finds support from the well-considered judgment of Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad in the case of Mangar Sahu v. Bhatoo Singh (2). There is nothing against public policy in the compromise arrived at between the parties in the present case on which the decree was based and we can find no provision of law which prohibits the payment of a compromise decree out of Court. There is, therefore, no bar to the judgment-debtors setting up and proving the adjustment set up here. Before a Court can pass a decree absolute for sale, it has to find out the amount which is due to the decree-holder for which a decree absolute can be passed. On the findings arrived at concurrently by the two lower Courts in this case, nothing is due to the decree-holders and the whole amount of the decree has been paid up according to the arrangement arrived at between the decree-holders and the judgment-debtors.

(2) 57 Ind. Cas. 473; 1 P. L. T. 416; 5 P. L. J. 672.

We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

Dr. Gokul Chand Narang, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Civil Revisions Nos. 830, 831 and 832 of 1922 are connected and shall be disposed of by one judgment. The Punjab Banking Company, Limited, Lahore, held three decrees against one Lachman Das, deceased. One was a decree for Rs. 5,434 and was obtained on the 17th of November 1898, the second was a decree for Rs. 1,494, and passed on the 22nd of February 1899, and the third was a decree for Rs. 1,909 dated the 9th of February 1900. Applications for the execution of these decrees were made from time to time but nothing was realised. Lachman Das having died, his son Shib Nath was brought on the record as his legal representative. He also raised a number of objections to the execution of the decrees but they were all decided against him. Shib Nath having also died on some date prior to 1910, Dhanpat Rai, the present respondent, was brought on the record as his legal representative. In 1910 the decrees were transferred to Gujranwala and on the 22nd of November 1910 applications were made for the execution of the decrees by the sale of some immoveable properties belonging to the judgment-debtor in that district. On the 30th of May 1916 the judgment-debtor filed certain objections which were disallowed on the 21st of January 1917 and it was ordered that the properties attached should be put to auction. On the 4th of February 1918, however, the sale which had already taken place was set aside as irregular, and a re-sale was ordered. On the 16th June 1920 Dhanpat Rai again raised certain objections with regard to the execution of the decrees which were set down for a hearing for the 19th of July 1920. On that date neither the decree-holder nor his Counsel was present at the time the case was called on for hearing, and the applications for execution were accordingly dismissed for default. It appears that before the date fixed for the hearing of the cases negotiations were going on between the parties for an amicable settlement the terms of which had practically been settled. On the 20th of July 1920, however, the judgment-debtor backed out of the compromise on finding that the applia tions for execution had been dismissed for default, and that the decrees had become barred by limitation. On the 15th of October 1920 applications for reveiw were made by the decree-holder, and it was prayed that the orders dismissing the execution proceedings for default be set aside. On the 10th of August 1921 these applications for review were converted into applications under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, and it was prayed that, even if the applications for reveiw were not maintainable, the Court should proceed to take action under the inherent powers possessed by it under the Code. These applications were dismissed by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge on the 15th of July 1922, and it is against these orders of dismissal that the present applications for revision are directed.

A preliminary objection has been raised by Dr. Gokul Chand Narang on behalf of the respondent that there is no question of jurisdiction involved in these cases and that revisions are consequently not competent. He also points out that the excercise of powers under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, is purely discretionary with a Court and that if the learned Subordinate Judge refused to excercise these powers their non-excercise is not a good ground for revision. In my opinion this contention is well founded and must prevail. There is ample authority for holding that the revisional powers of a High Court can be exercised only in cases in which the Court by which the case was decided appears to have acted in the exercise of a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to have exercised a jurisdiction vested in it, or to have exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. It will be observed, as pointed out in the Privy Council ruling reported as Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (1), that section 115, Civil Procedure Code, which corresponds in its wordings to section 44 of the Punjab Courts Act, applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise, or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it, and that it is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved. It is not disputed that in the present case the Senior Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to deal with the matter before him and that his decision is not liable to attack on the ground of the irregular exercise or non-exercise of jurisdiction or the illegal assumption of it. I must, therefore, confirm the orders passed by the Court below and hold that these revisions are not competent.

Mr. Jai Lal for the petitioner, however, relies on Bholu v. Ram Lal (2) and contends, upon the authority of that decision, that this Court ought to interfere on the revision side when the Court below has refused to exercise its powers under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure which, it is pointed out, is the only section applicable to a case of this kind. In my opinion that decision is no authority for holding that a revision is competent in such a case. What was held in that case was, that section 141 of the Code of Civil Procedure was not applicable to execution proceedings, and that an application for execution dismissed for default could be restored only under the provisions of section 151 of the Code. The lower Court in that case refused to exercise jurisdiction under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, and held that that section was entirely inapplicable. The High Court set aside the order of the Court below in revision and held that section 151 was applicable. It is clear that the present case stands on an entirely different footing. In the present case the Senior Subordinate Judge has held that section 151 was applicable and that he had jurisdiction to proceed under it, but that no grounds had been made out for the exercise of those powers on the facts disclosed in these particular cases. It is clear, therefore, that the decision relied on which was a case of the refusal to exercise jurisdiction under section 151 which lay vested in the Court below can possibly have no hearing on the present case where no question of jurisdiction arises and in which the only question is one of the exercise or the non-exercise of discretion by a certain Court. In the case of Sham Parshad v. Ram Chand (3) it was held that when the order passed by the lower Court was not, on the face of it, perverse or illegal the Chief Court would not on revision interfere with this order under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I am unable to hold in the present case that the orders passed by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge are perverse or illegal, and I decline to interfere with them on the revision side.

The petitions are accordingly dismissed but, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, I think that the parties should bear their own costs throughout, and I direct accordingly.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (5)—Execution of decree—Order by Court—Application for time—Step-in-aid of execution.

An order by an Execution Court fixing a date cannot be relied upon as a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, inasmuch as the step is not taken by the decree-holder; nor can an application by the decree-holder for further time be regarded as an application to the Court to take a step-in-aid of execution, so as to give a fresh start of limitation.

Kedarnath Dutt v. Harra Chand Dutt, 8 C. 420; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 268, Chalavadi Kotiah v. Poloori Alimelammah, 31 M. 71; 18 M. L. J. 46; 3 M. L. T. 329, distinguished.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order, dated 22nd September 1920, of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirupathur, in R. E. P. No. 300 (a) of 1920 (S. C. S. No. 11636 of 1900 on the file of the Court of Small Causes, Madras).

Mr. C. Narasimhachariar, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The question is, whether the execution application is in time; that is, when the last step-in-aid of execution was taken by the petitioner.

The facts are, that on 3rd May 1917, a warrant of arrest, issued at his instance, had been returned, the judgment-debtor not having been found. What is relied on by the petitioner as a step-in-aid of execution is that the Court passed an order in the following terms:—"Fresh steps, if any, by 10th May 1917." This order or the application, which I am asked to presume must have been made in connection with it, is relied on as a step-in-aid of execution. I agree with the lower Court that neither can be relied on in that way. The order itself is clearly not a step taken by the petitioner (decree-holder). It is impossible to say whether it was based on any application made or what the nature of that application was. On the assumption that there was an application for further time, that would not be a step-in-aid.

The petition is then argued on the ground that time really ran from 10th May 1917, on which date the execution petition then pending was dismissed. This is not in accordance with the wording of Art. 182 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act; and the only authority shown me for it is Chalavadi Kotiah v. Poloori Alimelammah (1) and Kedarnath Dutt v. Harrachand Dutt (2) followed therein. In Chalavadi Kotiah v. Poloori Alimelammah (1) the question was of an execution, which had been suspended owing to a bar to its proceeding and in which a strike off order of the well-known type was passed. The reasoning of the learned Judges is not fully stated. In fact, they give two alternative grounds for their conclusion and it is not clear to me that they meant to lay down a general principle which would involve a wide departure from the language of the Act. Kedarnath Dutt v. Harrachand Dutt (2) is a decision of a Single Judge. His reason for holding that the right to apply was still subsisting apparently was that the application was one in a pending suit. If so, that reason is not available to the petitioner in the present case, for the present application is not made in any pending suit or other pending proceedings.

(1) 31 M. 71; 18 M. L. J. 46; 3 M. L. T. 329.
(2) 8 C. 420; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 268.

The result is that the revision petition fails and is dismissed.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 2818 OF 1921.
February 10, 1920.
Present:—Mr. Justice Scott-Smith.
SAHIB DAYAL—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus
DHANPAT RAI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Lessor and lessee—Holding over—Damages.

A lessee who holds over contrary to the terms of his lease, is liable to the lessor for damages for the full term during which he has held over.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 22nd October 1921, varying that of the Sub-Judge, Amritsar, dated the 28th February 1921.

Mr. Des Rai Sawhney, for the Appellant,
Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the appellate order of the District Judge of Amritsar giving the plaintiff a decree for the ejectment of his tenant, the defendant, and for Rs. 200 on account of rent. The appeal to this Court is only for a reduction of the decree for rent by Rs. 165.

The defendnant was a tenant on a five years' lease at a rent of Rs. 35 a month, and the term of the lease expired on the 10th January 1920. On the 23rd of January the plaintiff sent the defendant a notice that he should quit the premises by the 27th of March, corresponding to the 10th of February 1920, and saying that if he did not do so he would be liable to pay rent at the enhanced rate of Rs. 200 a month. The defendant did not vacate the premises in accordance with the terms of this notice and hence the plaintiff claimed a sum of Rs. 200 on account of rent for one month from 10th January to 10th February 1920. The appellant's Counsel contends that he was not bound to quit unless and until he recieved a notice of fifteen days ending with a month of the tenancy. He has referred to section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, and to Pirbhu Dial v. Ram Chand (1) in which it was held that should it be found that the tenant has held over wilfully and contumaciously, double the original rent would be a fair amount to fix for the term for which the tenant held over. For the other side Mr. Tek Chand has also referred to various authorities, but, in my opinion, none of these are in point. In the present case the parties are bound by the conditions laid down in the original lease dated the 10th of January 1915. In that it was clearly stated that after the expiry of the term of lease the lessor, if he wanted the lessee to quit, was to give him one week's notice, and if the lessee quitted the premises in accordance with the notice well and good, otherwise he would be liable to pay rent at the enhanced rate entered in the notice. In accordance with the terms entered in this lease the plaintiff sent the defendant a notice on the 23rd of January, which he admitted to have received on the 25th of January 1920. This notice gave the defendant time up to the 10th of February, i.e., a period of ten days within which to vacate; in other words, it gave him ten days instead of the seven days agreed upon the original lease. As the defendant did not vacate by the 10th of February he was liable to pay rent for that month at the enhanced rate. It is really a matter of penalty, and the only question which appears to me to arise is this, is the sum of Rs. 200 demanded by the plaintiff reasonable under all the circumstances of the case? In my opinion the plaintiff is entitled to the full sum of Rs. 200. The extra Rs. 165 above the original rent may be considered as damages, the defendant having failed to quit the premises. I have come to this conclusion, after considering the fact that defendant not only did not vacate the premises but raised a false defence in the suit. I do not say that the plaintiff will be entitled hereafter to rent of Rs. 200 per mensem for the full term during which the defendant has held over. I merely hold that the plaintiff is entitled to the sum of Rs. 200 for the period from the 10th of January to the 10th of February 1920

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

VENKITESWARAYYAN AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS Nos. 2, 3—APPELLANTS

ASWATHA NARAYAN AN OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 64, O. XXI, r. 57—Execution of decree—"Default of decree-holder," meaning of—Dismissal of execution application on account of absence of bidders—Attachment, whether continues—Application, fresh, for attachment and sale—Order for production of schedules—Default—Dismissal of application—Alienation by judgment-debtor—Auction-sale under fresh application, position of.

In execution of a money-decree certain properties of the judgment-debtor were attached and their sale was ordered, but the execution petition was dismissed as there were no bidders at the sale. A second execution petition was then filed with a prayer for attachment. The decree-holder was ordered to produce schedules. This was not done and the petition was dismissed. A day before the date of this dismissal the judgment-debtor granted two mortgages on the properties which were the subject of attachment. A third execution was thereafter filed, the properties were attached and sold and the sale was confirmed. In a suit by the mortgagee to enforce the mortgage as against the auction-purchaser:

Held, that neither the first nor the second order of dismissal of the execution petitions was on account of 'default' of the decree-holder within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code, and, therefore, on the date of the mortgage, the original attachment on the first petition was subsisting in favour of the plaintiff and, this being so, the alienation was void as against the auction-purchaser.

The default of the decree-holder under O. XXI, r. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be constituted either by his absence from the sale or his failure to bid at the sale, but must be a default in the discharge of some obligation laid on him by the Code or the rules framed under it, and the order in respect of which the default is contemplated must, further, clearly be one which could be made after attachment and not one which is appropriate only before attachment. [p 491, col. 2; p. 494, col. 2.]

Order XXI, r. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code is applicable only to cases in which the stage of attachment has been passed and in which the Court is conscious that the next stage is intended and is not applicable to an abnormal case where no one concerned, neither the party nor the Court, is conscious of the true facts and where, if there is in fact an attachment, the party and Court are not aware of it and are proceeding as though there were none. [p. 494, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court, South Malabar, in Appeal Suits Nos. 17 and 5 of 1920, preferred respectively against the decrees of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Palghat, in Original Suits Nos. 280 and 395 of 1919.

Messrs. C. V. Ananta Krishna Aiyar and C. S. Swaminathan, for the Appellants.

The Advocate-General and Mr. K. R. Narayana Aiyar, for the Respondent.

Second appeal coming on for hearing on the 27th of October 1922, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Second and third plaintiffs-appellants, are here to contend that the lower Appellate Court erred in holding that Exhibit C was executed during the pendency of an attachment, effected by a decree-holder now represented by the sixth defendant. The lower Appellate Court, no doubt, was right in holding that the attachment under Exhibit I was not terminated by the dismissal, with which the proceedings closed. It is only necessary to say with regard to that conclusion that it might have been reached more shortly, because the default of the decree-holder referred to in O. XXI, r. 57, cannot, in our opinion, be constituted either by his absence from the sale or his failure to bid at the sale, but must be a default in the discharge of some obligation laid on him by the Code or the rules framed under it.

Having reached that conclusion, however, the lower Appellate Court did not go on to consider the result of the subsequent proceedings in Exhibit II. Exhibit II was another application for attachment, which was dismissed on 20th July 1914, because the decree-holder failed to produce the schedules called for. A day before that dismissal Exhibit C had been executed, it is urged, during the pendency of an attachment. The plaintiffs' contention is that the attachment under Exhibit I was terminated by the order of dismissal of 20th July 1914 and that Exhibit C executed the day before that dismissal would become effective, when the attachment came to an end. In this connection reliance has been placed on the reference in section 64, Civil Procedure Code, to a transfer made pending an attachment, as void, as against all claims enforceable under the attachment, the argument being that, when the attachment ceases and there are no longer any claims enforceable under it, there is no reason why the transfer should not be regarded as valid. On the question raised in connection with the proceedings evidenced by Exhibit II the lower Appellate Court has expressed no opinion.

We must accordingly call on it for a revised finding on the question whether Exhibit C is void because of the order of dismissal included in Exhibit II. The lower Appellate Court's finding must be returned within six weeks and seven days for objection. It will on the return of the finding be open to the respondents to argue the question raised by Issue No. 7 at the trial.

Second Appeal No. 2128 of 1920 will stand adjourned pending returns of the finding in Second Appeal No. 2127 of 1920.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of South Malabar submitted the following FINDING:—The facts which are admitted are as follow:—Fifth defendant obtained a small cause decree against one Kunhi Krishna Menon, and attached his rights in the suit property on 19th January 1914. (Execution Petition No. 113 of 1914, Exhibit I.) The property was attached by 9th February 1914 and sale was ordered; the execution petition was dismissed on 22nd April 1914 as there were no bidders at the sale. Again, on 10th July 1914 an execution petition was filed (Execution Petition No. 1011 of 1914, Exhibit 2. Petitioner was ordered to produce schedules; he did not do so, and the petition was dismissed on 20th July 1914. On 19th July 1914 the day before this petition was dismissed, Kunhi Krishna Menon granted a melcharth (Exhibit C) to plaintiff. A third execution petition was filed on 14th August 1914 (Execution Petition No. 1227 of 1914, Exhibit 3). The property was attached by 5th September 1914 and was sold on 13th November 1914 and the sale was confirmed. The question is whether the melcharth (Exhibit C) is void under section 64, Civil Procedure Code. Their Lordships have held that the attachment made under the first execution-petition (Exhibit I) was not terminated by the dismissal of the petition for the reason that O. XXI, r. 57 did not apply to that dismissal and have called for a finding whether the melcharth, Exhibit C, is void by reason of the dismissal of the second petition (Exhibit 2).

2. As the attachment made in the course of the first execution-petition subsisted after the dismissal of the petition the prayer for attachment in the second execution-petition was a surplusage. The petitioner was ordered to produce schedules presumably for sale proclamation, he failed to do so, and the petition was dismissed. If this had been the first petition it would be clear that the petition was dismissed by reason of his default. But here I think that there was no default. The attachment made on the first execution-petition subsisted. The fact that in the second petition the petitioner asked again for an attachment does not mean that he abandoned the first attachment. It means merely that he made a prayer which was in fact unnecessary. The first petition, it has been held, was wrongly dismissed. It was in fact not dismissed at all, within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 57. As it was not dismissed, the call for schedules was unnecessary, for it i seen from Exhibit I the first petition that all the papers necessary for sale had been produced. Therefore, in failing to produce schedules, the petitioner did not default (in the words of their Lordships) in the discharge of an obligation laid on him by the Code or the rules, and consequently O. XXI, r. 57 does not apply to the dismissal of the second petition and upon its dismissal the attachment made under Exhibit I did not cease.

3. Under section 64, Civil Procedure Code, where an attachment has been made any private transfer of the attached property contrary to the attachment is void as against claims enforceable under the attachment. Here, attachment in Execution Petition No. 113 of 1914 had been made on or before 9th February 1914, it was subsisting on 19th July 1914, when the property was transferred under Exhibit C and it did not cease on the dismissal of the petition on 20th July 1914. The attachment under Exhibit I cannot be held to have been abandoned by reason of the third application for attachment made in Exhibit III for that application was again mere surplusage. Accordingly my finding is that Exhibit C is void.

These second appeals came on for final hearing on the 22nd of March 1923 after the return of the finding from the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial in Second Appeal No. 2127 of 1920, and the cases having stood over for consideration till this day the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The appellants, second and third plaintiffs, sued for redemption on two documents, Exhibits C and D. The defence at present material was that Exhibits C, and D were taken during the currency of an attachment of the property by the fifth defendant contesting respondent here, who has since become the owner of that property by purchase from the purchaser at the Court-sale, which subsequently took place. Before the remand we decided that the fifth defendant's attachment was subsisting no withstanding the dismissal of the fifth defendant's execution-petition on the 22nd April 1914. We have now to deal with the lower Appellate Court's finding on remand, that the attachment was not terminated by the order of dismissal on a subsequent execution-petition, passed on 20th July 1914. The importance of that is that, if there was such a termination of the attachment Exhibits C and D (it is not disputed) would, so soon as there was no attachment and no obstacle to their doing so, become binding on the property.

We agree with the lower Appellate Court's conclusion but not for the reasons it has given. For it held that there was no default by the decree-holder, fifth defendant, such as O. XXI, r. 57 contemplates, on the assumption that the failure to produce schedules, on account of which the execution-petition was dismissed, was a failure to produce schedules for the purpose of framing the sale proclamation and that it therefore was not a failure to comply with any order, which the Executing Court was entitled or bound to make. That assumption was untenable. For it is clear from the record that every one, the decree-holder and the Court, mistakenly thought that the previous attachment had been raised and that the stage at which schedules were necessary for framing the proclamation had not been reached. That is clear from the order on execution-petition, Exhibit II. There is first the order after its receipt, being that of 11th July 1914, "Pray batta for attachment," and next that of 14th July 1914 "Batta paid, produce schedules." There is no reference to any return of the warrant of attachment; and there is no doubt that attachment was thought necessary and so process had been filed and that no attachment had been completed. There was so far no question of the further stage of framing proclamation. Whether, if that stage had been reached, non-compliance with the Court's order to produce schedule would have been a default within the meaning of r. 57 need not be decided. It is clear that the lower Appellate Court has neglected the material evidence on this matter and that we must proceed on the footing that the schedules were required for the making of an attachment, such schedules being required for the affixture in various places and for the making of the proclamation by beat of tom-tom under r. 54 (2). An attempt has been made on behalf of the fifth defendant to contend that failure to produce them was not a default within the meaning of r. 57 and that the order of dismissal was, therefore, not passed under that rule. As we are deciding the case on another and wider ground, we need not pursue that. For we cannot accept the contention, because we think that either under the Code or in the exercise of its inherent power to make orders necessary for the prosecution of the petition before it the Court had power to require such schedules to be produced.

The wider ground on which we decide the petition is that, even so, the order cannot in the circumstances be regarded as having been made under r. 57. It is true that the conditions specified in r. 57 are at first sight satisfied. The Court was unable to proceed further with the application for execution. There was default by the decree-holder. The property had been attached in execution of a decree. But that does not entail that the section has in substance been complied with. No doubt the first six words of the section "where any property has been attached" are literally satisfied in the present case. But, we are not prepared to hold that such literal satisfaction is sufficient. It seems to us that the section as a whole is applicable only to cases in which the stage of attachment has been passed and in which the Court is conscious that the next stage is intended and is not applicable to an abnormal case, such as that before us, where no one concerned neither the party nor the Court was conscious of the true facts and where, if there was in fact an attachment the party and the Court were not aware of it and were proceeding as though there were none. That is clear from the nature of the procedure enjoined on the Court. Two courses are open to it, either to dismiss the application with the implication that the attachment ceased to exist, in which case what may be described as a quasi penal consequence shall be assumed, or for any sufficient reason to adjourn the proceedings to a future date. It would be contrary to all principle that the Court should be supposed to be making its choice between the two alternatives, one of which results in the imposition of a penalty when it is not aware of the true facts. The order in respect of which default is contemplated, must clearly be one, which could be made after attachment, not one, as here, appropriate only before it. Taking this view, we hold that O. XXI, r. 57 was not applicable to the present case or to the order of dismissal now under consideration at all.

Reliance is then placed on behalf of the plaintiffs on the fact that the order of dismissal was never set aside on appeal or, in the alternative, that the decree-holder by applying again for attachment must be taken to have abandoned or waived the attachment already made and still subsisting. As regards the absence of appeal we observe that the question whether an order was really passed under r. 57 and whether it has the implication referred to in the last sentence of that rule is in our experience always a difficult one, and it is perhaps to be desired that the rule should impose an obligation on the Court to express that implication clearly, so as to include in its disposal a clear expression of that implication, when it intends it. The difficulty is that the character of the order, which is made in many cases in the absence of the judgment-debtor, is not in controversy until after time has elapsed and it is necessary in some future proceedings to determine its effect. The argument before us, however, can be dealt with shortly. For, after our conclusion that the order of dismissal was not passed under r. 57 at all, it is immaterial that there was no appeal; for an appeal could have secured no purpose, when the order in question had not any effect on the previous attachment, which it was necessary to displace. As regards waiver, the answer is equally simple. For it is a general principle that there can be no waiver in ignorance of the existence of the rights alleged to have been waived.

Taking this view, we accept the finding and hold that the first attachment was never determined and that, therefore, Exhibits C and D, made during the attachment which never ceased have never, become effective.

This failing the appeal has been argued on another ground that Exhibit O, the order on a claim petition by these plaintiffs, sustained Exhibit D to the extent of Rs. 630 actually secured by it and that, therefore, the plaintiffs should have had a decree to obtain possession on payment of Rs. 630. This argument was taken very obscurely, if at all, in the grounds of appeal in this Court. It can be dealt with very shortly. First, the right to obtain possession was conferred by the melkanom, Exhibit C and not by the panayam deed, Exhibit D, which entitled the plaintiffs only to retain possession of the property as security for their money after possession had been obtained under Exhibit C. Next, Exhibit O did not sustain Exhibit D, as a mortgage with possession, which could be redeemed, but only directed the plaintiffs that the property should be sold subject to a charge under that document for Rs. 630. The plaintiffs cannot claim any different or further relief on Exhibit D, than Exhibit O allowed them.

The result is that Second Appeal No. 2127 of 1920 fails and is dismissed with costs of fifth respondent (sixth defendant). Second Appeal No. 2128 of 1914 must be decided on the same grounds and it is also dismissed with costs of first respondent-plaintiff.

Appeals dismissed.

Tadman v. Henman, (1893) 2 Q. B. 168; 5 R. 479; 57 J. P. 664, relied on.

Second appeal from a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, dated the 5th of April 1921, reversing that of the Additional Munsif, Allahabad, dated the 20th December 1918.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman (with him Pandit Jagjiwan Nath Takru and Munshi Sheo Prasad Sinha), for the Appellants.

Munshi Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit out of which this appeal arises can be stated very shortly as follows:—There is a small house in Katra, Allahabad City, standing within an area of 35 acres. This area is owned by His Highness the Maharaja of Jaipur. This small house was previously occupied by a woman called Musammat Sukharaji. She died about 1907. Before her death she had let the house to a man named Ramji Sahai. He continued to occupy it after her death. There was a man called Sukhu Nut with whom Sukharaji had been living as his mistress. On her death, Ramji Sahai continued to pay rent to Sukhu Nut. Then Sukhu Nut died. After his death Ramji Sahai paid rent to Musammat Raghunathi, who was a subsequent mistress of Sukhu Nut. When Musammat Raghunathi died she made a Will in favour of a man called Surjan Singh, the plaintiff-respondent in this appeal, by which she bequeathed him the house in question. We have it that Ramji Sahai vacated the premises on the 6th of October 1916. Three days after he had vacated the premises, Pandit Amar Nath took possession of them under the permission of the Maharaja of Jaipur, who claimed the house as having escheated to him after the death of Sukharaji. Surjan Singh instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises for the ejectment of Ramji Sahai and Pandit Amar Nath. The suit was instituted on the 14th of March 1918 about eighteen months after Ramji Sahai had left the premises. The object, apparently, including Ramji Sahai as a defendant when he palpably could not be ejected, was to raise a plea which has been decided in the plaintiff's favour by the lower Appellate Court. Pandit Amar Nath naturally put up the defence that he was holding with the permission of the Maharaja and, in consequence, the Maharaja was joined as a defendant. Ramji Sahai took no interest in the decision of the suit. He would not take any interest in it as he had left the premises. He contested the suit, but not seriously. The Maharaja of Jaipur and Pandit Amar Nath took as their defence the obvious defence as to the title of Surjan Singh. The Maharaja claimed by escheat but he was content to put the plaintiff to proof of his title. There a plea was put forward that the Maharaja and Amar Nath could not question Surjan Singh's title under section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act. This plea of estoppel has found favour with the lower Appellate Court but it does not find favour with us. It is perfectly clear that neither the Maharaja nor Amar Nath was a tenant of the house in question, nor did they claim through Ramji Sahai who was the tenant, and, further, there was then no tenancy. There can be no estoppel against them. The learned Subordinate Judge has found collusion between Ramji Sahai and Amar Nath. On the facts, as he has found, there was no collusion at all. In any circumstances, the ordinary doctrine which was laid down in Tadman v. Henman (1), that third persons not claiming possession of land under the tenant are not estopped, his application. The Maharaja and Amar Nath, who are the sole appellants in this case, have every right to put Surjan Singh to proof of his title. They put him to proof of his title in the Court below and there can be no doubt as to the fact that he has been unable to establish any title. The question of the estoppel of Ramji Sahai is of no importance in the decision of this appeal, for he has not appealed. We, therefore, decree this appeal and direct that Surjan Singh's suit against His Highness the Maharaja of Jaipur, and Pandit Amar Nath stand dismissed and we direct that Surjan Singh pay his own costs in this appeal and the costs of the Maharaja of Jaipur and Pandit Amar Nath in all Courts.

KARIM BAKSH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 17—Father, when ought not to be appointed guardian of his son.

Where a father neglects to maintain a son, and it appears that the welfare of the son would not be promoted by his being placed under the guardianship of his father, the latter ought not to be appointed guardian.

First appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ludniana, dated the 22nd November 1921.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Beni Parshad Khosla and Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—This is an appeal against an order by the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ludhiana, under the Guardians and Wards Act appointing Karim Baksh the guardian of the person of his own son, Wazir Alam, aged 14 years. The appellant is the boy's maternal grandmother. It is argued that on account of the applicant's previous conduct towards his son the order should not have been made. For the respondent it has been contended that the application was one under section 25 of the Act and that what was done was to order the return of the minor to his father who is his natural guardian. A decision of the Madras High Court, reported as Mohideen Ibrahim v. Mahomed Ibrahim (1), is quoted as showing that such an application is competent and should be granted in cases like the present. It is not clearly stated in Mohideen Ibrahim v. Mahomed Ibrahim (1) whether the father in that case had been appointed guardian under the Act. In any case, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge is specific in saying at the end of the order under appeal: "I, therefore, appoint the applicant as guardian of the person of the minor," and there is no express direction under section 25 to the ward to place himself in the custody of the guardian.

The boy stated that he wished to remain with his maternal grandmother, but the Court thought that he did not seem to be old enough to form an intelligent opinion. The Court also held that the fact of the father having re-married and the order of maintenance having been passed against him had no effect in depriving him of his right to be guardian of his own son. It was further remarked that the minor had not been sent to any school; that he did not appear to be making much progress at his trade of tailoring since he had been an unpaid apprentice for six years, and that from his appearance he did not look to be well cared for.

The main point in appeal is in respect of the maintenance order, the full significance of which the Court below has not perhaps appreciated. It is admitted that an order was passed under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, on the 6th July 1910, directing the applicant to pay Rs. 3 per mensum for the support of this boy. The record of this case has been burnt, but it is admitted that out of Rs. 126 due as maintenance for the period 6th March 1918 to 6th March 1922 the applicant had failed altogether to pay some Rs. 30 and only paid Rs. 97-8-0 after four years' delay. This evidences very serious neglect by the applicant of his son. He appears to have divorced the mother.

The boy wants to go on being a tailor and does not wish to live with his father and if he is fourteen years of age he is old enough to know something about his own mind. He is learning a trade and if his father takes him away and sends him to school, as is suggested he might do, the boy's prospects in life would not necessarily be improved. The father is said to be a Ticket Collector on Rs. 50 per mensem and there is a step-mother and a second family.

It does not seem that the welfare of the minor will be promoted by his being placed under the guardianship of his father in view of the latter's past neglect, and there appears to me to be something in the contention that the application was filed by the father merely in order to escape payment of arrears of maintenance for which steps were being taken against him.

I accept the appeal and set aside the order of the lower Court with costs.

Under the Mitakshara Law a father has the right to dispose of his son's interest in ancestral immoveable property for the payment of his own debts not contracted for immoral purposes, and such interest is, therefore, "property" within the meaning of section 3 (a) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and, on the father being adjudged insolvent, vests in the Receiver. Mr. Srikrishandas Lulla, for the Plaintiffs.

Messrs. Kimatrai Bhojraj, Nathumal Asanand and Isardas Odhoram, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by the minor sons of one Motumal Dalumal by their next freind Ghanshamdas Dalumal for a declaration that a dwelling house situated on plot No. 57, Survey Sheet A, 23 Napier Quarter, Karachi, is their joint ancestral property and that of their father Motumal, and that the shares of the plaintiffs in it are not liable for the debts of the latter, and for the partition of the same. Defendant No. 1 is the Official Receiver in whom the estate of Motumal on his being adjudicated insolvent has been vested; defendant No. 2 is the wife of Motumal, and defendants Nos. 3 A, and 3 B and 3 C are according to the plaint joined as co-defendants as they claim to be mortgagees of the said property. Plaintiffs contend that their share in the aforesaid property is not liable for the alleged debts due to defendant No. 3 or for any debts at all due by their father, on the ground that the business done by the father was neither ancestral nor for the benefit of the joint family, that the property sought to be partitioned was not asset of the business and that the debts, if any incurred, do not justify the father during his lifetime to mortgage the property.

The main contention of defendant No. 1 is that, even if Motumal and the plaintiffs constitute a joint Hindu family, the said Motumal being the manager of the family and the father of the plaintiffs, the whole joint family property including the interest of the plaintiffs vest in him. Written statements have also been filed by the other defendants except defendant No. 2 but it is unnecessary to refer to them at this stage.

After some evidence had been recorded on behalf of the plaintiffs, Mr. Kimatrai, representing defendant No. 1, invited me to dispose of the following issue in the first instance, for, in his view, if I came to the conclusion that the property of which partition is sought was vested in the Official Receiver on Motumal being adjudicated an insolvent, it would conclude the whole suit and obviate the necessity of any further evidence. Mr. Lulla, for the plaintiffs, acceded to the suggestion as he agreed that if the property in suit has vested in the Official Receiver, his suit is unmaintainable, and the Pleaders for the other defendants concurring. I am confining my decision to this issue only.

This issue is as follows:—

Did the co-parcenary property vest in this Official Receiver on Motumal being adjudicated insolvent?

In addressing arguments on the legal aspect of the case, Mr Kimatrai has proceeded on the assumption that the property in suit is ancestral, and that the business carried on by Motumal was his separate business, and that the debts contracted by him are his private debts. His arguments may be formulated as follows: The Hindu Law imposes on the son the duty of paying the debts of his father to the extent of the former's interest in the co-parcenary property, provided the debts are not of an illegal or immoral character, and the creditor of a father, though he may obtain a decree against the father alone, can enforce such decree by attachment and sale of the whole co-parcenary property including the son's interest therein. The father, therefore, to satisfy an antecedent debt not incurred for an unlawful or immoral purpose may mortgage or sell the whole co-parcenary property including the son's interest therein without the consent of the son, and such mortgage or sale binds the son's interest in the property, though the son was not a party to it. It is not alleged that the debts contracted by Motumal were tainted with immorality or were of an illegal character. Therefore, argues Mr. Kimatrai, when Motumal was adjudicated insolvent the whole of the co-parcenary property under section 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act vested in the Official Receiver, and property is defined in section 2, clause (d), of the same Act as including any property over which a person has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit, and as Motumal had the power of disposal over the property in suit for debts not of an immoral or illegal character, this property became vested in the Official Receiver by virtue of the adjudication order.

Mr. Lulla's answer to this argument is the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) decided by the Privy Council. He strongly relies on the following passage in the judgment at page 444*: "While the father, however, remains in life; the attempt to affect the sons' and grandsons' shares in the property in respect merely of their pious obligation to pay off their father's debts, and not in respect of the debt having been truly incurred for the interest of the estate itself, which they with their father jointly own,.....must fail; and the simplest of all reasons may be assigned for this, namely, that before the father's death he may pay off the debt, or after his death there may be ample personal estate belonging to the father himself out of which the debt may be discharged. In short, responsibility to meet the father's debts is one thing, and the validity of a mortgage over the joint estate is quite another thing. Accordingly, the case founded merely on pious obligation, and so strenuously argued before the Board, fails in the present instance by reason of the fact that Bhup Singh, who contracted the debt, is still alive, and that there is a concurrent finding by both the Courts below to the effect that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the debt of Rs. 200 for which the mortgage was granted, was incurred for any legal necessity or benefit to the estate." Relying on this decision Mr. Lulla has contended that as Motumal is alive, plaintiffs' interest in the co-parcenary estate remains intact and cannot be affected by Motumal's liabilities, during the latter's lifetime. In other words, payment of the father's debts cannot be enforced by suit against the sons during the father's lifetime.

The judgment of the Privy Council has evidently given rise to much anxious thought in some of the High Courts in India which had to consider it. For if the logical result of this judgment is to declare the non-liability of the son to pay his father's debts during his father's lifetime, it involves a departure from several rulings of the Privy Council itself and of High Courts in India.

The case of Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (2) held that the sons could not set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt or against his creditor's remedies for their debts if not tainted with immorality. The father was alive in this case and it was held that the purchaser bought the entirety of the estate which could lawfully be sold to him. In the cases of Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (3) and Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (4) the creditor's right is held to be co-extensive with the father's power to satisfy his antecedent debts not tainted with illegality or immorality and the right exists equally in the lifetime of the judgment-debtor as well as after his death. It was said by Lord Justice Knight Bruce in the former* case:

"The freedom of the son from the obligation to discharge the father's debt, has respect to the nature of the debt and not to the nature of the estate, whether ancestral or acquired by the creator of the debt." As late as 1916, in the case of Sripat Singh v. Prodyot Kumar (5), it was laid down by the Privy Council that, "By the Mitakshara Law a judgment against the father of the family cannot be executed against the whole of the joint family property, if the debt in respect of which the judgment has been obtained was a debt incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. In every other event it is open to the execution creditor to sell the whole of the estate in satisfaction of the judgment obtained against the father alone." The father against whom the decree was obtained was still alive at the date of execution proceedings in this case. Now, it is very significant to observe that there is no explicit pronouncement of dissent in Sahu Ram's case (1) from the earlier judgments of the Privy Council if it was intended to lay down the law for future guidance that the liability of the sons does not arise during the lifetime of the father and their shares in the ancestral property cannot be proceeded against so long as the father is alive.

The Privy Council case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) has been considered in the case of Vinjanampati Peda Venkanna v. Vadlamannati Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (6) and it was there held that this case does not overrule the long line of decisions as to the right of the creditor to a Hindu father to sue the father and the sons for an antecedent debt incurred by the father for purposes neither illegal nor immoral and to attach and to bring to sale the interest of the sons as well as of the father in the execution of the decree in such a suit, and Kumaraswami Sastry, J., said: "The decision in Sahu Ram's case (1) makes it clear that it is the primary duty of the father to pay debts incurred by him not for any family necessity but for his own purposes and that the pious duty of the son, assuming that it arises at all during the lifetime of the father, arises only if his father's share or his self-acquisitions are insufficient to meet the debts." Sahu Ram's case (1) has again been discussed in Hanmant Kashinath Joshi v. Ganesh Annaji Pujari (7). It was held in this case that the shares of the sons in the ancestral property could be attached and sold during the lifetime of the father for the satisfaction of his personal debt not tainted with illegality or immorality. Justice Shah at page 628* of his jugment, observed, "That the main point in Sahu Ram's case (1) related to the antecedency of the mortgage-debt, the debt not having been incurred prior to or independently of the mortgage. Undoubtedly, this point is decided and the conflict of decisions on that point is settled. But there was no question in that case if the remedy of a decree-holder during the lifetime of the father and the judgment cannot be taken as deciding this point." There is a natural reluctance to hold that the effect of the judgment in Sahu Ram's case (1) is to override in effect the law that has prevailed for over 40 years, the more so as there is no express indication in the jugment to that effect and if the judgment is to be taken as overriding the current of decisions hitherto in force, it must result in a serious shock to the right of creditors who have been acting on the faith of these decisions ever since 1874 when the case of Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (3) was decided. No doubt, previous to the judgment in this last case by the Privy Council, it was considered as pointed out in the case of Laljl Sahu v. Fakir Chand (8): "That the pious duty of paying the father's debts did not arise until after his decease, and that by the judgment of the Privy Council it had been established that it was the pious duty of the son to pay his father's debts out of the ancestral estate even in the father's lifetime," and in the view of some of the Judges the law as it stood anterior to the judgment of the Privy Council in Girdharee Lall's case (3) was more in accord with the law as propounded by the Smriti writers and their commentators.

Now, as far as the case before me is concerned, it appears to me unnecessary to discuss the question whether the judgment of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram's case (1) was mainly confined to reconciling the divergence of opinion in the various High Courts as to the true meaning and scope of "antecedent debt" in the Hindu Law or whether it was intended to lay down the law for our guidance as to the exemption of the son's liability for his father's debts in the latter's lifetime, for the Privy Council appears to have restricted this exemption to cases where there is a possibility of the father paying of his debts before his death or where after his death there may be ample personal estate belonging to the father himself out of which the debt may be discharged, and it may be argued that this possibility discharges a Mitakshara son from the pious obligation to pay the debt of his father whether it has been incurred for a family necessity or not. But in the present case the father has been adjudicated an insolvent and this normally excludes the possibility of his discharging his liabilities or of the possession of personal estate sufficient to discharge them. Therefore, as the debts were not incurred for illegal or immoral purposes, and the father is unable to discharge them out of his personal estate, the pious obligation rests on the sons to discharge their father's debts even in the latter's lifetime.

The question now arises, did the property in suit vest in the Official Receiver on Motumal being adjudicated insolvent and, if so, what is its effect on this suit? But before answering this question it is necessary to consider whether the father's power of disposal of ancestral property for his antecedent private debts not being of an immoral character falls within the purview of the definition of the word "property" as explained in section 2 clause (d) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The word "property" has not been defined but is said to include any property over which or the profits of which any person has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit, thus certainly rendering the meaning of the word very comprehensive. Equally, the term "property" is not defined in the Transfer of Property Act but in the Full Bench case of Ram Shankar v. Ganesh Prasad (9) it was described as a word of very comprehensive meaning and reference was made to Lord Langdale's description of it as being "the most comprehensive of all terms which can be used, as it is indicative and descriptive of every possible interest which a party can have." Now, by section 28 of Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920, corresponding with section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, clause (2) states that: "On the making of an order of adjudication the whole of the property of the insolvent shall vest in the Court or in a Receiver" and the only restriction that is introduced is by clause (5) of section 28 that the property of the insolvent shall not include any property which is exempted by the Code of Civil Procedure or by any other enactment for the time being in force from liability to attachment and sale in execution of a decree. Mr. Lulla contended that the power of the father to dispose of the ancestral property could not be transferred to the Official Receiver but in the case if Fakirchand Motichand v. Motichand Hurruckchand (10) it was held that, "Under the Mitakshara Law a father has the right to dispose of his son's interest in ancestral immoveable estate for the payment of his own debts not contracted for immoral purposes; and a vesting order, made under section 7 of the Indian Insolvency Act, vests that right in the Official Assignee who can, therefore, give a good and complete title to such ancestral immoveable estate to a puchaser. A substantially similar conclusion was arrived at in the case of Jagabhai Lalubhai v. Vijbhukandas Jagjivandas (11) and the principle of both these cases was approved and followed in the case of Rangayya Chetti v. Thanikachalla Mudali (12). No doubt, these cases were decided under the Indian Insolvency Act, but I can conceive no distinction in principle as to the applicability of the rule; and in the case of Harmukh Rai-Munna Lal v. Radha Mohan (13) a Divisional Bench of the Lahore High Court held in a case to which the Provincial Insolvency Act applied that under the Mitakshara Law father has the right to dispose of his son's interest in ancestral immoveable estate for the payment of his own debts not contracted for immoral purposes and such interest, therefore, is "property" within the meaning of section 3 clause (a) of the Provincial Insolvency Act and on the father being adjudged insolvent vests in the Receiver. This latter case is on all fours with the case with which I am concerned. In my opinion, therefore, the shares of the plaintiffs in the property in suit are effected by the vesting order consequent on the adjudication of their father Motumal as insolvent and the property in suit has wholly vested in the Official Receiver. The result, therefore, is that the plaintiff's suit is unmaintainable and must be dismissed but the parties are to bear their own costs in the circumstances of this case.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Atkinson.—In this case the annuity which is sought to be enforced is only Rs. 125 per annum. By no reasonable method of valuation can an annuity of Rs. 125 per annum be worth Rs. 10,000. The 110th section of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, applies to the value of the annuity which is sought to be recovered, not to the value of the property upon which that annuity of Rs. 125 is charged. Their Lordships think it right to call attention to the fact that the decision in the case which has been referred to, Radha Krishna Ayyar v. Sundaraswamier (1), apparently proceeded upon a supposed admission, which admission it now appears was really not made. In that case, too, the rent was Rs. 1,500 odd per annum, and there was nothing inconsistent or irrational in holding that the value of that rent was over Rs. 10,000. It was not seven years' purchase; whereas it is impossible that the annuity about which the controversy in this case has arisen can be worth Rs. 10,000. Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the appeal is incompetent and they will so humbly advise His Majesty. The appellants will pay the costs of the appeal.

Muhammadan Law—Marriage — Impotent person, definition of—Suit for cancellation of marriage —Wife, what must establish—Procedure—Expert evidence, value of—Finding based on opinion of experts, whether conclusive—Second appeal.

According to Muhammadan Law, a person is said to be 'impotent' if he is unable to have connection with a woman, though he has the natural organ; or if he is able to have connection with an enjoyed woman, but not with a virgin, or with some women but not with others. Whether the disability be by reason of disease, or weakness, or original constitution, or advanced age or enchantment, he is still to be accounted impotent with respect to her with whom he cannot have connection. [p. 5 5, col 1.]

Baillie's Muhammadan Law, Vol. I, p. 347, referred to.

The right of a wife to claim a judicial divorce on the ground of her husband's impotency is contingent on her succeeding to establish that she did not know of his impotency at the time of her marriage, and that it has not since then been removed; but the divorce must remain suspended for a year after the decree in order that it might be ascertained whether the defect is removeable. [p. 505, col. 2.]

A. v. B., 21 B. 77; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 54, relied upon.

A finding based on the opinion of experts is not necessarily a finding based on facts proved or directly demonstrated and may be interfered with in second appeal. [p. 505, col. 1.]

The opinions of experts are relevant but not conclusive as to matters to which they relate and where they materially differ, their value and sufficiency may legitimately form the subject of consideration and scrutiny despite the acceptance of any one of them by one Court or another. Plaintiff sued for the annulment of her marriage with the defendant alleging that he was impotent and that she came to know of this fact after her marriage. It appeared that she had lived with him for about six years but that her hymen was intact and there were also other signs of virginity. On the other hand, the medical evidence showed that the defendant was potent and quite fit for sexual intercourse:

(3) that if after the expiry of the above period she satisfied the Court that her husband continued to be impotent, the decree would be confirmed. [p. 506, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Aligarh, dated the 15th February 1922.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and Panna Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This and the connected appeal arise out of a suit brought by the husband for the restitution of conjugal rights and another brought by his wife for the annulment of her marriage with him. They were married on the 15th May 1914 when the woman was 13 years old and the husband about three or four years older. The woman lived in the house of her husband for about six years; but owing to subsequent differences she came away from his house and has been living with her parents since. Her allegation is, that her husband was impotent and that she came to know of that fact after her marriage. A certain amount of medical evidence was examined on either side. On a consideration of that evidence the Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the husband was impotent and that that fact was not known to the wife when she was married. The lower Appellate Court, however, thought that the medical evidence produced by the husband was entitled to a greater weight and it decreed the claim brought by the husband for conjugal rights and dismissed that brought by the wife for the annulment of the marriage.

The medical evidence adduced by the woman consisted of two Lady Doctors, one of whom Miss Massey, is an Assistant Surgeon in charge of the Dufferin Hospital at Aligarh. Her statement was that she examined the girl on the 13th July 1921 and she thought that she was a virgin, as her hymen was intact. She admitted that the presence of the hymen was not a conclusive proof of virginity in every case, but she explained that the hymen of this woman was complete and not torn in any way and that there were no symptoms, such as exist in rare cases, where, in spite of cohabitation, the hymen remains unaffected. The other Lady Doctor, who was examined, was Miss Bakhsh in charge of the Singhara Hospital at Hathras. She stated that she examined the woman on the 8th August 1921 and that in her opinion she was a virgin and has had no sexual intercourse with any man. She examined other parts of her body and found that the other symptoms noticeable were consistent with that opinion. On behalf of the plaintiff, Major Barber, at one time Civil Surgeon of Aligarh, was examined. He testified to his having examined the husband on the 15th June 1921 and deposed that he found no physical or mental defects in him, his genital organs perfectly formed, and his general health good; and he thought that he was capable of sexual intercourse. Lieut. Mathews, who succeeded as Civil Surgeon of Aligarh, examined the husband on the 18th July 1921 and stated that he was not incapacitated by any mental or physical disease from having sexual intercourse, that he found no malformation in his male organ, and that in his opinion he was normally capable of performing the sexual act. He further said that the husband had a partial erection before him. Lieut. Col. Ilias,, another Civil Surgeon of Aligarh, stated that he examined the husband on the 8th September 1921 and found that he was potent and quite fit for sexual intercourse. He further said that no disease or deformity was found in his male organ that could incapacitate him from sexual intercourse and that the man had an erection before him quite full.

Where there is so much conflict in medical opinion it is not always easy to find which opinion is to be accepted in preference to the other. A man may, however, be nominally or temporarily potent, due for instance to the use of certain medicinal drugs or other cause, or he may be potent as regards some women and not potent as regards his wife. The latter fact was acknowledged by the medical witnesses, and is also recognised by the Muhammadan Law. It is material in any circumstance to note that, according to the evidence of the Lady Doctors, the hymen of Musummat Altafan, the wife in question, was intact and there were no conditions such as exist in exceptionally rare cases where continual cohabitation might exist and the hymen may yet remain unaffected. If the hymen was intact and there was nothing to show that the physical conditions of the hymen were of an abnormal character very strong evidence is needed to rebut the presumption which arises from that state of things against the consummation of the marriage by the husband in spite of the wife having lived with him for about six years.

In Lewis v. Hayward (1) where, after a cohabitation of fourteen years, a woman presented a petition for a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of the man's impotence and the report of the Inspectors and the medical evidence showed that the woman was virgo intacta et apta viro and there was no apparent defect or malformation in the man and the Trial Court was satisfied that the marriage had never been completely consummated but was not satisfied that the non-consummation arose from the incapacity of the man, it was held by the House of Lords that the woman was entitled to a decree that the marriage was null and void on the ground that the cohabitation had been for a much more lengthened period than was required to raise the presumption against a husband and that the onus was thrown upon the husband either of disproving the facts or of showing by clear and satisfactory evidence that the result was attributable to other causes than his own impotency.

If the hymen is intact (not even lacerated) the probabilities, except in the case of females below the age of puberty are, according to Lyons, very strongly in favour of virginity; and the inference of virginity becomes almost certain, if the membrane is normal in position and structure and its apperture is of small size and undilateable and if, accompanying this condition of the hymen, the other signs of virginity are present (Lyon's Medical Jurisprudence Sixth Edition, page 264). One of the Lady Doctors examined has referred in her evidence to these signs of virginity, including the condition of the breasts, the vagina and the fourchette.

There was no allegation that the husband has had no access to the woman. On the other hand, the husband stated that he has had sexual intercourse with her on numerous occasions. The condition of the hymen, however, renders his story wholly improbable.

It is urged on behalf of the husband that the finding of the lower Appellate Court is a finding of fact and, however erroneous, it ought not to be disturbed; but a finding based on the opinions of experts is not necessarily a finding based on facts proved or directly demonstrated. It is a finding based on an examination and balancing of the opinions and views of experts or of the impressions produced on their minds by what they may have seen, heard, or observed, and as in the case of some species of evidence, about custom, the sufficiency of the facts observed or of the inferences or opinions, formed can always be examined to ascertain and determine their intrinsic value. The opinion of experts are relevant, but not conclusive as to the matters to which they relate; and where they materially differ, as in this instance, their value and sufficiency may legitimately form the subject of consideration and scrutiny despite the acceptance of any of them by one Court or another.

An impotent person is defined by the Muhammadan Law as one who is unable to have connection with a woman, though he has the natural organs and a person who is able to have connection with an enjoyed woman but not with a virgin, or with some woman but not with others, whether the disability be by reason of disease, or weakness or original constitution, or advanced age or enchantment, is still to be accounted impotent with respect to her with whom he cannot have connection, (Baillie's Muhammadan Law, Vol. 1, p. 347). The Muhammadan Law provides that where such is the case and a woman brings her husband before a Judge and sues him, demanding a separation on the ground of impotency, and the fact whether the woman is an enjoyed woman or a virgin is disputed, the case is to be adjourned for a year, and if, after the expiry of that year, the woman should allege that she is still a virgin an inspection by women is to be ordered, and if they should declare her to be an enjoyed woman, the word of her husband is to be taken with his oath; but if they should declare her to be a virgin her word as to non-intercourse is to be received without oath. The intention obviously is that, if such a claim is brought by a wife and is contested, an opportunity should be given to the husband to show that the charge against him is unfounded or that the alleged incpacity is removeable; and the woman should be required to appear again after a year before the Judge in order to establish her claim to the relief she asks for (Ibid p. 348). If the husband should consummate the marriage in the interval the petition of the wife requires to be dismissed after the lapse of the period fixed by the Judge. If he, however, fail in his marital obligation, the wife is entitled to a divorce (Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Vol. 1, page 598, and Tayabji's Muhmmadan Law, p. 251).

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the procedure enjoined by the Muhammadan Law in regard to the disposal of such a claim is not obligatory on the British Courts; but the provision aforesaid is intended to operate as a safeguard against error or a hasty or precipitate, annulment of the marriage where a removal of the complaint or a disproof thereof is possible and like the provisions relating to the preliminary demand requisite to validate a claim for the enforcement of the pre-emptive right, it must be treated as an essential part of the Muhammadan Law, regulating the annulment of marriages. In a similar case in which the parties were governed by the Muhammadan Law, A. v. B. (2), an interlocutory order was passed, postponing the annulment of the marriage for a year in order that the parties might be allowed an opportunity of resuming cohabitation during that period if that was possible.

The right of a wife to claim a judicial divorce on the ground of the impotency of her husband is contingent on her succeeding to establish that she did not know of his impotency at the time of her marriage, and that it has not since then been removed, but, as pointed out by Wilson, the divorce must remain suspended for a year after a decree in order that it might be ascertained whether the defect is removeable (Wilson's Muhammadan Law, 5th Edition, p. 145).

A prima facie case having been made out, the wife can be granted a decree nisi which can be confirmed after a year, in case the husband, if found to be physically unable to perform the marital obligation during the interval; but she must allow full access to her husband at all reasonable times whether she is living in the house of her parents or elsewhere but not outside Aligarh. In view of the present litigation, it would be risky and undesirable to compel her to leave the protection of her parents and live in the house of the plaintiff or his relations. An adjournment of the appeal really can serve no purpose, as the final enquiry has to be made by the Court of first instance.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and a decree nisi passed in favour of the paintiff, Musammat Altafan, for the annulment of her marriage with the defendant, Ibrahim, but this decree will not be made absolute till a year from this date, during which period, whether she lives in the house of her parents or elsewhere but not outside Aligarh, she should allow full access to the defendant at all reasonable times to exercise his marital rights as her husband. If after the expiry of the said period she satisfies the Court that the husband continues to be impotent and physically unable to perform his marital obligation she will be entitled to have this decree made absolute. But if she fails to do so the decree nisi will be discharged and the suit will be dismissed. An application for the above purpose will have to be made to the Court of first instance, to which the suit will be remanded for disposal in accordance with the directions above given. The costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in an action in ejectment. The disputed land was the subject-matter of a lease granted by the Chairman of the Municipal Corporation at Bogra to the appellant on the 28th April 1909. The document was registered on the 18th August 1909. The defendant went into occupation of the land and paid rent to the Municipality for a period of six years. On the expiry of the term of the lease the Municipality requested the defendant to vacate the land, but he insisted that the lease included a covenant for renewal which entitled him to continue in occupation. Thereupon the present suit was instituted on the 19th December 1918. The Courts below have decreed the suit on the ground that the lease granted by the Chairman was void, as such lease could have been granted only by the Comissioners at a meeting.

One of the questions in controversy in the Trial Court was, whether there was in fact a Resolution of the Commissioners at a meeting for the grant of this lease. The book which contains the minutes of the meetings of the Commissioners was produced and no Resolution could be traced therein. In these circumstances, the Courts below have inferred that there was in fact no Resolution to grant the lease adopted by the Commissioners at a meeting. The concurrent decisions of the Courts below have been challenged before us on two grounds, namely, first, that the Court of Appeal below should have held that the burden lay upon the Municipality to establish that the lease had been granted in contravention of the Statute and that the Municipality had failed to discharge this burden; and, secondly, that as rent has been received by the Corporation on the basis of the lease for a term of six years, the lease has been ratified by the Commissioners. In our opinion, there is no foundation for either of these contentions.

Section 34 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, provides that the Commissioners at a meeting may sell, let, exchange or otherwise dispose of any land not required for their purposes. Section 44 then provides that the Chairman shall, for the transaction of business connected with the Act, or for the purpose of making any order authorised thereby, exercise all the powers vested by the Act in the Commissioners. If this stood by itself it might have been interpreted to cover a case within the scope of section 34. But the proviso to section 44 ordains that the Chairman shall not act in opposition to or in contravention of any order of the Commissioners at a meeting or exercise any power which is directed to be exercised by the Commissioners at a meeting. The grant in this case by the Chairman would be void, unless the lease had been sanctioned by the Commissioners at a meeting. The burden clearly lies upon the defendant to establish that the requirements of the Statute were fulfilled. He has failed to discharge that burden. In the normal course of events the Resolution adopted at a meeting of the Commissioners must be recorded; and section 43 provides that minutes of the proceedings of a meeting of the Commissioners shall be entered in a book to be kept for the purpose and shall be signed by the President of the meeting, and such book shall be open to the inspection of the tax-payers. Under sub-section (5) of section 78 of the Indian Evidence Act, proceedings of a Municipal body in British India may be proved by a copy of such proceeding certified by the keeper thereof. The minute book has been produced and there is no trace of a Resolution on the subject. Consequently, the position is that there is no valid lease as was held in the case of Jagannath Saha v. Chairman of Berhampur Municipality (1).

On behalf of the appellant, a greivance was made that a stranger in his position could not be expected to be acquainted with the nature and extent of the powers of Municipal Corporations. There is clearly no force in this contention. As was explained by Alderson, B, in Macgregor v. Dover & Deal Raliway Company (2) where a Corporation is constituted by a Statute, all persons and Corporations are presumed to know the nature and extent of its powers. It was open to the defendant at the time when he took the lease, to make his position safe by insisting upon a copy of the Resulution of the Commissioners at a meeting, if such Resolution was ever adopted. It has finally been contended that as a rent was paid by the defendant to the Corporation for a period of six years, there was ratification by the Commissioners. There is no foundation for this contention. The transaction was ultra vires and could not be validated by ratification in the manner suggested.

We are consequently of opinion that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Presumption—Separation, proof of—Receiver, necessary conditions for—Effect of re-union—Members, whether bound by act of manager—Property acquired during separation, whether becomes joint after re-union.

The natural presumption of the Hindu Law is in favour of a family being joint and the burden of proving separation lies on the party alleging it. [p. 510, col. 2.]

For a re-union two things are essential; firstly, that one can re-unite with his father, brother or paternal uncle; and, secondly, that the re-union must take place after separation, so that the parties seeking to re-unite must have separated before the re-union. [p. 515, col. 2.]

Basanta Kumar Singha v. Jogendra Nath Singha, 33 C. 371; 3 C. L. J. 98; 10 C. W. N. 236, followed.

To constitute a valid re-union the parties should not only live in one mess and in one place and like one family, but they should again join each other's share of the property and remain in possession. [p. 517, col. 1.]

The effect of a re-union is to place the united co-parceners in the same position as they would have been in, had no partition taken place and the property of the united members stands on exactly the same footing as that of members who have always been undivided so that, upon the death of any one of the re-united members, his share will pass by survivorship to the remaining members and will not get into the hands of any undivided member so long as there are undivided members in existence. [p. 515 col. 2; p. 516, col. 1.]

All members of a joint Hindu family, whether minor or adult, are bound by the act of the manager or karta of the family unless they prove that the karta entered into transactions which were prejudicial to their interests and not for their benefit. [p. 519, col. 2.]

A property acquired during the separation by a member of the family will be presumed, after the re-union, to have been acquired out of the funds of the joint estate and the re-united members will be entitled to a share in it. [p. 519, col. 2.]

Prankishen Paul Chowdry v. Mothooramohun Paul Chowdry, 10 M. I. A. 403; 5 W. R. P. C. 11; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 609; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 164; 19 E. R. 1025, followed.

In a suit for partition it appeared that there had been a separation but subsequently the plaintiff and defendant, two brothers, had entered into an agreement whereby they had agreed to live together and to hold the property in certain specified shares:

Held, that there was no re-union in the sense that the two brothers became co-parceners of a joint Mitakshara family. [p. 517, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for partition between the members of the same family. The following geneology will show the relationship of the parties:—

NENA OJHA v. PARBHU DUTT OJHA.

Prabhu Datt Ojha (plaintiff No. 1) and Nena Ojha (defendant No. 1) are brothers. Plaintiff No. 1 is the father of plaintiff No. 2. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are the sons and defendants Nos. 5 to 11 are the grandsons of defendant No. 1. These defendants Nos. 1 to 11 are the principal defendants first party in the case.

Shorn of the details the plaintiff's case as laid in the plaint is that Gopal Ojha, the common ancestor of the family, had four sons: Nena Ojha, defendant No. 1, Prabhu Dutt, plaintiff No. 1 and Brahmadatt Ojha and Karamdat Ojha. They were all members of a joint Mitakshara family of which Gopal Ojha was the karta. Brahmadat Ojha died while he was a member of the joint family, in 1302 (1895); similarly, Karamdat Ojha died in 1308 (1901). The former left a widow Jagatarini Ojhain who is alive, and the latter two widows Phoolbati Ojhain (alive) and Jogmaya Ojhain and a son Dhairajya Nath Ojha who died childless. The surviving members of the family continued to be joint. Gopal Ojha died in 1313 (1906) and on his death the plaintiff and the defendants first party came into possession of the entire joint family property by survivorship. Nena Ojha from the lifetime of his father (Gopal Ojha) being the eldest son acted as the karta of the jont family of the plaintiffs and the defendants first party and from time to time acquired properties with the joint family fund. The plaintiffs have got half share in the properties described in Schedules I to VI. On 21st November 1914, the defendant No. 1 being a shrewd and cunning man and taking advantage of the simplicity of plaintiff No. 1 got an ekrarnama (Exhibit 2) executed by plaintiff No. 1 stating that it was a Mukhtearnama and that it would be necessary to enable defendant No. 1 to look after the interest of the family during the Survey and Settlement Operations, and the plaintiff No. 1 having confidence in defendant No. 1 did not acquaint himself with the contents of the document and signed and executed the same believing it to be a Mukhtearnama; that recently taking advantage of his management, defendant No. 1 began to sell the joint family properties without any family necessity and to appropriate the income therefrom, that the plaintiff then thought it wise to become separate from the defendant first party and asked defendant No. 1 to partition his half share and to render an account of the receipts and disbursements during the period of his management, that the defendants refused to partition stating that the plaintiff's share amounted to 1-4th of the family properties and referred to the said ekrarnama of the 21st November 1914 as having been executed by the plaintiff; that the plaintiff then took a copy of the document from the Registration Office and came to know of the fraudulent recitals therein, and hence the plaintiff instituted the suit for partition by filing his plaint on 1st February 1919, claiming partition of the properties by metes and bounds and to have khas possession thereof to the extent of 8-annas as his share in the properties.

Defendants Nos. 12 and 13 are defendants second party and have been impleaded on the allegation that defendant No. 1 has executed two kobalas in their favour without any legal necessity with regard to the properties in Schedule VII and property No. 7 in Schedule II, respectively. These defendants have not entered appearance in the case. The defendants Nos. 14 and 15 are alleged to be the farzidars of some of the properties in suit. Defendant No. 14 has filed a separate written statement admitting that he is the farzidar of defendant No. 1 with respect to one property and of defendant No. 4 with respect to another, the former belonging to the family of the defendants first party and the latter exclusively to defendant No. 4. Defendant No. 15 has not entered appearance. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 have filed a joint written statement to the same effect as the written statement of their father, defendant No. 1. The guardian ad litem of the minor defendants Nos. 4 to 11 has filed a separate written statement on the same lines. Thus, the written statement of defendant No. 1 is the chief defence in the case. He pleads limitation and want of cause of action. His material allegations are inter alia that plaintiff No. 1 became separate in 1305 (1898) from his father Gopal Ojha and his brothers Nena Ojha, defendant No. 1, and Karamdat Ojha, Brahmadatt Ojha having died in 1302 (1895) and out of the family properties took the properties in village Pota and some brit lands representing his 4-annas share and began to live with his family at Pota where he used to live even from before his separation and partition; that he had no concern with other properties of the family, which fell to the share of defendant No. 1 and his brother Karamdatt Ojha; that the sons of defendant No. 1 acquired properties with their own private funds which are in their separate possession as their kosal (self-acquired) properties; that the properties which defendant No. 1 sold to the defendants Nos. 12 and 13 were his own private properties with which the plaintiffs have no concern whatever. In his written statement the defendant further relied upon the ekrarnama (Exhibit 2) in support of the separation of plaintiff No. 1 and the allotment of the aforesaid properties in village Pota and the brit lands as his share, stating that it was executed by plaintiff No. 1 of his own free will and choice with a view to become united with defendant No. 1.

Upon the pleas taken by the defendants, nine issues were framed in the Court below. Issues Nos. 1 to 3 and 7 were decided in favour of the plaintiffs and they no longer arise in this appeal. The remaining issues are as follows :—

"4. Whether plaintiffs form members of a joint Hindu family with the defendants first party alleged by the plaintiffs? Are the plaintiffs entitled to the partition prayed for ?

"5. Whether there are any properties joint amongst the plaintiffs and defendants first party, what are the properties liable to be partitioned and what is the share of the plaintiffs in the same?

"6. Whether the ekrarnama dated 21st November 1914 is fraudulent and void as alleged by the plaintiffs?

"8. Whether defendant No. 1 is liable to render account to the plaintiffs ?

"9. To what relief, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled ?"

All these issues were decided by the Court below in favour of the plaintiffs. The Court below held that the plaintiffs and the defendants were joint in family and properties and that the ekrarnama (Exhibit 2) dated the 21st November 1914, is fraudulent and null and void. Accordingly, the Subordinate Judge decreed the paintiffs' suit directing partition of the properties, allotting to the plaintiffs 8-annas share therein. He also directed the appointment of a Commissioner to effect partition and to take accounts from each party with regard to the properties and the karbar in their charge from 1313. Aggreived by this decision the defendants have appealed to this Court.

The first question for determination in this appeal is as to whether there was any separation among the members of the family as alleged by the defendants. The onus to prove separation lies upon the defendants, the natural presumption of the Hindu Law being in favour of the family being joint. The parties have adduced both oral and documentary evidence. We have considered carefully the evidence in the case and the arguments advanced on both sides. The witnesses on behalf of the defendants prove that Prabhudat Ojha had been living in Pota for the last several years and that he was exclusively in possession of that property, has built a house there where his wife and children were residing, and that he seldom came to Rupaulia, the ancestral home of the parties, and that he ceased to have any connection with Rupaulia and other properties of the family, and he did not receive any income of these properties from 1300 to 1304 as the Court below found (D. W. No. 1). The lower Court further found that after the death of Gopal Ojha in 1313 (1906) the name of the plaintiff No. 1 was mutated with respect to the Pota properties alone and that of defendant No. 1 with respect to Rupaulia and other properties. The evidence in the case further shows that there was a separation in food and mess and in the dwelling houses and that the plaintiffs and the defendants have been carrying on separate transactions, acquiring properties in their names and disposing of the properties in their separate possession vide the zarpeshgi deeds, Exhibit F, dated 15th May 1906, Exhibit C, dated 20th February 1911, Exhibit D, dated 27th August 1913, Exhibit A, dated 29th May 1906 and Exhibit K dated 3rd August 1918. All these documents show that Prabhudat was separate in property and had no co-sharer. The learned Subordinate Judge, has dealt with them in detail so I need not refer to them further. He, however, says that they are not in themselves inconsistent with the jointness of the family and may have been due to the convenience of the parties. The learned Subordinate Judge relies upon Exhibit K (1), a mortgage-bond dated 19th January 1917, which describes the plaintiff No. 2 as a "co-sharer malik of Rupaulia" and the endorsement of the receipt of the principal and interest thereon by Prabhudat through the pen of Mahabir Ojha, his nephew. This was long after the ekrarnama (Exhibit 2) of 1914 when the re-union took place. The previous document showing separation and this document showing jointness, rather support the recital in the ekrarnama which will be discussed hereafter. The endorsement in Exhibit 1 dated 25th April 1914 relied upon by the learned Subordinate Judge has been satisfactorily explained. The entries in the Revisional Settlement of 27th February 1914, Exhibits 6 and 6 (a), with respect to some lands in Padamkher, showing the name of Prabhudat, may also be due to the maliks still retaining the name of Prabhudat. Exhibit 7 (a), judgment in a case under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, dated 25th August 1919, goes against the plaintiffs' case as the learned Subordinate Judge says, of jointness, but as observed by him much weight cannot be attached to it as the criminal case happened during the pendency of the present case. Taking the evidence as a whole, it inclines considerably in favour of separation and subsequent re-union. The oral evidence also points to the same direction. I need not refer to all the witnesses. I would, however, refer to only a few of them. The manner in which the separation took place has been stated by the following witnesses on behalf of the defendants Jagdhar Pandey (D. W. No. 14), Rijhan Singh (D. W. No. 19) and Gajadhar Ojha (D. W. No. 20). Jagdhar Pandey was the purohit of the family before partition. Now he is the purohit of the defendant's family since Prabhudat left the village and was residing at Pota. Gajadhar Ojha is an agnate of the family and Rijhan Singh is a resident of Siswa which is on the border of Rupaulia. These are all competent witnesses and are reliable.

Nena Ojha, Mahabir Ojha, Harnandan Ojha and Kishore Ojha, the defendants in the case, have also given evidence in proof of the separation of Prabhudat from the rest of the family. Nena Ojha says: "Prabhudat is separate from me from 1305. He began to live at Pota since 1300. He went there alone at first and his wife went to live with him later on." He gives the reason why Prabhudat separated from the rest of the family, thus: "He (Prabhudat) wanted to become separate from us in 1301 and 1302 as he had no son then. I executed a bond in favour of Dhanukdhari, my brother-in-law, because he wanted to give his properties to his daughters. When he was apprised of the execution of the benami deed he demanded partition in 1305." Continuing, Nena Ojha states, "Prabhudat wanted Pota properties for himself and wanted us to take other properties. We had 15 bighas of malkiat, two-half bighas of kashtkari and 7 to 8 bighas of land in zarpeshgi for Rs. 1,000 at Pota. The khatian and khewat and zarpeshgi deeds of these lands were with us at Rupaulia and we made them over to Prabhudat." The reason given for Prabhudat's separation seems to be plausable for he had no son then and had only daughters to whom he wanted to give his properties which he could not do so long as the properties were joint, for, till then, he had no specific or defined share in the family properties. It is significant that the talk of partition commenced in 1300-1301 and Prabhudat since then began living in Pota. Whereas the actual partition is said to have taken place in 1305. This is important because much is sought to be made out of the partition having been stated in the ekrarnama to have taken place in 1300, whereas in the defendant's evidence it is said to have taken place in 1305. At the time of partition, Gopal Ojha, the common ancestor of the parties, was alive. Prabhudat asked Gopal Ojha to give him the properties in Pota in lieu of his share and Gopal Ojha told Nena Ojha to give Prabhudat the said properties in Pota to which Nena is said to have agreed and thus the partition was effected. No reason has been assigned for disbelieving the evidence of the defendant and his witnesses. On behalf of the plaintiff three witnesses came from Rupaulia. They hardly seem to be entitled to any credence. Witness No. 1 Basdeo Misir admits that defendant No. 1 brought a suit against him for the demolition of his house and that there were two more cases brought against him. Witness No. 2, Srikant Ojha, has a greivance against the defendant inasmuch as his uncle sold some properties to the defendant in which he was interested 10 or 12 years ago, and Berkhi Kurmi (P. W. No. 10), a labourer of Mahabir Ojha, brought a criminal case against him on behalf of Mahabir in connection with which the Sub-Inspector of Police had come to investigate. Witness No. 3, Ramdhari, lives in the Patti of Baijnath, father-in-law of Biswa Nath Ojha, plaintiff No. 2. Even these witnesses admit that the family of Prabhudat do not live at Raupulia and that Prabhudat mostly lives in Pota and manages the property there. He is, according to the evidence of plaintiff's witness No. 4, President of the Chaukidar Panches in Pota. Most of the witnesses on behalf of the plaintiffs have come from Pota where Prabhudat had great influence and, as observed above, occupied the office of Chaukidari Panch or President. Other witnesses from the Patti of Baijnath Thakur have given evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs. We have carefully gone through the evidence of these witnesses and find that they are either interested or do not seem to know much about the family affairs of the parties. Prabhudat examined himself in the case. He admits that he remained mostly at Pota for the last 10 or 12 years and before that also he looked after the affairs of Pota for the most part. While he denies that he has a residential house in Pota he admits that he has a dera at Pota and that the Chaukidari tax is now paid in his name, although he adds that he hears of it. He being a Panch of the Chaukidari Committee, there is no reason why he did not positively know one way or the other as to the payment of the Chaukidari tax with respect to the house in question. He admits in his evidence that he and the defendants have separate transactions and karobar for a long time. The fact that the Pota property was in his exclusive possession is corroborated by the production of khewat from his own possession relating to Pota village. This corroborates the statement of defendant Nena Ojha quoted above that the khatian, the khewat and the zarpeshgi deeds of the Pota property and brit lands were made over to Prabhudat at the time of partition. He is also corroborated by Rijhan Singh who, when asked in cross-examination, stated: "I did not see the Panches do anything in connection with the partition. They were talking about papers, such as khatian and parchas. They said that khatian and parchas might be divided among the parties. In my presence the Panches divided the khatians, parchas, deeds, bonds, etc., among the parties." Therefore, the production of these papers from the custody of the plaintiffs proves the mode in which the partition is said to have taken place, by the witnesses on behalf of the defendants. Much has been made by Mr. Lakshmi Narayan Singh of the fact that khewat (Exhibit 7) which was finally published in 1897 (corresponding to 1304) shows the names of the plaintiffs as well as the defendants with respect to the family properties Rupaulia and that of Gopal Ojha with respect to Pota. It is said that, had the partition taken place in 1300, the names of the parties should have appeared in these papers according to the allotments, that is, Prabhudat's name should have appeared in place of Gopal Ojha in the khewat of village Pota and his (Prabhudat's) name should have been omitted with respect to Rupaulia. It is said that in the ekrarnama the partition is stated to have taken place in 1300 and, in order to explain the entries in the aforesaid khewat of Rupualia and Pota, the defendants have now changed the alleged time of partition by stating that it took place in 1305. I do not see how the aforesaid entries in any way embarrass the defendants. Gopal Ojha's name was in the Collector's Register D and, according to the rules laid down in the Survey and Settlement Manual for the preparation of the khewat, his name must have been copied in the khewat from Register D. The argument loses much of its force when we find that the year 1897 (1304) stated in the khewat and khatian is the year of its final publication, whereas the khewats are prepared at the khanapuri stage which takes place at an earlier stage of the Survey operations. From the khanapuri stage up to the preparation of the

NENA OJHA v. PARBHU DUTT OJHA.

Record of Rights and its final publication several years generally elapse. Therefore, in the absence of any evidence as to when the khewat was actually prepared, it is not possible to draw any inference against the defendants from the year given in these papers. On the other hand, it is significant that, after the death of Gopal Ojha in the year 1313 (1907), the name of Prabhudat Ojha was mutated in place of Gopal Ojha in Register D (Exhibit W2) of the Collectorate with respect to the Pota property on the ground of inheritance. Now, if Pota was not assigned upon partition or separation to Prabhudat, his name alone would not have been entered with respect to that village in the Collectorate Register and the defendants would not have allowed their own names to be omitted thereform. The mutation, as stated above, took place in 1907-08 seven years before the ekrarnama in question was executed, and certainly at a time when there was no difference or dispute between the parties. Again, the ground for mutation being stated there to be inheritance (vide column 7 of Register D, Exhibit W2) shows that the joint estate of the family had ceased to exist for no succession by inheritance takes place in a joint Hindu family; the properties pass to the possession of the remaining members of the family by survivorship.

I do not think much can be made out of the inconsistency in the statement of the defendant as to the time of separation as alleged in the ekrarnama and in the written statement. It may be, as is suggested, that the time of the partition is now changed to 1305 in order to meet any inference that may be drawn from the date 1897 of the final publication of the Survey khewats and the khatians. The attempt of the defendants to improve their case by peculiar notions or whims of their own will not affect the value of the inference drawn from the mutation of the name of Prabhudat in Register B of the Collectorate in 1907-08 "by right of inheritance," nor will it affect the value of the evidence afforded by the recital as to the date of partition in the registered ekrarnama (Exhibit 2).

The recital in the ekrarnama to which Prabhudat was a party leaves no manner of doubt that separation had taken place in 1300. Prabhudat now wants to make out that this was a fraudulent document, and that he executed it on account of the fraud practised upon him by Nena Ojha telling him that the document was a Mukhtearnama executed for looking after the Survey cases, and that he did not know the contents thereof when he signed the documents. The learned Subordinate Judge has accepted the suggestion of the plaintiffs and has held that the document was a fraudulent one. We have carefully considerd the evidence in the case and are satisfied that the Subordinate Judge has taken a mistaken view of the evidence. The marginal witnesses of the deed have been examined. Taki Singh has been examined on behalf of the plaintiffs and Shiekh Janab, Jaleswar Missir and Kunj Behari Pandey on behalf of the defendants. They have also examined the scribe of the document Sarjug Prasad, Mukhtar. All these witnesses clearly state that they knew fully that the document they were attesting was an ekrarnama and not a Mukhtearnama. Taki Singh (P. W. No. 9) went so far as to say that Mahabir Ojha, one of the defendants, had told him that it was an ekrarnama which was being executed between his (Mahabir's) father (Nena Ojha) and his uncle (Prabhudat Ojha), the plaintiff in the case. He also knew that under the ekrarnama Nena Ojha was to get 12 annas and Prabhudat 4 annas.

This witness further says that he was aware for a long time that Prabhudat was living at Pota. Sheikh Janab says that the ekrarnama was read over to him before he signed it in the presence of Nena Ojha and Prabhudat Ojha. Jaleswar Missir (D. W. No. 10) is a close neighbour of Nena Ojha and is a nephew of the family. He says that Prabhudat lived at Pota for the last 20 or 24 years with his family. He proves that the ekrarnama was written in the presence of Nena Ojha and Prabhudat Ojha and that the scribe read out the document after it had been drawn up, and that Nena Ojha signed it first and Prabhudat next.

Kunj Behari Pandey (D. W. No. 11) says that Nena Ojha and Prabhudat Ojha told him that they had executed an ekrar- nama and asked him to sign it and that he got it read over and then signed it. The evidence of Sarjug Prasad (D.W. No. 21), the scribe, is conclusive as to the ekrarnama being a genuine document as having been drawn up in accordance with the instructions given by Prabhudat. He distinctly says: "I drew up the deed from a draft according to the instructions of both" (Prabhudat and Nena Ojha) "and it was read over to them and that they understood the contents and then signed the deed." He repels the suggestion made that Prabhudat asked him to draw up a Mukhtearnama and not an ekrarnama. Prabhudat purchased the stamp, he signed all the pages of the document stating therein that the ekrarnama with the stipulations contained in the body thereof, executed is correct. There is, therefore, no room for any doubt as to the bona fide execution of the document in question by Prabhudat. The plaintiffs have failed to show that there was any occasion for Prabhudat executing a Mukhtearnama at the time. The story is unfounded that the Mukhtearnama was required in order to look after Survey cases, as no trace of any Survey case is found in the record. The parties had not many properties and there does not appear to have been any dispute before the Survey Authorities which necessitated the execution of a Mukhtearnama by Prabhudat. He could not, therefore, be misled into a belief that a Mukhtearnama was required to safeguard his interest before the Survey Authorities.

The learned Subordinate Judge does not seem to have realised the importance of the absence of any Survey dispute or case nor does he seem to have weighed properly the evidence of the marginal witnesses, and, above all, the following careful and solemn words in the document in the handwriting of Prabhudat himself: "The ekrarnama with the stipulations contained in the body thereof executed is correct." The finding of the Subordinate Judge is against the weight of evidence. It seems to be based upon surmise and conjecture. The learned Vakil on behalf of the plaintiffs has not been able to support the finding of the Subordinate Judge. In fact, whenever challenged with the astounding evidence in the case as to the genuineness of the document in question, the learned Vakil felt that he had no answer to make. In these circmstances, I disagree with the view of the ekrarnama in question taken by the Subordinate Judge and hold that it was a bona fide and genuine document executed by the parties, and that Prabhudat knew fully the contents thereof.

The circumstances in the case support the defendant's version that Prabhudut having in his advanced age got an only son who was somewhat stupid was anxious to go back to his native village and to give his boy the benefit of the company of Nena Ojha's family consisting of a large number of young boys. It was with a view to make the boy happy and prosperous and develop in intelligence which was somewhat low that Prabhudat Ojha thought of coming back to the family. The internal evidence indicates that Nena Ojha was not anxious for an agreement of that kind, for the document does not restore the family to the status of a fully re-united Hindu family. It is a sort of arrangement whereby the members were united for the purpose of living together and for enjoying jointly the properties of the family without in any way disturbing their shares which stood prior to the agreement in question. This document supports the defendant's case that there was separation in 1300 whereby Prabhudat disconnected himself with the rest of the members of the family and took one-fourth of the joint family properties. Prabhudat and his son are, therefore, bound by the settlement made therein as to the separation of Prabhudat, and this settlement is supported by the evidence in the case indicated above. If the learned Subordinate Judge had accepted this document as true and bona fide, he would have certainly changed his view that the separate mess, residence and transactions of the members of the family were not sufficient to prove separation and that they were consistent with the family continuing to be still joint. It is true that these circumstances, taken separately, may not be inconsistent with jointness, but taking them together the presumption of jointness is weakened and the admission of separation contained in the ekrarnama wholly rebuts the presumption and, to my mind, conclusively proves a contrary state of affairs, namely, that the family had ceased to be a joint family and that Prabhudat had separated.

There was, no doubt, no need of partition, nor a regular Panchayat or solemn proceedings to work out the shares of the parties and to divide the properties accordingly, but they are not essential for effecting a partition or separation of a joint Hindu family. Prabhudat had himself calculated his own share and found that the Pota property represented his share of one-fourth in the entire family properties. He approached his father Gopal Ojha, who was then the head member of the family. He said that he did not like to live there and wanted to have the Pota property in lieu of his own share. Gopal Ojha as karta of the family directed his elder son, Nena Ojha, to give Pota to Prabhudat. Nena consented and there was an end of the matter. In these circumstances, there was no necessity of an elaborate proceeding of a Panchayat, though some freinds of the family, whom the witnesses call Panches, seem to have been present at the time. The subsequent conduct of the parties and the exercise of sole possession by Prabhudat over the Pota property prove the partition. Therefore, I come to the conclusion that in 1300 Prabhudat had separated himself from the family and had taken Pota as his share of the family properties. At that time his son Biswanath Ojha, plaintiff No. 2, was not in existence. According to the statement of Prabhudat he was born sometime in 1309 or 1310. According to the statement of Nena he was born in 1306 or 1307. In any case, he was not in existence at the time of the partition whether it took place in 1300 or 1305. Prabhudat died during the pendency of this appeal, and his son Biswanath Ojha has been substituted in his place as the sole respondent. He is bound by the statement contained in the ekrarnama under section 21 of the Evidence Act as a statement of his predecessor-in-interest in the properties in question. The ekrarnama is, therefore, a binding document. This was executed by Prabhudat and Nena, the karta of the family of the other defendants, who were his descendants. It is admitted that Nena is still the karta of the family. The ekranama is not impugned by the defendants as being in any way fraudulent or in excess of the authority of Nena. On the other hand, the plaintiff states that the document was executed bona fide. Nothing has been shown in this case why this document, executed by Nena Ojha as the karta of the family, should not bind his descendants.

Now, what is the effect of this document? Mr. L. N. Singh on behalf of the plaintiffs contends that the document purports to effect a re-union of the the two brothers Nena and Prabhudat, so as to restore them to the original state of jointness and that there was a fusion of all the properties which were originally ancestral, and those which were acquired before, during and after the separation and re-union. For a re-union two things are essential; firstly, that one can re-unite with his father: brother or paternal uncle, in other words, the re-union is restricted to these three classes of cases only. The text of Brahspatti "He who being once separated dwells again through affection with his father, brother or paternal uncle is termed re-united" has been so interpreted by the Calcutta High Court in Basanta Kumar Singha v. Jogendra Nath Singha (1), as the Law of Mitakshara as administered in this Province; secondly, the re-union must take place after separation so that the parties seeking to re-unite must have separated before the re-union. Nena and Prabhudat were brothers and, as held above, Prabhudat had separated in 1300 Fasli and, therefore, there could be a valid re-union between them in 1914, when the ekranama in question was executed. The effect of a re-union is to place the united coparceners in the same position as they would have been in, had no partition taken place and the property of the united members stands on exactly the same footing as that of members who have always been undivided so that upon the death of any one of the re-united members his share will pass by survivorship to the remaining members and will not get into the hands of any divided member so long as there are undivided members in existence; for instance, when two brothers re-unite on the death of one of them without male issue, his estate passess by survivorship to the united members instead of devolving upon his widow or daughter, which would have been the case had he not re-united. The Madras High Court had taken a contrary view at one time; it was of opinion that before partition the members of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family are joint tenants and after partition they are sole tenants with respect to the properties allotted to their shares and after re-union they become tenants-in-common, holding their shares in severalty so that after the death of any one of them his share passes by descent, and not by survivorship. This view was based upon the idea that after partition the shares of the members become ascertained and consequently after re-union their shares remained so ascertained, the re-union only destroying the exclusive right which by separation the member had acquired in the property which had fallen to his share. This view has now been abandoned in the Madras High Ciurt, and in the case of Ramasami v. Venkatesam (2) it was ruled that in the case of re-united co-parceners property passes by survivorship.

As regards the effect on re-union the ekrarnama states as follows:—

"Now it is the wish of us, the declarants to become again joint in family and property and come and remain jointly in possession and use of the entire family properties. But the share of me, Nena Ojha and my sons shall be 12 annas and that of me, Prabhudat Ojha and my son Biswanath Ojha 4-annas in the joint family properties. We have become joint again under the above stipulations. The said three widows shall get maintenance out of the 12-annas share of me Nena Ojha and my sons. We, Nena Ojha and Prabhudat Ojha, shall remain joint in family during our lifetime or during the lifetime of any one of us and we shall never effect partition. After the death of us, the declarants Nena Ojha and Prabhudat Ojha, when our sons will partition their shares among themselves Keswar Ojha, Harnandan Ojha, Mahabir Ojha, sons of me declarant No. 1, shall get each four-annas share, to Biswanath Ojha, son of me, declarant No. 2, the remaining 4-annas share. All the brothers (cousins) shall get an equal share of four-annas each. Though some of the family properties stand in the name of one declarant and other properties in the name of the other declarant and though in future also properties may be acquired in the name of any of the declarants or of his issue all these properties shall be joint and at the time of the aforesaid partition each heir, i. e., Keshwar Ojha, Harnandan Ojha and Mahabir Ojha sons of me declarant No. 1, and Biswanath Ojha, son of me declarant No. 2, shall get 4-annas share in all the family properties."

Mr. Mitter on behalf of the defendants-appellants contends that the aforesaid terms of the ekrarnama do not effect a valid re-union in the estate of the two brothers and they do not, therefore, become co-parceners of a joint Mitakshara family. He says that the ekrarnama only purports to enable the two brothers to live jointly and to be in joint possession of the properties, but it does not make them joint tenants or co-parceners with respect to their properties. On the other hand, it keeps their shares in the properties, of 12-annas and 4-annas as was ascertained at the time of the separation and their joint enjoyment of the properties is restricted in the proportion of the shares aforesaid. He says that, in order to constitute a re-union after partition, there must be, to use the expression of Seton-Karr, J., in Gopal Chunder Daghoria v. Kenaram Doghoria (3), "a junction of estate" which subsequently adopted in the case of Rishi (Rusi) Mendli v. Sundar Mendli (4) where their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court say: "In order to constitute a re-union there must be a junction of estate with an intention to re-unite." Seton-Karr, J., in the aforesaid case of Gopal Chunder

Deghoria v. Kenaram Deghoria (3) refers to the text of Brahspati "the re-union must be a re-union of property: "The property which is mine is thine, and that which is thine is mine'" According to the text, therefore, the parties should not only live in one mess (ekenne) and in one place (ektre) and like one family (ek paribar nyaye) but they should again join each other's share of the property and remain in possession. It depends upon the evidence in each case as to whether the parties have re-united as stated above. The ekrarnama in question set forth above, no doubt, declares that Nena Ojha and Prabhudat Ojha would become joint in family and property and would jointly be in possession and use of the family properties but it does not obliterate the shares of the two brothers of 12-annas and 4-annas respectively which had existed before the re-union. It, therefore, does not amalgamate the two shares but keeps them separate so that they are not able to say to each other, as is required by the text of Brahspati, "The property which is mine is thine, and that which is thine is mine." Again, in an ordinary case of re-union, the widows of the two brothers Brahmadat and Karmadat would have been entitled to maintenance out of the joint property, the share formed by amalgamating the shares of both the brothers. The agreement, however, was that these widows would get their maintenance out of the 12-annas share of Nena Ojha and his sons. On partition, after the death of Nena Ojha and Prabhudat Ojha, among their respective sons, the division of the property would not be according to the shares they would have in a joint Mitakshara family, but would be according to the share which their respective fathers had in the property before the re-union. Now, the re-union was by a written agreement and hence the rights of the parties will be determined in accordance with the terms thereof. In the case of Raja Setrucherla Ramabhadra v. Raja Setrucherla Virabhadra Suryanarayana (5) three members of a joint Hindu family agreed by a deed that their estate would remain joint and that the eldest of the three should manage the family estate for 12 years and after an account being rendered by him of the profit and loss a division among them should be made. Their lordship of the Privy Council held that in a suit for partition commenced by one of the brothers and carried on by his representatives, the eldest brother was liable on the footing of an ordinary agent accountable for receipts and expenditure, and that he was not in the position of the managing member of a joint family liable only to account as to the then existing state of the property. In other words according to their Lordships the effect of the agreement was not to give the eldest brother the status of a karta of the joint family but to render the eldest brother accountable for receipts and expenditure as if he was a mere agent. Their Lordships observed: "It is not a simple agreement to postpone the partition and so to leave the family status of the brothers untouched. They are put upon a new footing. The defendant has the management secured to him for an absolute term of 12 years and though, during that term the others would not be precluded from, demanding division, they could only do so on condition of giving up profits and bearing any loss occasioned by their premature withdrawal. Moreover, the division when it comes is to be effected after settling the profit and loss accruing to that date. That is hardly the language which would have been used if the parties had meant nothing except that they should divide the corpus of the estate as it stood at the end of the term whether it had increased or decreased.',

Therefore, I agree with the view urged by Mr. Mitter that there was no re-union in the sense that the two brothers, Nena Ojha and Prabhudat, became co-parceners of a joint Mitakshara family. Prabhudat wants partition of the properties and he is entitled to the share in the properties as mentioned in the ekrarnama whether he was a co-parcener or was only a tenant-in-common. That share is 4-annas of the family properties. That was his share at the time of separation in 1300 which his son, the sole surviving respondent now before us, is bound to take. He cannot, therefore, get more than 4-annas and his claim for 8-annas in the family properties as if he was a co-parcener with defendant No. 1 Nena Ojha, must, therefore, be dismissed.

The question then arises as to the properties in which he is entitled to have his share. Mr. Mitter says that he is entitled to get only 4-annas in the properties which were allotted to him at the separation in 1300, that is, the properties set forth at the beginning of the ekrarnama, namely, the entire properties lying in village Pota consisting of kasht land of 10 bighas held in zar rehn brit bandobasti measuring 2-bighas 10 cottahs and Milkiyat property comprising 15 bighas of land. Mr. Mitter says that he is entitled to his own acquisitions subsequent to the separation in 1300, but that he is not entitled to the properties which were held by Nena Ojha and his branch after partition and the properties which were acquired by that branch during separation and after reunion up to the date of the suit. So far as Nena is concerned, undoubtedly he agreed to give 4-annas share to the plaintiff in all the family properties and in all the properties which might have been acquired in his own name or in the name of any of his issues, the defendants Nos. 2 to 11 in the case. He is a party to the ekrarnama and is bound by the terms thereof. Mr. Mitter, however, says that the terms of the ekrarnama are not binding upon the descendants of Nena, the other defendants in the case, inasmuch as they were not parties to the ekrarnama and that Nena had no right to agree to give away shares in the properties which by separation were allotted to them and those which were subsequently acquired by that branch. Mr. Mitter says that the other defendants have been all along joint with Nena as members of a joint Mitakshara family and they had a vested interest therein which Nena had no right to destroy by the agreement in question or to transfer in any way. Now, the Court below has held, and its finding is supported by evidence, that all the properties which stand either in the name of Nena or his descendants, were acquired out of the income of the joint family and that they appertained to the joint family properties of Nena's branch. An attempt has been made in this case to show that some of the properties standing in the name of Kishore Ojha, Harnandan Ojha and Mahabir Ojha were acquired out of their kosal (self-acquired) properties alleged to have been carved out of the joint family properties and given by their father, defendant No. 1 the karta, of the family to his sons for their private and personal or pocket expenses. Further, it was attempted to show that Kishore and Harnandan had means of their own out of which they acquired properties in their own names without the help of the joint family properties. It is said that Kishore and Harnandan earned some money by service in Nepal and Bettia Raj respectively. There is some evidence to show that Kishore and Harnandan were out on service as alleged, but how long they were in service and what their pay was and what they actually earned has not been disclosed. At one place it is simply said that Harnandan used to get Rs. 40 to Rs. 65. It has also not been shown that any of the properties were acquired out of their income from service, nor that any of the properties standing in the names of these sons were acquired out of the kosal (self-acquired) properties, assuming that such properties could be treated as private and personal properties of these sons. Mr. Mitter admits that there is no such evidence connecting the acquisition with the separate income of the members of this family. The onus of proving the acquisitions by their self-exertion and out of their separate means was upon them and they failed to discharge that onus. Therefore, the finding of the Court below must be accepted that these properties standing in the names of the sons of Nena Ojha must be deemed to be the joint family properties of the branch of defendant No. 1 in which according to the terms of the ekrarnama, Prabhudat was declared to have 4-annas share.

The question then is whether the descendants of Nena Ojha are bound by the terms of the agreement executed by Nena to which they were not parties. They were members of a joint Mitakashara family and admittedly Nena was and is their karta. He had a right to deal with the family properties and to enter into any agreement with respect thereto unless the act is impugned as not being for the benefit of the family or without consideration. It must be stated at the outset that no such case has been made out in the written statement nor in the evidence. It is not the case of the defendants that the agreement in question was tainted with fraud, undue influence, coercion, mistake or misunderstanding. On the other hand, the agreement has been set up by the defendants as a bona fide transaction. The agreement is a mutual one between Nena and Prabhudat. Nena by this agreement obtains for himself and his sons 12-annas in the properties acquired by Prabhudat, for in these properties also the agreement states that Prabhudat will have only 4-annas, whereas 16-annas belonged to him exclusively. Therefore, as a return for the 4-annas share given to Prabhudat in the acquisitions made by Nena and the members of his branch Nena Ojha has secured by this document 12-annas share in the properties acquired by Prabhudat. There was a consideration and a good consideration. It may be, but there is no evidence to show, that now Nena Ojha and his branch may not get an equal return and that the transaction has not turned out to be a good bargain. But these are not the considerations which will affect the terms of the agreement. There was, as observed above, a good consideration and on account of mutual benefit the parties came to the agreement as to how their acquisitions will be dealt with. Therefore, the document was executed for consideration for the benefit of the family. Nena Ohja as karta of the family had a right to enter into this agreement with respect to the properties, and his descendants, the defendants Nos. 2 to 11 in the case, are bound by that agreement. This agreement although executed with the full knowledge of defendant Mahabir and after discussion with him, as he admits in his evidence has not yet been challenged in any Court of Justice although five years had elapsed since the execution of the ekrarnama in 1914 when the plaintiff brought the present suit in 1919 and the right to have the deed set aside is barred by limitation.

It is then said that the ekrarnama was not acted upon. The defendant states that as his son did not agree, effect was not given to it. Defendant Mahabir says that when he came to know of the ekrarnama he objected to it, but as his father insisted on the execution of the document he left him to do whatever he liked. This implies that ultimately he tacitly consented to abide by what Nena would decide, that is, the terms of the ekrarnama, and Nena Ojha agreed to the terms thereof. Therefore, the defendant Mahabir also agreed to the said terms. The defendants want to abide by the ekrarnama so far as it contains admissions and statements in their favour, and to resile from the terms which give a share to the plaintiff in the acquired properties. This they cannot be permitted to do. In the circumstances, I accept the evidence that the parties acted upon the ekrarnama after its execution and became joint in the properties.

In the case of Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (6) it was held that ekrarnama executed by the members of a joint family some of whom were minors, was binding on the minors. If it was unfair or prejudicial to their interests, it was for the minors on attaining majority to have it set aside so far as it concerned them. This upholds the principle that all the members of the family, minor or adult, are bound by the act of the manager or karta of the family unless they prove that the karta entered into transactions which were prejudicial to their interests and not for their benefit. This they have failed to establish in this case.

In the case of Prankishen Paul Chowdry v. Mothooramohun Paul Chowdry (7) it was held that a property acquired during the separation by a member of the family will be presumed, after the re-union, to have been acquired out of the funds of the joint estate and that re-united members will be entitled to a share in it.

(6) 30 C. 738; 30 I. A. 139; 7 C. W. N. 578; 5 Bom. L. R. 461; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 489 (P. C.).

(7) 10 M. I. A. 403; 5 W. R. P. C. 11; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 609; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 164; 19 B. R. 1025 (P. C.).

As to the properties acquired after re-union, there is nothing to show that they were not acquired out of the joint properties belonging to the two brothers and the presumption will be that they were acquired with the income of such properties. Therefore, in those properties Prabhudat obviously has a right to claim his share as mentioned in the ekrarnama. I, therefore, hold that Prabhudat is entitled to 4-annas share in all the properties standing in the name of Nena himself or his descendants whether those properties were acquired before, during or after the separation and re-union, and that his share in those properties is 4-annas and that of Nena and his branch 12-annas. All these properties were thrown into a joint stock of the re-united members, that is Nena Ojha and Prabhudat Ohja and their sons.

The decree of the Court below must, therefore, be vacated and in lieu thereof a decree for partition should be made declaring the share of Biswanath to be 4-annas and that of Nena and his descendants 12-annas. The parties are not entitled to render any accounts to each other with respect to the dealings with the properties which they were in possession of after separation in 1300 (1893) up to the date of the ekrarnama of the 1st November 1914. The ekrarnama is silent upon the question of accounting, but as the properties were in joint possession of the parties they must render to each other accounts of the properties which were dealt with by them from 1914. The date of the ekrarnama up to the date of the possession being delivered in the course of partition proceedings. The partition will be effected by a Commissioner appointed by the Court below. The assests found after accounting will be divided in the proportion of 4-annas and 12-annas as stated above. The plaintiff had claimed 8-annas share in the properties, whereas he has got 4-annas only. This is a partition case and the costs ultimately will be determined after the final decree for partition will be made. The costs incurred by the parties in this litigation up to the date the possession is delivered according to the shares aforesaid, should be borne by the estate in the proportion of 4-annas payable by the plaintiff and 12-annas payable by the defendants, and the amount thus ascertained will be dealt with in the accounts that the Commissioner will be directed to take.

Ross, J.—I agree.

In determining whether the value of land in dispute is Rs. 10,000 or upwards, for the purpose of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, the rules under the Suits Valuation Act, in accordance with which land is valued for the purpose of jurisdiction in the Trial Court, do not apply. It is the market-value of the land which has to be ascertained for the purpose of that section.

Civil miscellaneous petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty's Privy Council against the decree and the judgment of the Lahore High Court, dated the 29th November 1921 and 19th May 1922.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Petitioners.

ORDER.—This is an application for leave to appeal from a decree of this Court which reversed the decree of the Court of first instance. The decree of this Court was first passed on the 29th November

SALEH ABRAHAM v. MANEKJI COWASJI.

1921, but on an application for review it was modified on the 19th May 1922. It is clear that the period of limitation for the present application is to be reckoned from the latter date, on which a new decree was passed in substitution for the first one and Joykishen v. Ataoor Rohoman (1) and Vadilal v. Fulchand (2) are authorities in support of this view. The rulings to which Counsel for the respondents has referred us are not in point. We hold, therefore, that the application which was made on the 8th August 1922, is within time.

It remains to determine whether the value of the land in dispute is Rs. 10,000 or upwards. The rules under the Suits Valuation Act, in accordance with which the land was valued for the purposes of jurisdiction in the lower Court, do not apply in determining the value for the purpose of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code, but it is the market-value which has to be ascertained.

We accordingly direct the Subordinate Judge to make inquiry and report to this Court whether the value of the land in dispute is Rs. 10,000 or upwards.

Calcutta Rent Act (III of 1920), ss. 4, 11—Statutory tenant—Agreement to pay more than the standard rent—Lease in terms of agreement—Object of lease, legality of—Lease, whether enforceable—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23.

Where the immediate object of a lease is to secure a rate of rent in excess of that allowed by the Calcutta Rent Act, thus tending to defeat the provisions of the Act, which disables a landlord from recovering more than the standard rent, the object is unlawful, and consequently the lease is void and cannot be enforced. Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves.

Mr. F. R. Surita, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Banerjea (with him Mr. B. N. Ghose), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves.

The learned Judge dismissed the suit.

The suit was to recover vacant possession of the upper flat in No. 11, Bow Street, in the town of Calcutta, for mesne profits and for costs.

The defence set out several allegations on which the defendant relied. The one which is material for the purposes of my judgment in effect was, that the defendant was a tenant from May 1917 of the upper flat, that the standard rent had been fixed by the Controller of Rents, Calcutta, on the 30th of May 1921; that the defendant was continuing as tenant of the flat at the rent fixed by the Controller of Rents; that the defendant denied that the plaintiff required the premises for his own use and occupation as the residence of himself or his family; that he had paid rent regularly and was entitled to continue in occupation as such tenant. The standard rent referred to in the defence has been fixed at the sum of Rs. 85 per month.

The facts may be taken from the learned Judge's judgment as follows:—"The property belonged to Mr. Emmanuel Jacob Cohen who was still the owner of the premises; the defendant was a tenant under him paying, prior to this suit, a sum of about Rs. 65 a month. Mr. Cohen negotiated with the defendant for renewal of his tenancy which had expired, at a higher rent and Mr. Cohen stated that the rent of the ground floor flat was Rs. 100, that the rent of the middle flat was Rs. 150, and that he was entitled to ask, as he did, Rs. 100 for the rent of the flat in suit. The defendant demurred to paying Mr. Cohen the sum which he asked although it appeared that he was willing to pay as much as Rs. 104if a godown were included where in he could garage his motor car. However, the negotiations broke down and Mr. Cohen leased or purported to lease this upper flat to the present plaintiff at Rs. 100 a month, and this suit was brought by the plaintiff who claimed to be the landlord within the definition in the Rent Act to recover possession of the upper flat."

The learned Judge proceeded to say: "I should say that the plaintiff at present lives in No. 4, Harin Bari Lane, where he has premises as convenient and commodious as the flat in suit but he states that he is desirous to move to the premises in suit because he says he has young daughters and that there is a brothel in the near neighbourhood of the premises No. 4, Harin Bari Lane, and that it is undesirable that his daughters should remain in close proximity to the brothel. No question arises as to the payment of rent, for it is admitted that rent has been deposited at the standard rent of Rs. 85 with the Rent Controller."

The learned Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the lease which was executed by Mr. Cohen was really against the spirit of the Rent Act, and upon that the learned Judge based his decision.

There is no doubt, in my mind, that the execution of the lease was against the spirit of the Rent Act. But, with due respect to the learned Judge, I do not think that the conclusion, as stated by the learned Judge, provides a sufficient basis for the judgment. It must be shown that the lease defeated the intention which the Legislature expressed in the Rent Act or which is necessarily implied from the express terms of the Act.

The lease was executed on the 26th of October 1920, and the term was two years from the 29th of October 1920. It appears, therefore, that the term has expired by this time; and in any event, in my judgment, it would not be right for this Court now to make a decree for vacant possession in favour of the plaintiff. The rights of the parties, however, must be considered as they existed at the date of the suit inasmuch as, at any rate, the question of mesne profits and costs would depend upon the result of our decision in that respect. The rights of the parties, therefore, have to be determined by this Court.

Several points were urged in the course of the arguments by the one party and the other. In my judgment, it is not necessary to deal with them all as, in my opinion, the appeal may be disposed of on one ground.

It was said in the first place that the plaintiff was a "landlord" as defined by section 2, clause (c), of the Calcutta Rent Act, 1920, and reliance was placed upon the words "any person for the time being entitled to receive rent in respect of any premises, whether on his own account, or on account, or on behalf, or for the benefit of any other person" and upon the words "every person from time to time deriving title under a landlord." Having regard to the facts of this case, I consider that to be an arguable point, and I desire to make it clear that I do not decide it in this appeal. I assume, however, for the purpose of my judgment, that the plaintiff may be considered as a "landlord" within the meaning of section 2, clause (c), of the Rent Act.

In the next place, it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that he came within the proviso to section 11 (1), and that the premises were bona fide required by the plaintiff, the landlord, for his own occupation.

The learned Judge on this point found that the plaintiff genuinely "desired" in the circumstances to move from No. 4, Harin Bari Lane, and to occupy the upper flat of No. 11, Bow Street. But, as I have pointed out, he came to the further conclusion that the premises in which the plaintiff was living in No. 4, Harin Bari Lane, were as convenient and as commodious as the premises which are the subject-matter of this suit.

In the case of Rekhab Chand Doogar v. D'Cruz (1), my learned brother Mr.

(1) 69 Ind. Cas. 963; 26 C. W. N. 499; (1923) A. I. R. (C.) 223.

Justice Buckland, in his judgment at page 502* held as follows: "I do not think it is enough that a plaintiff in order to defeat a plea under the Calcutta Rent Act should merely say that he desires the premises bona fide for his own occupation. The word in the Act is not 'desire' but 'require.' This, in my opinion, involves something more than a mere wish and it involves an element of need, to some extent at least." In my judgment, it is not necessary for this Court in this case to decide that question, and I desire to make it clear that I do not decide it. I assume, however, for the purpose of my judgment, that the plaintiff on the facts of this case may be said to have bona fide required the premises for his own occupation.

I am, however, in agreement with the learned Judge's finding at page 43 of the Paper Book, which runs as follows:—"I am bound to hold that Mr. Cohen's object in leasing the premises as he did to the plaintiff was to avoid the provisions of the Rent Act and that, inasmuch as he could not obtain possession himself of the flat, he put some other person in a position in which he thought that person would be able to get possession of the premises and pay him the higher rent which he was unable in the circumstances to extract from the defendant."

The plaintiff also, in my judgment, must have known that the result of his taking the lease from Mr. Cohen would be to eject the defendant from the premises, if effect could be given to his lease. He must have known, further, that the rent which he agreed to pay was in excess of that which Mr. Cohen could lawfully demand from the defendant by reason of the provisions of the Rent Act. The question is whether, under these circumstances, the lease granted by Mr. Cohen to the plaintiff could be enforced.

The object of the Rent Act, as stated in the preamble, was to restrict temporarily the increase of rents in Calcutta. The Act provided for the fixing of a standard rent. In this case it was fixed at Rs. 85 which the defendant was all along willing to pay and which in fact he deposited with the Controller of Rents under the Act.

*Page of 26 C. W. N.—[Ed.

Section 4 (1) of the Act provides, "Subject to the provisions of this Act, where the rent of any premises has been or is hereafter, during the continuance of this Act, increased so as to exceed the standard rent, the amount of such excess shall, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, be irrecoverable." So that, having regard to the provisions of that section, Mr. Cohen could not recover from the defendant, his tenant, a rent in excess of the standard rent, Rs. 85. Nor could he obtain a decree for recovery of possession of the premises against the defendant so long as the defendant paid the rent to the full extent allowable by the Act, and performed the conditions of the tenancy: for he, Mr. Cohen, was not able to bring himself within any of the conditions contained in the proviso to section 11 (1) of the Act. Section 11 (1) provides: "Notwithstanding anything contained in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, or in the Indian Contract Act, 1872, no order or decree for the recovery of possession of any premises shall be made so long as the tenant pays rent to the full extent allowable by this Act, and performs the conditions of the tenancy." That section is applicable to the case of Mr. Cohen and the defendant, inasmuch as, Mr. Cohen was not able to bring himself within any of the provisions of the proviso to section 11 (1).

I have no doubt that the object of the parties to the lease was to defeat the provisions of the Rent Act. Mr. Cohen wanted a rent higher than that which he could obtain from the defendant by reason of the Rent Act. He could not obtain possession of the premises himself. So he granted the lease to the plaintiff who, it was thought, might be able to obtain possession of the premises, inasmuch as he wanted to occupy them and who would pay Mr. Cohen the higher rent. The plaintiff was a party to this arrangement and was willing to pay a rent higher than that which could be lawfully recovered by Mr. Cohen, by reason of the Rent Act.

Section 10 of the Contract Act provides: "All agreements are contracts if they are made by the free consent of parties competent to contract, for a lawful consideration and with a lawful object, and are not hereby expressly declared to be void."

Section 23 deals with the questions of consideration and object and runs as follows: "The consideration or object of an agreement is lawful, unless—it is forbidden by law; or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law; or is fraudulent; or involves or implies injury to the person or property of another; or the Court regards it as immoral or opposed to public policy.

"In each of these cases, the consideration or object of an agreement is said to be unlawful. Every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful is void." In my judgment, the object of the lease was of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of the Rent Act; and, consequently, the object was unlawful.

The result is, that the object being unlawful, the lease was void,

In my judgment, therefore, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Richardson, J.—This appeal raises a question under the Calcutta Rent Act (Bengal Act III of 1920) which was passed, as the preamble states, with the object of restricting temporarily the increase of rents in Calcutta. The Act came into force on the 5th May 1920, with a life limited to a period of three years from that date (section 1, clause (4)).

The respondent, Manekji Cowasji, the defendant in the suit, was a tenant of the upper flat No. 11, Bow Street, at a rent of Rs. 65 a month, under the owner of the premises, Emmanuel Jacob Cohen. The defendant tendered no evidence at the trial and I will assume in favour of Saleh Abraham, the plaintiff-appellant, that when the Rent Act came into force the defendant was holding as a monthly tenant under Cohen as landlord. The position then was that, while the Act remained in force, the defendant was the statutory tenant of the flat liable to pay the standard rent defined in section 2, clause (j). So long as he paid such rent he was protected from eviction at Cohen's hands otherwise than under the proviso to section 11, sub-section (1). Cohen, however, treated the Act with scant respect. He tried, without reference to the standard rent, to increase the rent to Rs. 100 a month. The defendant appointed out that that was an increase of more than 50 per cent. Probably in view of proviso (1) to section 15 (3) (e) he offered to pay a 25 per cent increase. The offer was not accepted On the 11th June 1920 Cohen wrote to the defendant refusing the defendant's tender of rent at the old rate and suggesting that the defendant should move the Rent Controller to fix the standard rent. As to that it must be observed that, if Cohen was anxious to keep within the Act, he was himself free to move the Rent Controller. In August Cohen gave the defendant notice to quit by the end of September on the ground suggested by section 1, clause (5), that he had not paid within three months of the 5th May all arrears of rent due from him. The defendant replied that he had deposited the rent for May and June with the Controller. In October the defendant offered a rent of Rs. 104 a month for the flat and in addition a godown which he wanted for use as a motor garage. Nothing came of the offer and in this state of things, the defendant, not having submitted to his terms, Cohen took the following step. By an indenture, dated the 26th October 1920, he granted to the plaintiff a lease of the flat for a term of two years from the 29th October 1920, at a monthly rent of Rs. 100 for the first year and Rs. 110 for the second year, Cohen gave the defendant notice of the lease, requested him to attorn to the plaintiff as landlord till the end of October and thereafter, in pursuance of a notice to quit, already served upon him, to give vacant possession to the plaintiff. The defendant replied claiming the protection of the Rent Act and refusing to vacate. Subsequently, however, as it appears, he did attorn to the plaintiff to the extent of depositing with the Controller rent at the old rate for payment to the plaintiff and of applying to the Controller to fix the standard rent as between the plaintiff and himself. The application was made in March 1921, and by an order, dated the 30th May 1921, the Controller fixed the standard rent at Rs. 85

The Controller held, no doubt, under proviso (1) to section 15 (3) (e) that the fair rent in November 1918 was Rs. 75 to which he added 10 per cent. plus Rs. 3 for the wages of a coolie to pump water.

The plaintiff had in vain given the defendant more than one notice to quit before this order was made. After the order on the 31st May the plaintiff's Solicitors wrote to the defendant giving him a fresh notice to quit by the end of June 1921. It was asserted that the plaintiff required the premises for his own occupation [proviso to sub-section (1), section 11]. This notice was as ineffectual as the others, and in July 1921, the plaintiff filed his suit, claiming vacant possession of the flat and mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 100 per mensem from the 1st July till the flat was vacated. The suit was dismissed by Greaves, J., by a judgment, dated the 25th April 1922, and the plaintiff filed this appeal on the 16th May 1922.

The plaintiff's lease ran out in October 1922, before the appeal came on for hearing. It is suggested, but not proved, that the plaintiff has obtained an extension of the lease from Cohen and it is further said that the duration of the Rent Act may be extended. But in any case a decision of the appeal on the merits is necessary with reference to the claim for mesne profits and the costs of the litigation.

In my opinion the only substantial question which arises is whether or not the lease is void on the ground of illegality. This is the first of the issues framed at the trial. "Is the lease void?" As to the other questions which have been discussed, no final opinion need be expressed.

In the first place, on the question whether the plaintiff was the defendant's landlord within the meaning of the Rent Act, the argument on his behalf proceeded as follows:—On the facts and in view of the terms of the lease, a formal instrument in writing, it was argued that Cohen intended that the lease should operate as an assignment—though a temporary assignment—of the reversion on the termination of the defendant's monthly tenancy. In India, it was said, such an assignment would be good and valid under the general provisions contained in sections 6, 7 and 8 of the Transfer of Property Act and the particular provisions of sections 199. Under those provisions the assignment would entitle the assignee or transferee during the continuance of his interest to the rent payable by the previous lessee. It was unnecessary to consider the doctrine of English Law on the subject of concurrent leases or the bearing on that doctrine of the Statute of Anne which is referred to in Platt on Leases (Vol. II, p. 57) and in such cases as Wordsley Brewery Co. v. Halford (2), and Horn v. Beard (3). It was the more unnecessary to discuss such topics because in the present case, there was, apart from the Transfer of Property Act, a sufficient attornment by the defendant to make him the plaintiff's tenant. Therefore, the plaintiff became entitled either under the Transfer of Property Act, or by reason of the defendant attorning, to receive the rent payable by him, and, if so, the plaintiff became the defendant's landlord both under the ordinary law and as the term is defined in section 2, clause (c) of the Rent Act. It followed that the plaintiff became entitled to exercise the rights of a landlord under the Rent Act, including the right to evict the tenant on any ground sanctioned by section 11. If Cohen had transferred the premises absolutely to the plaintiff no one would have doubted that he had this right and the fact that the transfer was a partial transfer was immaterial.

If it were necessary to decide the question, I should be disposed to accept this argument. The Act interferes with some of the rights of landlords, but it does not expressly restrict their right to transfer their property, wholly or partially, and it cannot be extended on considerations of mere policy. I do not mean that the object and scope of the Act may not be taken into account in construing any of its provisions, which is capable of more than one construction. But the Act was passed to meet an emergency, and in hasty and improvised legislation of this kind there may be loopholes and there may be omitted cases. It is not the duty of the Courts to add to, or subtract from, the fair sense of the language of the Act. When a landlord transfers his rights, wholly or partially, the Act must be applied, as it stands, to the new rights and the new relations thus created.

There is, next, the suggestion that the plaintiff did not bona fide require the flat for his own occupation within the meaning of section 11 of the Act. It is true that at all material times the plaintiff was and he still is in occupation of premises in Harin Bari Lane which admittedly are as convenient and commodious for himself and his family as the flat in suit. But, he says, near those premises is a brothel and it is not desirable for his daughters, one of whom, we are told, is of marriageable age, to live close to a brothel. The learned Judge held on the evidence that the plaintiff genuinely desired to move from Harin Bari Lane to the flat. We were referred to the observations of Buckland, J., in Rekhab Chand Dougar v. D'Cruz (1). In that case also a landlord already in occupation of a house purported to require the house of a tenant. The learned Judge said: "The word in the Act is not 'desire' but require.' This, in my opinion, involves something more than a mere wish and it involves an element of need, to some extent at least." I agree that a landlord is not acting bona fide under the Act, unless he reasonably requires the house for his own occupation. Much, therefore, must depend on the facts of the particular case. The present case differs from the case which came before the learned Judge, and if the plaintiff here were in a position to require the flat I should be disposed to hold that he reasonably or bona fide required it for his own occupation.

It is, however, unnecessary to decide either of these questions, the defendant being, in my opinion, entitled to succeed on the issue as to the legality of the transaction on which the plaintiff founds.

Under clause (h) of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act "no transfer can be made . . . . for an unlawful object or consideration within the meaning of section 23 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872." By section 23 of the Contract Act, the consideration or object of an agreement is said to be unlawful, among other cases, when "it is forbidden by law, or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law," and "every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful, is void."

Cohen's immediate object was clearly to secure a higher rent than the Act allowed. That this object was illegal is, I think, shown not only by the preamble or by section 4 which makes any excess above the standard rent irrecoverable, but also by section 19 which makes it an offence on the part of a landlord if he "knowingly receives whether directly or indirectly on account of the rent of any premises any sum in excess of the standard rent." There can, I think, be little doubt that the plaintiff was a party to or connived at this illegality. He was apparently aware that the defendant was in possession of the flat as Cohen's tenant, because his first notice to quit was given on the 30th October 1920. He accepted the lease, nevertheless, without stopping to enquire whether the rent which he agreed to pay was or was not in excess of the standard rent.

In any case, the transfer is unlawful because the consideration which Cohen demanded and accepted and which the plaintiff agreed to give for the grant of the lease was a rent in excess of that allowed by the Rent Act. If it be said that the consideration was not unlawful at date of the lease because the Controller had not then determined the standard rent, both Cohen and the plaintiff took the risk of the rent turning out to be more than the standard rent. The lease, if not unlawful in its inception, became unlawful and void when the Controller fixed the standard rent at Rs. 85 a month. Then, if not before, it became unlawful for Cohen to receive or the plaintiff to pay the rent reserved. The agreement was inconsistent with the express policy of the Act and tended to defeat its provisions, which disable a landlord from recovering more than the standard rent. The plaintiff, therefore, acquired no rights thereunder which he could enforce against the defendant.

The defendant, it is true, was quite willing to pay the standard rent either to Cohen or the plaintiff. He merely treated the plaintiff as standing in Cohen's shoes—his attornment does not validate the lease and it is in virtue of the lease that the plaintiff seeks to evict him.

It was said that, even under the lease, Cohen could not lawfully recover from the plaintiff more than the standard rent, but the remark does not meet the objection that either the object or the consideration of the agreement or both were unlawful. In the language of the Contract Act, if the agreement were permitted, it would defeat the provisions of the Rent Act.

I agree with my Lord that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal—Objection to costs taken for first time, whether entertainable.

An objection to an award of costs against a party cannot be entertained if taken in appeal for the first time. Such an objection should be taken in the lower Court at the time when either the judgment is delivered or the decree published.

First appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 11th Decebmber 1919.

Messrs M. L. Agarwala and P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant, Messrs. B. E. O'Coner, G. W. Dillon and N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—For the reasons stated in our judgment in First Appeal No. 28 of 1920, this appeal is dismissed. We ought, however, to take notice of one matter not discussed in that judgment. The appellant has taken the objection that the fees awarded to defendant No. 2 in the lower Court were not certified by the Pleader, nor were they certified by an affidavit of the defendant filed in accordance with Chapter XXI, rule 1 of the General Rules for Civil Courts subordinate to the High Court. Looking at the matter very technically and narrowly, it does appear that there is no certificate by the Pleader and there is no affidavit by the defendant, but there is an affidavit by the Solicitors duly instructed by the defendant which sets out, what we have no doubt is the truth, that certain sums of money were duly paid by the Solicitors to the gentlemen named in the affidavit for and on behalf of the defendant. Therefore, in substance, though not in strict form, there is the certainty at which Chapter XXI, rule 1 was aiming, namely, that the Court should be satisfied that fees were paid. If the matter had rested merely there, we are of opinion, that Dr. Agarwala's point, technical though it is, would have to be allowed; but a reference to the judgment shows that the concluding words of it were "the defendants will get their costs from the plaintiff." That was a perfectly clear intimation to the plaintiff and to the plaintiff's advisors that they would be called upon to pay the costs in the Court below incurred by the Titaghur Paper Mills. They did not raise any objection to that order at any time in the Subordinate Court, The first objection taken has been made in the Memorandum of Appeal filed in this Court. We are of opinion that these objections ought to be taken in the lower Court and should be taken at the time when either the judgment is delivered or the decree published so that the lower Court may consider whether there are circumstances which would justify it in allowing costs even though the rules have not been strictly complied with. In the lower Court all those matters are ascertainable and we consider it bad practice to allow the appellant who has taken no objection to an award of costs against him in the lower Court, to come up here in appeal and argue that which he should have put before the learned Subordinate Judge making the order. For these reasons we overrule this objection. There will be no order as to costs except that the appellant do pay the costs of the Titaghur Papers Mill in this Court including fees on the higher scale. As the Titaghur Paper Mills stood in one event to bear the whole of the liability of Rs. 25,000, their costs should be taxed upon that scale.

Mr. Jagan Nath, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case prayed to redeem the land in suit which had been mortgaged by their father for Rs. 1,525 in the year 1897 and 1898. The Courts below have dismissed the suit on the ground that it is barred by O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as in 1904 the appellants brought a suit against the mortgagees for possession on the ground that they were trespassers and that the mortgage by their father was not binding upon them by reason of absence of consideration and legal necessity.

In our opinion this appeal must succeed. O. II, r. 2 of the Code, provides that a person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any of such reliefs but shall not afterwards sue for any relief omitted, and the first question for consideration is whether the cause of action in both suits is the same. It was laid down in Dhanpat Mal v. Jhaggar Singh (1) that where mortgagors have obtained a decree for redemption and have failed to excute it, another suit to redeem will lie for the reason that the cause of action is not the same. The allegation against the present appellants is that in 1904, they did not ask to redeem, and may, therefore, not do so now. They are thus placed in a worse position than if they had secured a decree for redemption in 1904 and failed to execute it. But we are quite clear that the cause of action now is not the same cause of action as in 1904. In 1904 the cause of action was a mortgage to which the plaintiffs objected ab initio. They were attempting to avoid it and had they prayed for redemption they would have ipso facto admitted their liability to redeem the mortgage; in other words, such a prayer would have cut at the roots of their claim. On the cause of action recited in the 1904 case no redemption was possible. The cause of action in the present suit is the mortgage now admitted as binding on the plaintiffs plus a refusal of the mortgagees to accept redemption on the terms offered by the plaintiffs, Barkhurdar v. Chhatta Mal (2) is cited by the learned District Judge as being on all fours with the present case, a proposition which we cannot admit. This case is very easily distinguishable so that it is not necessary fror us to express any opinion whether we are prepared to follow the decision above cited.

In short, our finding is that the present cause of action and that of 1904 are quite different, and we accept the appeal and remand the case to the First Court for decision on the merits. Costs to be costs in the cause.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488 (5)—Maintenance, order for—Subsequent temporary stay of wife with husband, effect of.

The return of a wife to her husband temporarily after obtaining an order for maintenance may have the effect of suspending the operation of the order, it has not the effect of cancelling the order in the way in which it can be cancelled under section 488 (5) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. [p. 530, col. 1.]

Criminal Reference, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, made by the Sessions Judge of Burdwan.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Manmatha Nath Mukerjee and Panna Lal Chatterjee, for the Complainant.

Babus Amarendra Nath Bose and Lalit Mohan Sanyal, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure made by the Sessions Judge of Burdwan. It relates to proceedings under section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure instituted by one Parul Bala Debi against her husband, Satish Chandra Bhattacharjee. It appears that there were some proceedings of this nature which were infructuous and were struck off by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 2nd April 1915; but the lady after that made another application on the 8th July 1915 which resulted in the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's making, on the 14th September 1915, an order in her favour directing the husband to pay her maintenance at the rate of Rs. 10 per month. The husband, it appears, is employed by the East Indian Railway Company. He was, at the time when the proceedings were instituted, in receipt of a monthly salary of Rs. 45 which has now risen to Rs. 76 a month. The lady was at the time residing elsewhere, but towards the end of the year 1918, she returned to her husband and lived with him for a few months. While she was staying with him, a petition was filed in the Court of the Magistrate on the 24th January 1918 in which the lady purports to relinquish her claim for maintenance. The order made upon this petition by the Magistrate was that it should be filed with the record. It further appears that the lady left her husband soon after this, and on the 24th March 1919, she made a further application to the Magistrate for the payment of arrears of maintenance for one year. On the 12th April 1919, both parties put in a petition in which they agreed that the present petitioner should pay his wife Rs. 10 a month as long as she remained at the house of the petitioner's father. The petition ends thus: "We beg to ask the Hon'ble Court to pass a decree according to the above-mentioned term for Rs. 10 a month for maintenance." On this petition also the order of the Court was that it should be filed. Then, again, on the 7th January 1921, the lady made a further application to the Magistrate for payment of arrears of maintenance to the amount of Rs. 346 and on the 8th February 1921 an order under section 438 of the Code was made for the levy of the sum. Thereupon the Sessions Judge of Burdwan was invited by the present petitioner to make a reference to this Court with the result that this Court remanded the case to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate with certain directions, namely, that proper enquiries should be made on the four points set out, and that the case should be disposed of on that footing. The four points were, first, whether by the return of the wife to the husband's house towards the close of the year 1918, the order of the 14th September 1915, became inoperative; secondly, whether by reason of the arrangement made in the beginning of the year 1919, the order of the 14th September 1915 was superseded; thirdly, whether if the order of the 14th September 1915 is still in force, it should now be cancelled under the provisions of section 488, sub-section (5); and, fourthly, what amount is due to the wife if the order of the 14th September 1915 is not inoperative and has not been superseded or cancelled.

On receipt of these directions the Sub-

PARUL BALA DEBI v. SATISH CHANDRA BHATTACHARJEE.

Deputy Magistrate proceeded to take evidence and arrived at a finding, on the 17th August 1921, to the effect that a sum of Rs. 346-13 was due by the husband to the wife. Thereupon the present petitioner again moved the Sessions Judge of Burdwan to make a reference to this Court. The learned Sessions Judge, before otherwise dealing with the matter, remanded the case to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate in order that he might come to more explicit findings on the four points set out in the judgment of this Court. The Sub-Deputy Magistrate recorded such findings on the 20th December, but their effect was not to modify in any way the order which he had already made. Thereupon the Sessions Judge of Burdwan has referred the whole case to us with the recommendation that the order of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate should be set aside.

The matter for decision in this reference is, it appears to me, whether the decisions of the Magistrate on the four points are or are not correct. As regards the first point, namely, whether the order of the 14th September 1915, became inoperative by reason of the woman's having returned to live with her husband towards the end of the year 1918, it appears to me that the view taken by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate is correct. A mere temporary stay of this kind, though it may have suspended the operation of the order, had not the effect of cancelling it in the way in which it could be cancelled under section 488 (5) of the Code. Moreover, the Magistrate found that the petition to which I have referred and which was filed by the lady on the 24th January 1919, was obtained by fraud. It is obvious that such a petition could not have the effect of cancelling the order dated the 14th September 1918.

The second point is of greater importance, namely, whether by reason of agreement made in the beginning of the year 1919, the order of the 14th September 1915, was superseded. It appears to me that when the petition of compromise was filed in the Court of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, the parties had the intention of effecting a complete settlement of all questions outstanding between them; and it further seems to me that if there had been any intention of excluding the arrears of maintenance from the operation of the petition of compromise this would have been expressly mentioned therein. In my view, the decision of the learned Magistrate on the second point is correct and the intention of the parties, when they filed their petition, was, that the lady should abandon her claim to any arrears of maintenance which may have accrued due up to that date.

I think that the Sub-Deputy Magistrate has rightly decided the third point. It has been urged that the petitioner had not proper opportunity to place his case before the Court. But I am satisfied that he wilfully abstained from appearing when he had notice of the proceedings, and that this is not a just ground for disturbing the Magistrate's finding. It is certainly not proved that Parul Bala has been guilty of any irregular conduct and, having regard to the treatment she has had in the past, she has ample reason, as things at present are, for refusing to live in her husband's house. There is no ground, therefore, for cancellation under section 488 (5) of the order of the 14th September 1915.

In this view of the case, it becomes unnecessary for this Court, to consider the fourth point which was referred to the Magistrate.

In the result, the reference of the learned Sessions Judge should be accepted only so far as it relates to the arrears of maintenance anterior to the 12th April 1919; as regards the arrears of maintenance subsequent to that date, the order of the learned Sub-Deputy Magistrate should be affirmed. It will be necessary in this view to return the case to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate in order that he may calculate, on this footing, the amount of arrears of maintenance due by the petitioner to his wife.

The order of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate as regards costs, will stand. We make no further order as to costs.

On revision:

Held, that the order was without jurisdiction, and could not be sustained, inasmuch as action under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, can only be taken after the Magistrate is satisfied that immediate prevention or speedy remedy is necessary and when he is so satisfied that it is so, he must state the material facts in the order. Appeal from an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Dinapore, dated the 13th July 1923.

Mr. Bhagwan Prashad, for the Petitioners.

Mr. S. Dayal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners were the first party in a proceeding under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The facts set out in the application for revision filed in this Court are shortly these. One Lachman Lohar and Sandeo Lohar had a holding of one acre, thirteen decimals. On the 14th April 1920 these two persons sold their holding to Doma Gope and Ramkeshwar who purchased the holding half and half and it is alleged that they paid off an incumbrance upon this property created by their vendors. On the 3rd June 1920, Doma sold his half share to Akal Mahto who is the petitioner No. 1 in this case. It is alleged that the mortgage-bond paid off by Doma and Ramkeshwar was handed over to Akal and the original deed dated the 14th April 1920, remained with Ramkeshwar. Ramkeshwar is alleged to have lost the original deed and on the 18th May 1922, he lodged an information before the Police stating the fact of the loss and asking the Police to enquire into the matter. On the 14th December 1922, Ramkeshwar sold his half share in the holding to two persons, Bhusa Mahto and Bhadai Saha, who are the petitioners Nos. 2 and 3 in the present application. On the 26th May 1923, the opposite party Mahabir Mahto served a notice on Doma stating that he had come to know that he was going to transfer the property and forbade him from doing so on the allegation that Doma was really the furzidar of Mahabir Mahto. As a matter of fact, Doma had already sold his share to Akal Mahto on the 3rd June 1920 and the notice was given by Mahabir to Doma about three years after Doma had already sold his share. On the 15th June 1923, the Police submitted a report before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Dinapore stating that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace relating to the possession of the land in dispute and recommending proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. On the 2nd July 1923, the petitioners filed what is stated in the order-sheet a "protest petition," whereupon, on the same date, the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate made an order for issue of notice under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on both parties not to create a breach of the peace in respect of the land and fixed the 13th July for showing cause. On the 13th

AKAL MAHTON v. MAHABIR MAHTO.

July without taking any evidence, the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate made the order absolute as against the first party who are the petitioners in this case. Against this order the petitioners come up in revision to this Court.

Now, the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate states that he was absolutely convinced that the first party's claim was really frivolous and was based simply on the fact that their names are entered as furzidars in the sale-deed dated the 14th April 1920. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate seems to be under a complete misapprehension on this point. The deed of sale of the 14th April 1920 stands in the name of Doma and Ramkeshwar. The names of the first party are not to be found in this deed and it is stated that there is no mention in this deed about the purchasers being furzidars for anybody else. Then, the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate says: "There have been two sale-deeds of later dates purporting to re-transfer the property and one of those is by the first party dated December 1922." Here, again, the learned Magistrate appears to be under some misapprehension. The deed of December 1922 is the one by which Ramkeshwar sold his half share to Bhusa and Bhadai who were the first party in the present proceeding. There was no sale-deed by the first party, it was in favour of the first party, and it was not a re-transfer, but a conveyance by Ramkeshwar and Doma to the present petitioners. The learned Magistrate then proceeds and observes that the claim of the first party is that he lost the deed of sale of April 1920 and that the second party is falsely claiming on the strength of it. Here, again, the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate is in error. The first party never alleged that he had lost the deed of sale. The deed of sale was alleged to have been lost by Ramkeshwar, the vendor of the petitioners Nos. 2 and 3, and he is alleged to have lodged an information of the loss before the Police in May 1922.

The learned Magistrate then says that he cannot believe that a party would steal a document which did not contain his name and claim on the strength of it, and he says that the converse is much more probable. Instances are not infrequent when documents of title have been lost and have been found to be in possession of persons who have really no title to the property covered by them, and this matter can only be finally determined after taking evidence adduced by the parties.

Now, this is the whole of the judgment of the learned Magistrate, and upon these facts he held that possession was undoubtedly with the second party and he made the notice absolute for two months as against the first party.

It has been contended by the learned Vakil for the petitioners that the order made by the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate is without jurisdiction. He says that under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make any order unless and until he was satisfied that there was apprehension of a breach of the peace and that immediate prevention or speedy remedy was desirable. There is no indication in the judgment that such circumstances existed in the present case. On the other hand, the learned Vakil relies upon the Police report which recommended proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and not under section 144. He relies on the case of Karcolal Sajawal v. Shyam Lal (1) for the proposition that, before a Magistrate can take action under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, he must be of opinion that immediate prevention or speedy remedy is necessary, and when he has made up his mind that it is so, he must state the material facts in the order; and where a Magistrate passed an order directing the second party not to interfere with the first party in the cultivation of his khas land or the collection of rents from his under-tenants, and it did not appear from the proceedings that he was of opinion that immediate prevention or speedy remedy was necessary and the order made did not state the material facts of the case, it was held that the order was bad and it was set aside. He further relies on the case of Lachman Ram v. Dhiru Dusadh (2), where Mr. Justice Mullick lays it down as a proposition of law that section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is applicable only to temporary orders in urgent cases of nuisance or apprehended danger; it is not applicable in cases where there is a dispute as to land for the settlement of which section 145 provides the proper remedy. In my opinion the learned Vakil is right in his contention and the authorities cited by him support his contention.

(1) 32 C. 935; 9 C. W. N. 864; 1 C. L. J. 216; 2 Cr. L. J. 21[illegible];
(2) 48 Ind. Cas. 342; 19 Cr. L. J. 1002;

From the order of the learned Magistrate it is not at all clear that the case was of such an urgency as to require action under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Moreover, the learned Magistrate really makes an order as regards possession and he holds that the second party is undoubtedly in possession without taking any evidence on the point and without considering the documents produced or which might have been produced by the parties if a proceeding under section 145 had been initiated. I am, therefore, of opinion that the order of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate cannot stand and it must be set aside. If there is any apprehension of a breach of the peace it will be open to him to initiate proceedings under section 145 of the Code.

A preliminary objection is taken by Mr. Shiveswar Dayal, who appears for the opposite party, that the application to this Court is not maintainable as, under clause (4) of section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, it was incumbent on the petitioners to go in the first instance before the District Magistrate before coming up in revision to this Court. No doubt the District Magistrate had full power to rescind or alter the order made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and the ordinary practice in this Court is that in cases of orders made under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, the parties against whom the order is made should in the first instance approach the District Magistrate before coming up to this Court. Here, however, the learned Vakil for the petitioners argues that the order of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate is wholly without jurisdiction.

In the Full Bench case of Sheobalak Singh v. Kamaruddin Mandal (3) it was argued that the order complained of in that case, as originally made by the Deputy Magistrate, was one which was outside the scope of section 144, clause (1), and was made without jurisdiction and that in such circumstances it should not be treated as an order made under that section at all, but as an unauthorised order made without jurisdiction and that this Court should exercise its power of superintendence under section 107 of the Government of India Act and set aside the order; and in considering this argument his Lordship the Chief Justice observed as follows: "No doubt this Court has interfered and exercised its jurisdiction in such cases and if it could be shown that the order in the present case did not come within the powers conferred by the first clause of section 144, we should be entitled to interfere and set it aside." Similar observations were made by the other learned Judges who composed the Full Bench; and as, in the present case, it has been found that the order made was without jurisdiction the preliminary objection cannot prevail. The result is that the order of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate is set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (4)—Sanction to prosecute—Application giving full particulars—Order of sanction omitting to give particulars—Sanction, whether valid.

An application for sanction to prosecute should be read with the order granting such application, and if the necessary particulars required by sub-section (4) of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code are given in the application, the fact that the order omits to give these particulars would not render the sanction, a bad sanction.

Criminal appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Birbhum, dated the 1st July 1922.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal, with him Babus Lalit Mohan Sanyal and Promode Kumar Ghose, for the Appellants.

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by two persons who have been convicted of various offences in connection with a fraudulent suit brought in the Munsif's Court. The main facts found are that the appellant, Kali Singh, filed a suit against one Pasindh Roy of Kanaila, in the United Provinces, in the Court of the Munsif of Rampurhat, in the District of Birbhum, in this Province. This suit was based on a hand-note which has been found to have been a forgery, and to have been forged by the second accused, Deb Nath Roy. Kali Singh was charged with having fraudulently used as genuine a forged document purporting to be a valuable security, punishable under section 471 of the Penal Code, and also with having been a member of a criminal conspiracy for the purpose of fraudulently and dishonestly making a false claim punishable under section 209, read with section 120 B, of the Penal Code. Deb Nath was charged with forging a valuable security punishable under section 467 of the Penal Code, with abetment of the offence of fraudulently using a forged document punishable under section 471, read with section 109, and also with joining in the conspiracy punishable under section 120 B with section 209 of the Penal Code. The appellants were convicted on all these charges. Each of these accused is sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment on the principal charge, under section 471 of the Penal Code in the case of Kali Singh, and under section 467 of the Penal Code in the case of Deb Nath. Each of the accused was further sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment on the conspiracy charge, and Deb Nath was also sentenced to the additional period of one year's rigorous imprisonment on the conviction of abetment of using a forged document.

The first point urged on behalf of the appellants is that the trial is bad for want of proper sanction. Under the proviso of section 196-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure a sanction under that section for prosecution for criminal conspiracy to commit a non-cognizable offence is not necessary in the present case, since the provisions of sub-section (3) of section 195 are applicable. But it is contended that there has been no proper sanction under section 195. It is said that the sanction is contrary to the provisions of sub-section (4) of that section as the order of sanction does not give the necessary particulars. The order of sanction was passed on a petition (Exhibit 3) presented by the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, and the effective part of the order is that the application be allowed. If this order be read with the application all the details required by sub-section (4) have been supplied. We think that the petition and the order should be read together. This was the view taken in the case of Dulloo Singh v. Deputy Inspector General of Police, C. I. D., Bengal (1), and we think it is the right view. It is contended that this decision is opposed to earlier decisions on this point. But we cannot find in any of those that have been cited anything which contradicts the view that the order of sanction and the petition asking for sanction should be read together. All the rulings to which our attention was directed were to the effect that the omission to give the particulars required by sub-section (4) of section 195 renders the sanction a bad sanction. But they did not deal with the point which arises in this case. It would appear in an earlier case, Baperam Surma v. Gouri Nath Dutt (2) that the learned Judges in discharging the Rule referred to the record of the case, and it would seem that their order was based on a consideration of the petition with the order, though this is not clearly stated in the report. In another case on the Original Side of this Court reference was certainly made to the application in order to interpret the order granting sanction since the words used by the learned Judge, when passing the order, were only "very well." This case is Thaddeus v. Janaki Nath Saha (3). We, therefore, have no hesitation in following the recent ruling referred to above, and in holding that there is no flaw in the sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

(2) 20 C. 474; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 320.

The learned Sessions Judge appears to have put the facts clearly before the Jury. The only misdirection in that charge, which is suggested, is as to the legality of the conviction of Deb Nath under section 471, read with 109, of the Penal Code, and we find it hard to see what act of abetment of using the forged document was done by him other than the acts which are covered by his conviction under the other sections. We have also some doubt as to the legality of separate sentences for all the offences of which the accused were convicted. The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer, however, states that he does not press for upholding that part of the order which directs that the separate sentences passed should run consecutively. We, therefore, do not think it necessary to deal at length with these points as regards the sentence.

In the result, we uphold the convictions o the appellants, and modify the sentences to this extent that, while upholding the terms of each sentence passed under the respective sections against each of the appellants, we direct that these sentences do run concurrently and not consecutively.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Decision as to possession by Civil or Criminal Court, whether binding on Magistrate—Written statement—Statement supported by evidence of deponent—Discretion—Further evidence, when necessary.

It is not always incumbent upon a Magistrate trying a case under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code to give effect to the decision of a Civil or Criminal Court, and no hard and fast rule can be laid down in this respect. [p. 537, col. 1.]

Parmessar Singh v. Kailaspati, 35 Ind. Cas. 801; 1 P. L. J. 336; 17 Cr. L. J. 369; 1 P. L. W. 95; (1917) Pat. 1, referred to.

Where, in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, one of the parties files a written statement, and that statement is supported by his own evidence in Court, the Magistrate, in relying upon the written statement, does not act without jurisdiction; nor does he do so in not accepting a decision in a previous case of rioting as to possession. [p. 537, col. 1.]

It is in the discretion of the Magistrate in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code to take further evidence, if he thinks it is necessary to do so. If he is satisfied on the evidence produced as to the party in actual possession, it is not necessary for him to take further evidence. [p. 537, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Gopalgunj.

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was one of the second party in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The dispute related to the possession of 8 bighas 19 kathas 4 dhurs of land in village Pakri Sham. This piece of land originally formed the holding of one Moti Koeri who died leaving a widow Musammat Parbatia and two daughters Musammat Baudhi and Musammat Domini. Musammat Domini died leaving a son Jadu. After the death of Moti Koeri and his widow the holding came into the possession of Musammat Baudhi. It is alleged that Musammat Baudhi made a gift of this holding to her sister's son Jadu and to her own minor daughter Musammat Marachia by a deed of gift dated the 12th March 1920. The first party claim possession under a usufructuary mortgage, dated the 10th November 1921, executed in their favour by Jadu and the second party claim possession under a usufructuary mortgage executed in their favour in respect of the same land by Musammat Baudhi in December 1921 which deed was registered on 3rd January 1922. The proceeding was initiated on a report submitted by the Sub-Inspector of Police to the effect that there was an apprehension of immediate breach of the peace relating to the possession of the holding in dispute. On the 27th October 1922, the Magistrate made an order for drawing up proceedings under section 145 and for attachment of the land in dispute. After the proceeding had been started a Criminal case of rioting cropped up in which some of the second party were accused by the first party of carrying away certain crops grown on a portion of the land in dispute by the first party. This case was disposed of sometime in March 1923 and resulted in an acquittal of the accused persons. The proceeding under section 145 was kept in abeyance till the decision of the rioting case and was taken up again after the disposal of that rioting case. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Gopalgunj who tried the case under section 145 has held that the first party are in possession and he has declared that their possession will be maintained until they are evicted therefrom in due course of law. The second party has come up to this Court in revision against this order and the points taken by their learned Vakil are,—first, that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate has not considered the evidence adduced by the second party; secondly, that the written statement filed by Musammat Baudhi could not be used as evidence in the case, and thirdly, that if the evidence adduced by the parties before the learned Magistrate was not satisfactory, he ought to have taken further evidence in order to come to a satisfactory finding on the question of possession.

It appears that the first party examined two witnesses and the second party examined one witness and both parties filed some documents. The learned Magistrate refers to the documents produced by the second party and he refers to the judgment of the rioting case referred to above and that of another rioting case which was disposed of sometime in the year 1922 and he says that the position taken up by the parties in these rioting cases has an important bearing in the case. He considers the fact that in the rioting case of 1923 the second party had filed a written statement to the effect that the land in dispute had all along been in the possession of Musammat Baudhi, and she used to give them half the crop of the land in lieu of interest for the money advanced by them. On the 15th May 1923 the second party filed a petition in the Court below wherein they stated that, having regard to the result of the two rioting cases referred to above, the present proceedings ought to be dropped, and they further stated that Musammat Baudhi was a necessary party to the present proceedings. Musammat Baudhi was thereupon made a party and on the 31st May 1923 she filed a petition saying that she was not in possession and the first party were in possession. She was thereupon examined by the learned Magistrate and she reiterated the statement made by her in the petition and stated that the statement was made by her voluntarily. The learned Magistrate has considered all these facts and has come to the finding that the first party are in possession of the land in dispute. No doubt, he does not refer to the findings arrived at in the previous rioting cases but it cannot be said that the learned Magistrate has not taken the whole of the evidence into his consideration and that he has not taken the judgment in the two rioting cases into consideration. Besides the judgments in the two rioting cases and he usufructuary mortgage-bond executed by Musammat Baudhi, there was no other document produced by the second party. It is admitted that the one witness examined by the second party was merely a formal witness who was called to prove certain documents. Mr. Gour Chandra Pal for the petitioner further contends that the question of possession had been already decided in the rioting cases and the learned Magistrate was bound to respect the said decisions and that he has acted without jurisdiction in not doing so. He relies on the decision of the Special Bench in the case of Parmessar Singh v. Katlaspati (1). It is pointed out by Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukherji for the opposite party that the question of possession was gone into incidentally in those cases and the finding was that Musammat Baudhi was in possession. When Musammat Baudhi comes and stated that she is not in possession, the learned Magistrate was not bound to follow the decisions in the rioting cases. As has been laid down in the same Special Bench case, it is not always incumbent upon the Magistrate to give effect to decision of a Civil or Criminal Court and no hard and fast rule can be laid down in this respect. Having regard to the circumstances of the present case, it cannot be said that the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in not accepting the decision as to possession in the rioting cases. The first contention of the learned Vakil for petitioner must, therefore, be overruled.

As regards the second contention, the learned Magistrate was entitled to consider the written statement filed by Musammat Baudhi. Her written statement was, moreover, supported by her own evidence in Court and there is no ground for the contention that the learned Magistrate has acted without jurisdiction in relying upon the statement of Musammat Baudhi.

As regards the third contention, it is to be noted that it was in the discretion of the Magistrate to take further evidence, if he thought it necessary to do so. If he was satisfied upon the evidence produced in the case that the first party were in actual possession of the land it was not necessary for him to take further evidence. On the whole, although the judgment of the learned Magistrate is not as satisfactory as it ought to have been, yet I cannot say that the final order made by him is without jurisdiction. This application must, therefore, be dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 123, 498—Sessions Judge, if competent to grant bail pending hearing of reference under section 123, Criminal Procedure Code.

Pending the hearing of a reference made to a Sessions Judge under section 123 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of an order made under section 118 of that Code, the Sessions Judge has jurisdiction, under section 498, to admit the person adversely affected by that order to bail.

Criminal Reference, under section 123, clause (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, made by the Sessions Judge, Tipperah.

Mr. Mohamed Nurul Haq Choudhuri, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Orr, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The present Rule was issued calling upon the District Magistrate of Tipperah to show cause why, pending the hearing of a Reference by the Sessions Judge of Tipperah under section 123, clause (2), of the Code of Criminal Procedure, bail should not be granted to the petitioners to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate.

It appears that certain proceedings were taken against the petitioners under section 110 of the Code and an order against the petitioners was made under section 118, as the petitioners were unable to furnish the securities demanded. The proceedings were then laid before the Sessions Judge of Tippreah for orders under section 123. The petitioners urge that, pending the hearing of the Reference under section 123, sub-section (2), they should be admitted to bail. The Sessions Judge was of opinion that, having regard to the provisions of section 123, sub-section (2), he had no power to admit the petitioners to bail.

Now, the provisions of section 498, Criminal Procedure Code, regarding admission to bail are particularly wide and it is pointed out in the section itself that a Court of Session may in any case direct any person to be admitted to bail. There are no words in section 123, sub-section (2), controlling the very wide provisions of section 498. If a person has been convicted and has appealed, he can apply for bail to the Sessions Judge. In the present case as an order has been made under section 118 against the petitioners, such an order is liable, in the circumstances stated, to be revised by the Sessions Judge under the provisions of section 123, sub-section (2). In other words, the Sessions Judge may or may not confirm the order passed by the Magistrate under section 118 and it stands to reason that if in the case of a person who is convicted and who has preferred an appeal, bail is allowable, bail can similarly be allowed in the case of a person against whom an order has been made under section 118 and which order is liable to be revised by a Sessions Judge under the provisions of section 123, sub-section (2). At any rate, in our opinion, there is no reason why any restriction should be placed upon the wide provisions of section 498. In this view of the matter, we think the Sessions Judge had power to admit the petitioners to bail and we accordingly send the matter back to the learned Sessions Judge in order that he may deal with the matter of the application for bail in the light of the remarks made above.

Criminal Revision from an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Monghyr, dated the 21st May 1923.

Mr. S. M. Naimutullah, for the Petitioners.

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners were the first party in a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The dispute relates to the possession of 250 bighas of land in Mauza Bira in the District of Monghyr. On the 22nd November 1922, Musammat Wahidunnissa of the first party filed a petition before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to the effect that there was imminent likelihood of a breach of the peace in respect of the possession of the 250 bighas of land in dispute. An order under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was passed and the Sub-Inspector of Police was directed to enquire into the matter and submit a report. The Sub-Inspector submitted his report whereupon proceedings under section 145 were ordered to be drawn up on the 5th December 1922; and by an order of the same date it was directed that the first party should produce her witnesses on the 20th December 1922.

WAHIDUNNISSA v. PICHIT LAL MISSIR.

In the proceeding as originally drawn up the petitioner No. 1, Wahidunnissa, was the only member of the first party. On the 20th December 1922, the second party appeared and filed a petition stating that certain other persons who were interested in the land in dispute should also be made parties, and upon this application, Azizur Rahman and Kamaluddin were added as first party in the proceeding. The three persons of the first party jointly own a 10-annas share in the village and the second party own a 6-annas share. Several adjournments were taken by the parties in order to settle their disputes out of Court; and on the 17th March 1923, the learned Magistrate, while postponing the case to the 3rd April, directed that the parties must either settle all matters in the meantime amicably or must come ready with evidence on that date. He stated: "I must not allow further adjournments on any account." On the 3rd April 1923, a petition was again filed by both parties for a week's adjournment in order to enable them to come to terms. This application was rejected, and the first party were called upon to produce their evidence. They thereupon examined six witnesses and the order on the 3rd April 1923 was that the case was adjourned to the 12th April 1923 for the evidence of the second party. On the 11th April 1923 a petition was filed on behalf of the first party wherein it was stated that as there was a talk of compromise going on between the parties the first party were not ready with their evidence on the 3rd April 1923 and they examined only such witnesses on that date as were present in Court. They prayed for issue of summonses on a number of other witnesses whom they wanted to examine on the next day. The petition was put up before the Magistrate with an office note to the effect that the case was a section 145 case, that the petition filed by the first party was for having summonses served upon witnesses and that written summonses were attached therewith. This application with the office note being put up before the learned Magistrate, he made an order to the effect "Let it be served." On the 12th April 1923 the case was again adjourned as the learned Magistrate had no time to take up the case, and the next date fixed for the hearing was the 24th April 1923. On the 24th April 1923, the first party wanted to examine the witnesses named in their petition of the 11th April. The learned Magistrate examined two of those witnesses and refused to examine the rest. The order passed upon this petition runs thus: "These are fresh witnesses, not named in the first list of witnesses; can't examine them; file." After rejecting the petition of the first party and after examining two more witnesses for the first party, the learned Magistrate postponed the case to the 27th April 1923 for taking the evidence of the second party. The evidence of the second party was duly taken, and ultimately the learned Magistrate passed his final order declaring the second party to be in possession. The first party thereupon filed the present application for revision to this Court, and one of the main grounds urged before the Bench before whom the application was filed was that the first party, Azizur Rahman, had his witnesses ready but that those witnesses were not examined and that the statement in the order of the learned Deputy Magistrate to the effect that Azizur Rahman did not contest the proceedings was incorrect.

This Court thereupon made an order calling upon the Deputy Magistrate to report on the petition particularly as regards the allegation that the first party, Azizur Rahman, did contest the proceedings and had his witnesses ready but that those witnesses were not examined. The learned Deputy Magistrate has submitted an explanation, and he says that, as a matter of fact, Azizur Rahman filed a written statement and thereafter never appeared to contest the proceedings.

It has been pointed out by learned Counsel for the petitioners that the petition of the 24th April 1923 was, as a matter of fact, signed by the Mukhtar for Azizur Rahman, although the petition purported to be on behalf of Bibi Wahidunnissa only. He also points out that certain other petitions were also filed which bear the signature of the Mukhtar for Azizur Rahman alone and he contends that, as a matter of fact, Azizur Rahman did contest the proceedings.

Mr. G. C. Pal on behalf of the opposite party contends that, assuming that Azizur Rahman did contest the proceedings and that the application of the 24th April 1923 was really an application on behalf of Azizur Rahman, that fact does not alter the position. He contends that it was in the discretion of the learned Magistrate to refuse to examine the witnesses who were produced on the 24th April 1923 and he relies on the case of Samir Sheikh v. Jahed Sheikh (1). In that case it was held by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court that a Magistrate acting under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, has a discretion in the matter of examination of witnesses. He is not bound to examine all the witnesses adduced by the parties, but may limit the number for good and sufficient reason. It was further laid down that the discretion is one which must be exercised with due care and caution and with careful regard to the circumstances of each particular case. That case clearly lays down the proposition that, in a proper case, it will be in the discretion of the Magistrate to refuse to examine all the witnesses produced by any party. It appears in the present case that, although Azizur Rahman was not a party in the proceedings as originally drawn up, yet the proceedings were amended on the 20th December 1922 and Azizur Rahman filed his written statement on the 10th January 1923; and, although the first list of witnesses was filed before Azizur Rahman had filed his written statement, still it was open to him to come ready with his witnesses on the 3rd April 1923 when the witnesses of the first party were examined. Moreover, it appears that when the Magistrate recorded his order on the 3rd April 1923 that the case was adjourned to the 12th April 1923 for the purpose of taking the evidence of the second party, no objection was raised by the first party alleging that they had other witnesses to examine or other evidence to produce. On the 24th April the learned Magistrate exercise his discretion: he examined two more witnesses for the first party, although the first party had closed their case and the case was adjourned in order to take the evidence of the second party, and after examining two more witnesses he refused to examine the fresh witnesses produced on that date. Now, if that is a matter of discretion, I am unable to say that the learned Deputy Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in refusing to examine the witnesses produced on the 24th April 1923.

Learned Counsel for the petitioners relies upon the case of Biswanath Mahapatra v. Shivanand Saraswati (2). The facts of that case are different from those of the present case. In that case the question related to the right to collect rent from certain tenants; both parties claimed the right to collect rent from tenants of the lands in dispute. The learned Deputy Magistrate examined some of the tenants, and as regards those tenants he held that the party in whose favour those tenants had deposed was in possession by collecting rent from those tenants. There were altogether fifty-eight tenants on the land, and one of the parties wanted to examine all those tenants and it was argued on his side that all his witnesses who were the tenants of the land were present in Court but that the learned Deputy Magistrate refused to examine all of them and, therefore, there was a denial of justice. It was held that, although it was discretionary for the Magistrate to refuse to examine all the witnesses, yet, having regard to the circumstances of that particular case, there was a denial of justice, inasmuch as the learned Magistrate had proceeded to declare possession in favour of the party in whose favour the tenants had given evidence, and if the other tenants had also been examined it was likely that the learned Magistrate would have made an order in favour of that party as regards the other tenants also. The witnesses whom the Deputy Magistrate refused to examine in that case were the witnesses named in the first list and they were not fresh witnesses; and, in remanding the case, Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad observed. "It must, however, be mentioned that the second party is not entitled to examine any witness not mentioned in the list of persons (hazri) filed on the 3rd December 1920." Therefore, in that case also the party was limited only to those witnesses whom he had named in the first list. In the present case, the witnesses who were not examined were witnesses who were not named in the first list but who were witnesses named in a fresh list, and I am unable to hold that the learned Deputy Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in not examining those witnesses. This was the chief point taken on behalf of the petitioners.

Another point taken on their behalf was that the learned Deputy Magistrate was wrong in admitting into evidence a written statement which had not been properly proved. It appears that a copy of the written statement was filed by the second party but the original was not produced and the copy was admitted and marked as an exhibit after examining the copyist and the comparing clerk who had prepared the copy. This was, no doubt, an irregular procedure. But it appears that no objection was taken to the document being taken in evidence and it was marked as an exhibit without any objection. The fact of the document being marked as an exhibit without being duly proved may be an illegality, but it does not affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to pass the final order in this case.

The last objection taken on behalf of the petitioner is, that the learned Deputy Magistrate has not considered a document marked 'X' which is a report of the Sub-Inspector in a previous proceeding. The learned Deputy Magistrate expressly refers to this document and comments upon it; and there is no reason to hold that he did not consider this piece of evidence on behalf of the first party.

None of the grounds taken by learned Counsel for the petitioners can, therefore, be entertained; and this application must, therefore, be rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 540—Examination of witnesses after close of case—Illegality—Discretion of Magistrate, exercise of.

After both sides to a case had closed their respective cases and after arguments had been heard and a date had been fixed for delivery of judgment, two witnesses who were named by the prosecution were examined by the Magistrate under section 540 of the Criminal Procedure Code;

Held, that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was entirely unjustifiable and the trial must be set aside.

The power conferred by section 540 of the Criminal Procedure Code on Magistrates is very wide, but the wider the power, the more cautious should be the exercise of discretion on the part of the Magistrate.

Criminal revision against an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Krishnagar, dated the 28th August 1922, affirming that of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Second Class, Kushtia, dated the 8th August 1922.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Dwijendra Krishna Dutt, for the Petitioner.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukherjee and Panna Lal Chatterjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a complaint was lodged against the accused Natabar Ghose on the 27th October 1921, under section 408, Indian Penal Code. From the order-sheet which has been placed before us by Mr. Sanyal who appeared on behalf of the accused, it is clear that there was a protracted hearing of the case before the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Kushtia; the case for the prosecution was not closed till the 9th June 1922, and the case for the defence was not closed till the 14th July 1922. Arguments on behalf of the prosecution were heard on the 18th July and the 25th July 1922 was fixed as the date for delivery of judgment. It appears that on the 28th July 1922, after both sides had closed their respective cases and after arguments had been heard and a date had been fixed for delivery of judgment, two witnesses who were named by the prosecution were examined before the Magistrate, the Magistrate having exercised his powers under section 540, Criminal Procedure Code. The accused rightly complains before us that the procedure which was adopted by the Magistrate was one which was entirely unjustifiable. It is pointed out on behalf of the accused that, although the terms of section 540 are very wide, the wider the power, the more cautious should be the exercise of discretion on the part of the Magistrate. There is a great deal of force in this argument and we think that the action of the Magistrate in summoning the two witnesses on the 28th July 1922, cannot be justified on any view of the matter.

The conviction of the petitioner under section 408 and the sentence imposed on him must, therefore, be set aside and the case against the accused must be re-tried. Such re-trial is to be held before a Magistrate other than the Sub-Deputy Magistrate who originally tried this case or by such Magistrate as may be nominated by the District Magistrate.

The accused will remain on the same bail till the disposal of the case by the new Magistrate.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 383—Nikah khawan, whether bound to perform Nikah—Demand of heavy fee, whether an offence.

A nikah khawan is not bound to read a nikah for a person unless he chooses to do so, and it is no offence for him to demand any fee he likes for doing so.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Multan, with his No. 216-J. of 1922.

FACTS.—Nizam Din, the accused petitioner, is a nikah khawan. Allah Rakhiya, the complainant, engaged the petitioner to read the nikah for the complainant's younger brother. When the people were collected, the petitioner refused to perform the ceremony and enter the marriage in his register unless he was first paid Rs. 5. A great deal of dispute ensued and eventually the complainant paid Rs. 5 and the marriage was performed. The petitioner said that he had received only Rs. 2, of which he himself had to get Re. 1, the remainder being spent on payment to the girdawar of the nikah khawans, the chaukidar and for postage expenses. The petitioner was prosecuted by the complainant for extortion. The Honorary Magistrate came to a finding that Rs. 5 had actually been paid by the complainant to the petitioner and, convicting the petitioner under section 384, Indian Penal Code, sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 15, in default of payment to undergo two weeks' rigorous imprisonment. The evidence for the prosecution is, in my opinion, credible. Several respectable persons deposed that Rs. 5 had actually been paid after protest to the petitioner, and I consider that the Magistrate came to a correct finding on facts.

GROUNDS.—The definition of extortion in section 383, Indian Penal Code, runs:—

"Whoever intentionally puts any person in fear of any injury to that person or to any other, and thereby dishonestly induces the person so put in fear, etc."

In cases under this section the threat must be of an injury, which means a harm illegally caused. Now, in the present case, doubtless harm was caused to the complainant and the persons attending the marriage, but it cannot be said that the harm was caused illegally. The District Board of Muzaffargarh has laid down certain rules, a copy of which is on the record, regarding the registration of marriages.

Rule 9 reads:—"At the time of performing a marriage the nikah khawan in addition to his customary dues, will get 6 annas more for every marriage, which will be distributed as follows:—

MAHADU v. EMPEROR.

"Girdawar Qazi, 4 annas, District Board fee, 1½ annas, postage stamps, ½ anna."

Now, it is nowhere laid down what the customary dues are, and, theoretically, a nikah khawan might demand any fee that he likes. There is no law forbidding him to do so. His demand for Rs. 5 was not illegal, because his due is not prescribed by law. The petitioner's action did not put any one in fear of such an injury as is contemplated in section 383, Indian Penal Code, and I, therefore, forward the record to the High Court and recommend that the conviction be set aside and the fine, which has been paid, be refunded.

JUDGMENT.—A nikah khawan is not bound to read a nikah for a person unless he chooses to do so, and it is certainly no offence for him to demand any fee he likes for doing so. I agree with the learned Sessions Judge and, setting aside the conviction and sentence, acquit Nizam Din. Fine if paid will be refunded

M. addressed an application to a Deputy Commissioner, saying that his application to the Police was not enquired into and praying that the Deputy Commissioner should order an enquiry or start himself an enquiry. M. did not ask for the trial and punishment of the accused:

Held, that the application was not a "complaint" for the purposes of section 211 of the Act.

As a matter of judicial prudence, sanction to prosecute for making a false complaint ought not to be granted unless the complaint has been properly dealt with and dismissed.

Revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Yeotmal, dated the 20th March 1923, in Criminal Case No. 907 of 1923.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The applicant's petition was addressed to the Deputy Commissioner, and not to a Magistrate or the District Magistrate. It is stated therein that his applications to the Police had not been enquired into, and that he wished the Deputy Commissioner to order the Police to make an enquiry early or to make it himself on the spot. He did not ask for the trial and punishment of the accused. The application was referred to the Police for enquiry and report by Mr. Khan, Deputy Commissioner. On receipt of the Police report Mr. Tucker, as District Magistrate, passed the order sought to be revised. Mr. Tucker states that the applicant's petition was a complaint before the District Magistrate accusing five Banjaras of having committed dacoity and that the accusation was false. He granted sanction to prosecute the applicant under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code for filing the false complaint. It is clear that the petition was not a complaint at all and the order passed by Mr. Tucker as Magistrate sanctioning prosecution cannot be upheld. Even assuming that the petition was a complaint, as a matter of judicial prudence at least, no sanction ought to have been granted until the complaint was properly dealt with and dismissed. This has not been done. The complainant has not been examined at all nor is there a specific order of dismissal. Whether it was open to Mr. Tucker to pass an order under section 211, Criminal Procedure Code, as Deputy Commissioner, it is unnecessary to discuss. I cannot allow the order sanctioning prosecution to stand on the ground that it could have been passed by Mr. Tucker as Deputy Commissioner. I set aside the order sanctioning prosecution.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 411, 414—Receiving stolen property—No evidence about property being stolen—Conviction, whether justifiable—Offence under s. 411, prosecution, duty of.

Although there may be cases in which it may not be necessary in a case under sections 411 or 414, Penal Code, to prove that the property was stolen from a particular individual. Yet, as a rule a person cannot be called upon to account for the possession of property where there is no evidence whatever that the property has been stolen.

Emperor v. Budhankhan, 17 Ind. Cas. 537; 14 Bom. L. R. 893; 13 Cr. L. J. 792, referred to.

A mere suspicion against the accused that the property was not his own would not justify a conviction under section 411 in the absence of direct or circumstantial evidence, establishing beyond a reasonable doubt that the property was stolen.

In order to justify a conviction under section 411, Penal Code, it is the duty of the prosecution to establish that the accused dishonestly retained the property and had knowledge at the time of the receipt that the property was obtained in one of the ways specified in section 410 of the Indian Penal Code.

Appeal against the finding of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Basim, dated 5th June 1923, in Criminal Case No. 21 of 1923.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment also disposes of Criminal Appeal No. 61-B of 1923. The appellants are Yasinkhan and Mohamad Hashim. The facts stated for the prosecution are mainly these. On the 18th of February last the two appellants were found in the Basim bazar trying to sell a black bullock. On being questioned Mohamad Hashim admitted having sold a red bullock at Dhanora to one Gyanu for Rs. 25. It can be held as proved that the two accused did sell the red bullock and were trying to sell the black one.

The charge against each accused runs as follows:—

"Did dishonestly retain stolen property, to wit, two bullocks belonging to persons unknown knowing them to be stolen property." Thus appellants have been convicted of dishonestly retaining stolen property, though it has not been established to whom that property belonged or that possession of the bullocks had in fact been transferred by theft, extortion, or robbery, or that the animals were property which had been criminally misappropriated or in respect of which criminal breach of trust had been committed.

To prove the case against the two appellants it was necessary for the prosecution to establish dishonest retention of the bullocks and that the accused had knowledge at the time of receipt that the property was obtained in one of the ways specified in section 410 of the Indian Penal Code. Though there may be cases in which it may not be necessary in a case under section 411 or 414, Indian Penal Code, to prove that the property was stolen from a particular individual, see the case of Emperor v. Budhankhan (1), yet, as a rule, it may be taken as settled law that a person cannot be called upon to account for the possession of property when there is no evidence whatever that the property has been stolen.

As it has not been proved in the present case that the bullocks found with the two appellants were stolen property, in my opinion, a conviction under section 411 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be sustained. There may be strong suspicion against the accused that the animals they were trying to dispose of were not their own but in the absence of direct or circumstantial evidence establishing beyond a reasonable doubt that the animals were stolen property the appellants must be acquitted.

I set aside their convictions and direct that appellants be set at liberty.

Jurisdiction, civil or revenue—Suit for share in occupancy tenure, nature of—Civil Court, whether can take cognizance.

A suit to establish the plaintiff's right to a share in an occupancy tenure is cognizable by a Civil Court.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 17th March 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 21st July 1919.

Mr. Faqir Chand, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Sheo Narain and Badri Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A reference to the pedigree table, which will be found in the body of the lower Appellate Court's judgment, will explain the relationship between the parties. The main question in the case is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to share in the occupancy teanancy which in 1852 was entered in the name of Lehna Singh alone. The contention for the plaintiffs has been that the acquisition of the tenancy was effected by the whole family, and that Lehna Singh's name alone was entered in the Revenue Records as the representative of the whole family.

The Courts below have decided that Lehna Singh was acting on behalf of the whole family and this decision, right or wrong, being one of fact, cannot be challenged in second appeal. The question which has been hotly debated in this Court is whether this is a suit entertainable by a Civil Court and, even if it is such, whether the issue regarding the claim to occupancy rights was not such as should have been transferred for decision to a Revenue Court under the proviso to section 77 of the Tenancy Act.

Had the plaintiffs not been recorded as tenants-at-will under the defendants the matter would have been easier of decision. The suit would then have been one for a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to a share in the occupancy rights already established by the defendants and for joint possession. The complication in the case, however, arises from the fact that since 1862 the plaintiffs have been recorded as tenants-at-will in respect of a portion of the land, holding under the defendants. In 1916 the plaintiffs claimed occupancy rights and were served by the defendants with a notice of ejectment whereupon the plaintiffs contested their liability to ejectment by suits in the Revenue Courts. The Collector held that the plaintiffs were not occupancy tenants but tenants-at-will, and the plaintiffs were accordingly, ejected from the land to recover which they have brought this suit.

If the issue whether the plaintiffs are occupancy tenants must be referred to the Revenue Courts under the proviso to section 77 of the Tenancy Act, it is obvious that the matter will be res judicata between them in those Courts, and it is admitted on behalf of the respondents that, if the matter is one determinable by the Revenue Courts, the case should not be remitted to the Revenue Courts but should be finally settled in this Court. There can be no doubt that, strictly speaking, the landlords, who have not been made parties to this suit, should have been impleaded for, clearly, they will be affected by the result. Instead of having in prospect the extinction of the occupancy on the failure of the defendants' line, the prospects of such extinction will become far more remote and problematic, if it be held, that plaintiffs' line also must disappear before the occupancy becomes extinct. We have to envisage the fact, however, that the landlords are not parties to this suit, and to bear in mind that they will not be bound by any decision in this case.

The position then is as follows:—The defendants are the admitted owners of an occupancy right, and the question for decision is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a share in that right. It will be observed that this is not a suit between a tenant and a landlord to establish occupancy rights. It is a suit in which the plaintiffs seek to establish their right to a share in an already esatablished occupancy tenure. The plaintiffs deny that they were ever tenants holding under the defendants and claim an interest in the tenancy equal to that of the defendants. Though the result will be anomalous in that the landlords, who are not parties to this suit may refuse to recognize the plaintiffs' title, we are unable to hold that the matter is one which, under the Statute, can be heard and determined only by a Revenue Court, and we conclude that the Civil Courts have jurisdiction.

On this finding, we dismiss the appeal wirth costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 66, 90—Sale proclamation—Statement as to revenue essential—Omission, effect of—Material loss—Burden of proof.

Under O. XXI, r. 66, of the Civil Procedure Code a proclamation of sale should contain a statement as to the revenue assessed upon the estate to be sold. It is a material matter and its omission is the omission of a matter which would enable the judgment-debtor to base an application for setting aside the sale if he could comply with the other condition that the Code provides.

Macnaghten v. Mahabir Pershad Singh, 10 I. A. 25; 9 C. 656; 11 C. L. R. 494; 7 Ind. Jur. 164; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 417; 4 Shome L. R. 285; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1086 (P. C.), followed.

Where a judgment-debtor applies to have a sale in execution of a decree set aside it is for him to establish before the Court that he has suffered damage and if he fails to produce evidence on the point and does not ask for any opportunity to do so, it is too late in an appeal to the Privy Council for him to ask for such an opportunity on the ground that had he had such an opportunity he might have been able to satisfy the Court that he had suffered material damage.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Their Lordships see no need to reserve further consideration of this case. The question that it raises is a question which is more of procedure than of law, and arises under the execution, by way of sale, of a decree made by the Subordinate Judge of Wardha at a date which is not exactly defined, but which was clearly before the 6th April 1918. On this latter date that decree was sent down to the Deputy Commissioner of the District for execution, and on the 16th July 1918, the sale under that decree was proclaimed.

It is alleged by the appellants who were the judgment-debtors under the decree, that that proclamation was imperfect, and the first appellant, on the 20th August 1918, made an application to the proper Court for the purpose of having the proclamation amended and the sale adjourned. The ground upon which he based that application was that, first, the revenue had not been properly defined in the proclamation, and, further, that there was no adequate description of the property that was about to be sold.

The rules which govern the sale in that District are the same as those established by the Code of Civil Procedure. Under section 66* of that Code, it is plain that the proclamation should contain the statement as to the revenue assessed upon the estate, and this Board, in a case reported in Macnaghten v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (1), have held that that is a material matter and that its omission is the omission of a matter which would enable the judgment debtor to base an application for setting aside the sale if he could comply with the other condition that the Code provides.

The sale had been fixed for the 23rd August 1918 and consequetly this application was only three days before the sale was to take place. The Sub-Divisional Officer, before whom the matter was heard, did not think that it was desirable that the sale should be postponed; for this purpose it would have been necessary to have had a further month's advertisement, and accordingly he adjourned the application until after the sale had taken place. The sale did duly take place on the 23rd August and on the 27th August the application was heard. What took place upon that hearing is a matter of some dispute, but it is clear that the present appellants did not appear. Of course, it is plain that if the hearing were regarded as merely the hearing of an adjourned application to postpone the sale, the fact that the sale had already taken place would have itself defeated the application; it would then have become too late. But it appears to have been regarded in a more liberal sense and the learned Judge before whom it came regarded it as an application under r. 90 of O. XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure, which entitles a person who has been injured by an imperfect proclamation to apply to the Court to set it aside on the ground of material irregularity, provided that he proves to the satisfaction of the Court that the material irregularity has caused him substantial injury.

It is not easy to see exactly what occurred on the hearing because we have no short hand note of the judgment, and the only reference to it is contained in a summary of the proceedings in the order-sheet. That recites the fact of the sale and refers to the omission of the land revenue as one of the grounds upon which the application for amendment of the proclamation had originally been based, and contains the statement: "I believe the irregularity is immaterial, and such shrewd purchasers as" the two purchasers of the property "would not bid till they knew the land revenue. I, therefore, again reject the objection." If by that was meant that the omission of the land revenue was immaterial for the purposes of r. 90 (supra,) which entitles the person injured to apply on the ground of a material irregularity, the learned Judge was wrong. If, on the other hand, he meant by it that it was immaterial because, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, there was nothing to lead him to believe that there had been any damage whatever suffered, his observation would be less open to question.

From that judgment an appeal was brought before the Deputy Commissioner himself, one of the grounds of it being that the irregularities complained of had resulted in an inadequate price being realised. It is by no means plain to their Lordships that on that hearing the appellants did, in fact, insist upon the omission of the land revenue as one of the grounds of complaint. If introduced at all in the notice of appeal it was only introduced by implication, where it was said that the lower Court had admitted that the proclamation was defective. The specific grounds on which it is alleged that the imperative provisions of law relating to proclamations were not followed do not include this matter; but, at any rate, it was very definitely asserted that the irregularities had resulted in an inadequate price.

Upon the hearing of that appeal, the appellants appear to have made no application whatever to be permitted to call evidence to prove that they had, in fact, suffered material damage by what had taken place. They did not ask that the matter should be sent back for hearing upon that head by the Sub-Divisional Officer, nor, indeed, that the Deputy Commissioner himself should hear evidence upon it. It appears to have been argued on the facts as they stood, and the result was that the Deputy Commissioner decided that the omission was one which was not likely to have had any effect on the bidding in the auction.

(1) 10 I. A. 25; 9 C. 656; 11 C. L. R. 494; 7 Ind. ur. 164; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 417; 4 Shome L. R. 285; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1086 (P. C.).

* O. XXI, r. 66 (?) [Ed.]

In these circumstances, remembering that it lay upon the appellants to establish before the Court that they had suffered damage before they could start their application for setting aside the sale; that they never did bring forward any evidence whatever upon the point, and they never appear to have asked for liberty to do it, it appears to the Board too late now to come and say that had they had such an opportunity they might have been able to satisfy the Court that they had suffered such damage and that the opportunity should be afforded them now.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should fail and should be dismissed with costs accordingly.

Mr. C. B. Parakh, for the Applicant.

Messrs. N. G. Bose, R. B., and P. Lobo, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—The facts of this case are that the, plaintiff, Singhai Dalchand, despatched 4 wagon loads of grain to Bombay through the defendant No. 1 (G. I. P. Railway Company). This grain was sold by the plaintiff to a firm called Gangji Takarsi of Bombay but as the hundis given by that firm were dishonoured, the plaintiff wanted to stop the goods in transit. He wired to the Goods Superintendent, G. I. P. Railway Company at Bombay, to withhold delivery, but 2 wagon loads had already been delivered and the remaining two were delivered by the Railway Company to the defendant No. 2, Topan Harji, to whom the goods have been sold or transferred by the firm of Gangji Takarsi. The plaintiff, therefore, brought a suit in the Court of the District Judge at Saugor to recover the price of the goods from the defendants.

The Railway Company pleaded that the Saugor Court had no jurisdiction as both the defendants reside in Bombay, and the cause of action arose there. The defendant No. 2 moved the Court for a stay in order to enable him to apply for a transfer and he now prays in the present application asking this Court to withdraw the suit or return the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court on the ground that the Saugor Court has no jurisdiction.

The contention of the applicant is that, as the cause of action arose solely in Bombay, the case is exclusively triable there. I do not propose to go into the merits of the case at all, because it is obvious that the present application cannot lie. The case is on all fours with Abu Bakar Abdul Rahiman & Co. v. Rambux (1). This Court has no jurisdiction to direct transfer from the Saugor Court to any Court in Bombay which is outside its jurisdiction. No Court can direct any transfer from one Court to another unless both Courts are subordinate to it. The same case lays down that, even if a High Court is of opinion that a suit, which has been duly instituted in a Court subordinate to it, should proceed in another Court beyond the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of such High Court, it is doubtful whether it is competent to direct the former Court to return the plaint for presentation to the latter. Assuming that it is so competent, the High Court should not adopt such a course save upon most exceptional grounds.

(1) 40 Ind. Cas. 393; 13 N. L. R. 81.

It is admitted by the learned Pleader for the applicant that he cannot ask for withdrawal of the suit since under section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code the withdrawal must be followed either by trial by itself of the case by the Court withdrawing it or by transfer to some Court subordinate to it, and if the Saugor Court has no jurisdiction then neither this Court nor any other Court in the Province can have any.

As regards the making of an order for the return of the plaint I adopt the reasoning of Stanyon, A. J. C., in the case quoted above, in Abu Bakar Abdul Rahiman & Co. v. Rambux (1). Even supposing that it was competent to this Court to decide that the plaint in this case should be returned for presentation to the Court having jurisdiction in Bombay, the exceptional grounds referred to in that case do not exist here. The jurisdiction of the Saugor Court has already been challenged by the defendant No. 1 and will naturally be challenged by the defendant No. 2. An issue will certainly be framed, and if the Court holds that it has no jurisdiction the plaint will be returned to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court. If the Court holds that it has jurisdiction, that is a matter which will be considered in appeal. The defendant, therefore, has an opportunity of challenging the jurisdiction of the Court.

The present application is clearly unsustainable and must be dismissed. The applicant will pay the costs of the non-applicant No. 1 (plaintiff). The non-applicant No. 2, the Railway Company, who support the application will bear their own costs.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42, proviso, object of—Suit, when barred—Injunction, nature of—Injunction, when can be claimed—Amendment of plaint—Appellate Court, power of—Amendment, when not allowable.

The object of the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is to prevent a multiplicity of suits, and to prevent a plaintiff, who has obtained a declaration, from filing a fresh suit for possession. In order that a suit can be held as not maintainable by reason of this proviso, it must be shown that the defendant was in possession, and that, as against him, the plaintiff could have obtained an order for delivery of possession. [p. 551, col. 1.]

Malijya Pillai v. Tirumalaperumal Pillai, 12 Ind. Cas. 170; 36 M. 62; 21 M. L. J. 1022; 10 M. L. T. 277; (1912) M. W. N. 161, relied on.

An injunction is a discretionary relief and cannot be obtained by a plaintiff out of possession, when he does not ask for possession against defendants who are actually in possession. [p. 551, col. 1.]

Mir Husain Bux v. Kando, 32 Ind. Cas. 689; 9 S. L. R. 174 and Rathnasabapathi Pillai v. Ramasami Aiyar, 5 Ind. Cas. 630; 33 M. 452; 20 M. L. J. 301; (1910) M. W. N. 112; 7 M. L. T. 311, relied on.

Although an Appellate Court has very wide powers in the matter of permitting an amendment of the plaint in a suit, yet that Court will not grant such permission if the plaintiff has already had an opportunity of amending his plaint, and has not availed himself of it, and the amendment is likely to operate prejudicially to the defendant. [p. 552, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal arises have been exhaustively set out in the judgment of the Trial Court and it is unnecessary to re-capitulate them. On the pleadings, the learned Judge of the Trial Court framed five issues amongst which Issue No. 4 was as follows :—

"Whether the plaintiff has possession of the Jacobabad Tikana and its properties; if not, whether the present suit is maintainable".

Upon the first part of the issue the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had not possession of the Jacobabad Tikana or its properties, and on the second part that the suit was not maintainable as framed and he, therefore, dismissed it.

On a careful consideration of the evidence in the case and the judgment of the lower Court, I see no reason whatever to differ from the finding of the learned Judge that the plaintiff has not been shown to have had either the possession of the temple or the other properties appurtenant to it. This finding of the lower Court is borne out by the plaint itself in the case, as in paragraph 11 of the plaint the allegation of the plaintiff is that during his absence defendants-respondents Nos. 2 and 3 trespassed on the tikana and began to interfere with the collection of the tikana dues and recovery of rents of the shops attached thereto. And in paragraph 2 of the plaint it was stated that the defendants declined to give up possession of the tikana in spite of the repeated demands of the plaintiff. The position, therefore, appears to be perfectly clear that at the time the suit was filed the plaintiff-appellant was out of possession of the Jacobabad Tikana and what he substantially prayed for was that the tikana should be restored to his possession and the defendants evicted therefrom.

Now, it is the common ground that attached to the Jacobabad Tikana there are four shops situate at Jacobabad and a share of 8 pies out of 16 annas in a factory situated at Sukkur and known by the name of Dwarkadas Isardas Factory. Plaintiff's prayer in his plaint was that he be declared the rightful successor to Pahilajrai's Gaddi and in that capacity entitled to receive the share of profits from the Dwarkadas Isardas Factory at Sukkur and that he should also be declared the owner of the Jacobabed Tikana and for the issue of an injunction restraining defendants-respondents Nos. 1 to 5 from interfering with the plaintiff's lawful possession of the Jacobabad Tikana and also from interfering with the enjoyment of the profits receivable by way of rents from the four shops attached to the tikana. In their written statement the defendants took up the plea that the suit was not properly framed as the appropriate consequential relief which the plaintiff should have sought was one for possession and not for an injunction and, therefore, the suit was barred by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. It was apparently in consequence of this plea that the issue was raised whether the suit as framed was maintainable.

The plaintiff-appellant who has appealed against the finding of the learned Judge as to the maintainability of the suit has contended on appeal by his learned Counsel Mr. Isardas that the suit was correctly framed and even if the frame of the suit was not what it should have been, the case is a fit one wherein the lower Court should have allowed an amendment of the plaint and the lower Court has erred in not doing so. The issue before this Court which has been argued both by the Counsel for the appellant and the Pleader for the respondents has been, first, whether the suit as framed was not correct. In the consideration of this question it would be necessary to consider the plaintiff's suit with regard to the various properties mentioned in the plaint separately, and I propose, therefore, in the first instance, to discuss the question as to whether the suit can be deemed to have been correctly framed for a declaration and injunction in respect of the tikana and, I have remarked above, that the paragraphs in the plaint to which I have referred, clearly show that defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 had entered into possession of the tikana and plaintiffs object by the suit was to have them evicted and possession restored to him. And it is important to bear in mind that the plaintiff's prayer was not only for a declaration of his right to the gaddi but also for a declaration of his right of ownership to the Jacobabad Tikana. He asks for an order from the Court to be placed in possession of this tikana and as a natural consequence to evict from it those who had trespassed upon it. In my opinion, therefore, under these circumstances, the prayer for a bare declaration was infructuous and it was necessary to apply for a consequential relief not in the shape of an injunction merely, as I shall presently show, but for possession of the property in dispute. The proviso to section 42, Specific Relief Act, provides: "that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so."

This is a clear case where there is right to consequential relief and the object of the proviso is to prevent multiplicity of suits and a plaintiff, after obtaining a declaration, from filing a fresh suit for possession of the property. It is further to be borne in mind that under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act declaration is a matter which is within the discretion of the Court whether to grant or not. It was argued that the injunction that was sought for was by way of consequential relief and no further relief need be asked. To this argument the answer is to be found in the case of Mir Hussein Bux v. Kando (1) where it was held, "An injunction is an equitable relief which cannot be granted unless Common Law remedies fail," and to the same effect is the ruling in the case of Rathnasabapathi Pillai v. Ramasami Aiyar (2) which says very clearly that: "An injunction is a discretionary relief and cannot be claimed by a plaintiff out of possession when he does not ask for possession against defendants who are actually in possession." It appears to me that injunction that is sought in this case is not the appropriate relief that the plaintiff is entitled to claim possession as against the defendants who are, on the plaintiffs own showing, at present in actual possession of the Jacobabad Tikana. As further authority for this proposition I may refer to the case of Malijya Pillai v. Tirumalaperumal Pillai (3) where it was held: "In order that a suit can be held not maintainable by reason of the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) it must be shown that the defendant was in possession, and that as against him the plaintiff could have obtained an order for delivery of possession." In the present case, we have the undoubted fact that the defendants were in actual possession against the plaintiff and the plaintiff could have obtained an order for delivery of possession and in this view the injunction sought is not the appropriate relief for which plaintiff should have sued for but he should have actually sought for possession and framed and stamped the suit accordingly, and, not having done so, his suit, so far as the tikana is concerned, is barred by the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

As I have already said, we are not merely concerned with the tikana but with two other items of property which the plaintiff claims from the defendants and to which I have already adverted. The first with respect to the four shops that are attached to the tikana, it is common ground that the owner of the Jacobabad Tikana would also have the proprietary rights over the shops. As so far as the shops are concerned, it appears to us that it has been established that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have been realising the rents and not the plaintiff. The shops are, no doubt, in physical possession of tenants but, as held again in the case of Mir Hussein Bux v. Kando (1), "the right to recover rent is it itself capable of possession" and again in the case of Rathnasabapathi Pillai v. Ramasami Aiyar (2) where it was held "that notwithstanding the lands belonging to the temple were in the physical possession of tenants, yet the plaintiff's right to receive rents was capable of possession which if disturbed entitled him to bring a suit for possession under section 9, Specific Relief Act." Mr. Isardas referred to the judgment in Ramdas v. Ajudhiadas (4) in support of his contention that when the property is in physical possession of the tenants then it is unnecessary to file a suit for possession. But the ratio decidendi of that case has to be considered and the point that was decided is in confirmity with the judgment in the case of Rama Das v. Hanumantha Row (5) for in both these cases it was clearly established that the tenants who were in possession of the land belonging to the temple were willing to pay the rent to whomsoever was a trustee and, therefore, it stated in both these cases that, under such circumstances, the suit for a bare declaration may suffice though still it would be within the discretion of the Court either to grant or refuse the relief sought. But there is no such contention put forward in the present case. The tenants have all along been paying the rent to defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and it is not suggested that they have expressed their willingness to pay the rent to any one that the Court orders them to pay and consequently the principle of that ruling does not apply. Mr. Isardas relied upon the case of Rama Das v. Hanumantha Row (5) where a suit for a declaration and injunction was held to be correctly framed. But the distinction between that suit and the present one is that in the Madras case the suit was for the recovery of the office of the trustee, whereas the present suit is for the recovery of the tikana which is in the defendant's possession. Further, it is to be remembered, as I have remarked, that the rents due can be enjoyed only by the owners of the tikana and, therefore, as the suit as to the tikana is badly framed that as to the rents is equally so.

(2) 5 Ind. Cas. 630; 33 M. 452; 20 M. L. J. 301; (1910) M. W. N. 112; 7 M. L. T. 311.
(3) 12 Ind. Cas. 170; 36 M. 62; 21 M. L. J. 1022; 10 M. L. T. 277; (1912) M. W. N. 161.

The remaining item of property is in regard to the 8 pies share in the Factory situated in Sukkur. Now, it is asserted and not denied that this share in the Factory must necessarily be vested in the proprietors of the tikana building. And apart from the question whether an injunction may not be an appropriate relief in the case of the share in the Factory we have these two important points before us that both, with regard to the tikana building and with regard to the shops attached to it, the injunction is not the appropriate relief which the plaintiff should have sought and the relief should have been one for possession, and the learned Judge, I think, came to the correct conclusion that the suit is not maintainable.

The second point raised in the appeal and very strongly pressed is that the learned Judge was in error in not allowing the amendments. No doubt our powers are very wide and an application for amendment should receive a liberal construction and it has been well-established that amendments have been allowed sometimes in first appeals sometimes in second appeals and even in the appeals to the Privy Council. Though, therefore, I am always willing to accede to a prayer for amendment, however late the stage at which it may be made, the circumstances of every case must be considered before the amendment is granted. In the present case we have it that, already, in the written statement, the defendants raised a plea that the suit was badly framed inasmuch as possession had not been asked for and an issue was raised on this contention of the defendants yet the plaintiff never thought of applying for the necessary amendment of the plaint.

Further, which is very important indeed, the learned Judge states in his judgment that he allowed the plaintiff an opportunity of amending his plaint and yet the plaintiff refused to amend. And it was only after the whole case was concluded and the plaintiff probably had suspicions as to the bent of the learned Judge's mind he then put in an application for amendment which the Judge refused to grant. It appears to me the learned Judge of the Court below acted quite rightly in refusing the amendment. A similar order was made in the case of Mir Hussein Bux v. Kando (1) where the Judges refused an amendment because, they said, "the lower Court gave him an opportunity to amend the plaint and to pray for further relief but he did not avail himself of that opportunity." There is a similar decision in the case of Raj Narain Das v. Sham Nando Das Chowdhry (6) where it is said "the Appellate Court will not grant in a case of this nature an opportunity to amend the plaint if the plaintiffs had already such an opportunity and did not avail themselves of it." It appears to us that the plaint which was filed on a stamp of Rs. 25 was intentionally filed in order to evade the payment of Court-fee and when this fact was brought to the notice of the plaintiff and an opportunity was given to him he did not choose to avail himself of it. This case is one in which we should not allow him to amend the plaint. Further, I am not prepared to say that no hardship will accrue to the defendants by the amendment of the plaint because if the plaintiff were permitted to amend his plaint and include a relief for possession, the defendant must amend his written statement and as the defendants' Pleader pointed out, and I think quite rightly, a good deal of evidence with regard to possession was excluded at the original hearing for the very simple reason that on the plaint as it stood the evidence was led on the basis of the pleadings and issues and no evidence as to possession was necessary. The suit was filed on the 13th November 1918; over four years have now elapsed, and it is difficult to say what the position now may be with regard to the evidence on the question of possession and, therefore, also on the ground that an order for amendment would operate prejudicially to the defendants so far as their evidence of possession is concerned, it appears to me that this is an additional circumstance which ought to weigh with us in confirming the order of the Trial Judge refusing the plaintiff's prayer for the amendment of the plaint.

Under these circumstances, we must dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 29th July 1920.

Mr. Mangal Prosad Bhargava, for the Appellant.

Mr. Baleshwari Prosad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of the plaintiff's share of profits against a lambardar, under section 164 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The plaintiff claimed her share on the basis of the total demand. The defendant pleaded that there was no negligence or carelessness on his part and that the decree should be on the basis of actual collections.

The Court of first instance, being of opinion that very little care was taken by the defendant in the collections and that large arrears were allowed to remain uncollected, which indicated a negligence on his part justifying a presumption that what remained uncollected was due to his carelessness, and that there was no explanation or excuse offered by him for the short collections, passed a decree on the basis of the gross rental. On appeal the learned District Judge has modified that decree and reduced the amount decreed.

The three years in dispute were 1323, 1324 and 1325 Faslls. The collections by the lambardar in these years amount roughly to 61, 56 and 53 per cent. respectively. Obviously these collections were grossly inadequate and very low and at once call for some explanation by the lambardar. The learned District Judge has agreed with the Court of first instance that the rents in the present case have been considerably in arrears, that during the years in suit the crops were good and the tenants were generally solvent. This was the statement of the patwari which has been assumed to be correct by the lower Appellate Court. These facts in themselves were sufficient to shift the burden at once on to the defendant and call upon him to explain why the realisations were so low. It was laid down in the case of Mithan Lal v. Mizaji Lal (1) that, where it was proved by a co-sharer that a very large percentage of the rent had remained uncollected and the lambardar had not produced his account-books, it was, under the circumstances, for the lambardar to explain why such a large sum had remained uncollected. This case was followed by a Division Bench in the case of Shiva Chander Singh v. Ram Chander Singh (2) where it was pointed out that when a co-sharer has given general evidence to show that the rents are greatly in arrear, that the tenants are solvent and that there are no special circumstances why the rents should not have been collected, the onus is shifted on to the lambardar of showing that, for some reason not connected with his own negligence or misconduct, he was unable to collect the rents. This view has not been correctly appreciated by the lower Appellate Court. If the onus was actually shifted on to the lambardar defendant it would have to be seen how he has tried to explain it. All that has been shown on his behalf is that the plaintiff also made very poor collections in his own patti. Even if that shows that the plaintiff himself was grossly careless and negligent in his own patti that would not justify the defendant in his negligence. The learned Vakil for the respondent has not been able to bring to my notice anything which could be put forward as an explanation showing why the collections have been so poor. The question of negligence is a mixed question of fact and law. The facts found by the lower Appellate Court are binding on me, but the question of the proper inference from those facts as to the negligence on the part of the lambardar is a question of law which can be gone into in second appeal. This was pointed out in the case of Chhabraji Kuar v. Ganga Singh (3). In my opinion the lower Appellate Court has thrown the burden wrongly and erred in thinking that even under the admitted circumstances of this case there was on the plaintiff the burden of proving not only the defendant's negligence but the amount which remained uncollected owing to his negligence. The learned Judge has not dissented from the findings of fact recorded by the First Court and has only differed as to the inference to be drawn from the admitted circumstances. In my opinion the burden, having been shifted on to the defendant to explain the low collections, has not been discharged by him. It is noteworthy that the defendant lambardar has not produced any accounts showing the actual amount which he has collected. The result is that the decree of the Court of first instance based on the gross rental was correct.

The learned Vakil for the respondent, however, has supported the decree of the learned District Judge on grounds other than those decided by him in his favour. He has urged (1) that the nominal rents fixed for the sir and khudkasht lands which were in the possession of the lambardar were wrongly taken into account, and (2) that in any case some amount should have been awarded as collection charges. The respondent is certainly entitled to support the decree on this new ground under the provision of O. XLI, r. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

As to the first point raised, in my opinion, in the absence of any accounts produced by the lambardar showing the actual profits he had made from the sir and khudkasht land, the lower Appellate Court was justified in treating the amount of rent which was recorded in the revenue papers as the correct amount of the profits. The amount so entered is ovbviously nominal in the sense that such an amount has not in fact to be paid to any one, the lambardar himself being in cultivation of sir and khudkasht land. The rent entered in the revenue papers can only represent the amount of rent roughly, and cannot be the exact amount of rent which has to be paid. But in the absence of actual accounts it can properly be made the basis of the calculation.

As to the collection charges, however, in my opinion, the Courts below should have given the defendant credit for a sum fixed at a reasonable percentage. The plaintiff had only given the defendant credit for Rs. 22-8-0 as lambardari dues. It is the amount which the lambardar is entitled to get under the Land Revenue Act on the amount of Government revenue paid by him. No credit was given to him for collection charges. It is true that the lower Appellate Court has found that the lambardar has failed to prove that he kept any special karinda or peon or that he incurred any special damages. All that the lambardar seemed to have done was that he himself took the trouble of going from tenant to tenant and making collections and, in my opinion, there is no reason why he should not be given credit for meeting collection charges. The plaintiff's share in the total demand inclusive of interest as found by the Court of first instance came to Rs. 262-7-6 only. In my opinion the sum of Rs. 12-7-6 should be deducted as a rough approximate amount to which the defendant lambardar is entitled on account of the trouble taken by him in making collections. When the decree on the basis of gross rental is to be passed against him, it is fair that he should be given credit for such an amount.

I accordingly modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court and decree the plaintiff's claim for a sum of Rs. 250 with interest at 6 per cent. That is to say, I give him credit for Rs. 12-7-6 representing collection charges which amounts to less than 5 per cent. The parties will receive and pay costs in proportion to their success and failure Miscellaneous appeal from an order of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 9th January 1920, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 9th July 1919.

Messrs. Fakir Chand and Amar Nath Chona, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued in this case for Rs. 1,500 principal and Rs. 85-4-0 interest on two hundis, reciting that there had been dealings between the parties ending in the striking of a balance of account for Rs. 2,500 which the defendants paid, as to Rs. 1,000 in cash and as to the balance of Rs. 1,500 by the hundis on which this suit was based. Inasmuch as the hundis were improperly stamped they were held to be inadmissible and the question arose whether the debt could be proved aliunde. The First Court held that, inasmuch as the original transactions were liquidated and a complete discharge was effected by the payment of Rs. 1,000 cash and the delivery of the two hundis for an aggregate of Rs. 1,500, the plaintiff could not have recourse to his original cause of action.

The learned District Judge on appeal held that a cause of action existed to the plaintiff independently of the promissory-notes and that, consequently, the plaintiff was entitled to prove that original cause of action and the failure of consideration represented by the defective promissory-notes, and, in our opinion, his view is correct. Had the defendant borrowed Rs. 1,500 and the contract been embodied in the hundis the plaintiffs would have had no remedy other than of a suit on the hundis. Since, however, the contract embodied in the hundis was a mere sequel and consequence of the earlier transactions, we see no reason why the principles set forth in Parsotam Narain v. Taley Singh (1) preclude the plaintiff from falling back on his original cause of action. In this case the plaintiff had a complete cause of action for money for goods sold. That transaction was liquidated in part by the delivery of the hundis, and as the hundis are found to be inadmissible in evidence and that, through the default of the debtor, the plaintiff is at liberty to sue for the original consideration.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs and maintain the order of the lower Court remanding the case for re-decision.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 50 (2)—Presumption as to rental—Claim for enhanced rent—Plaintiff, what must prove.

Where a landlord claims increased rent, he must, in order to succeed, rebut the presumption arising under sction 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, in favour of a tenant that if he held the tenure at a fixed rent for 20 years, he held it from the time of the Permanent Settlement.

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Calcutta High Court, confirming that of the lower Court.

Messrs DeGruyther, K. C., and Dube, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Buckmaster.—Their Lordships see no reason for the further consideration of this case. The whole question for determination is whether or no there has been proved in the suits which have ended in these appeals anything which will rebut the presumption established by section 50, sub-section (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. That presumption is stated to follow from these conditions, that,—

"If it is proved in any suit or other proceeding under this Act that either a tenure holder or raiyat and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding, it shall be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that they have held at that rent or rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement."

The presumption upon which the appellant relied is to be found in the form of the kabuliyat under which the respondent held their title. This has been the subject of consideration by the High Court and by many Judges in the various suits. The real question, upon the face of that kabuliyat, is whether it shows that there has been a new tenancy then created or whether it is executed in reliance upon a pre-existing tenure.

Their Lordships have considered the document carefully, and they see no reason whatever to differ from the views expressed in the Courts through which this case has proceeded that the kabuliyat undoubtedly proceeds upon the basis that there were pre-existing rights, and consequently it cannot be relied upon for the purpose of showing that there has been a change in the rent since the date of the Permanent Settlement.

For this reason their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these appeals should be dismissed. As the respondents have not appeared, there will be no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit to enforce a mortgage executed by them on the 22nd December 1916 in favour of the plaintiffs to secure a loan of Rs. 800. The plaintiffs alleged that nothing had been paid on the mortgage and according to the terms thereof they claimed Rs. 1,071. The defendants pleaded that the debt had been satisfied and the claim was unfounded. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the District Judge reversed that decision and decreed the claim in full with interest from the date of suit to the date of judgment. In their plaint the plaintiffs allege that the mortgage-bond was part of a transaction which took place between the parties on the 22nd December 1916. The plaintiffs and the defendants were partners in a paddy business at Akyab. The defendants, it is alleged, fixed the price of the share of the plaintiff in the business at Rs. 3,000 and purchased that share for the sum. The defendants paid Rs. 1,500 in cash, Rs. 400 by a boat and for the balance of Rs. 1,100 executed two bonds for Rs. 300 and Rs. 800 respectively. According to the plaintiffs, the bond for Rs. 300 has been satisfied; but nothing has been paid on the bond for Rs. 800. The defendants alleged that the sale had been effected not for Rs. 3,000 but for Rs. 2,000 that Rs. 500 had been paid in cash and that for the balance two bonds had been executed for Rs. 300 and Rs. 800 respectively. They further pleaded that both the bonds had been satisfied. The conveyance, when produced, showed that the consideration for the sale was Rs. 2,000 as alleged by the defendants and not Rs. 3,000 as alleged by the plaintiffs. This placed the plaintiffs in a situation of considerable embarrassment and they asked for leave to amend the plaint. This application was refused. There was, consequently, an obvious variance between the pleadings and the proof. If in these circumstances the plaintiffs proceeded with their case on the basis mentioned in their plaint, they would contravene a well-known rule of law repeatedly affirmed by the Judicial Committee, by Lord Westbury in Eshenchunder Singh v. Shamachurn Bhutto (1), by Sir Barnes Peacock in Mylapore Iyasawmy Vyapoory Mudaliar v. Yeo Ray (2) and by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Malaraju Lakshmi Venkayyamma Row v. Venkatadri Appa Row (3). This principle is well-established, namely, that the determination in a case should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in and consistent with the case thereby made; and it has been applied recently in this Court in the case of Nabadwipendra Mookerjee v. Madhu Sudan Mandal (4), Rees v. John Young (5), Gopal Krishna Sil v. Abdul Samad Chaudhuri (6) and Satis Chandra Ghosh v. Kalidasi Dasi (7). No doubt, as explained by Viscount Haldane in Umar Abdul Rahiman v. Gustadji Muncherji Cooper (8), and by Lord Dunedin in Motabhoy Mulla v. Mulji Haridas (9), the rule should not be applied in an abstract way regardless of the circumstances of the case. But, when the plaintiffs had failed to obtain an amendment of the plaint so as to bring their case into harmony with the statement in the conveyance the only course open to them was to make an attempt to adduce evidence in contradiction to the statement in the conveyance, namely, to show by oral evidence that, although the conveyance recited the consideration as Rs. 2,000, the actual consideration was Rs. 3,000. This they did, notwithstanding the protest of the defendants. Consequently, two questions arise, namely, first whether it was permissible to the plaintiffs, in view of the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act, to contradict the terms of the conveyance; and, secondly, whether it was competent to them to prove that they had committed a fraud upon the revenues of the country.

As regards the first point it has been pointed out by the Madras High Court in Adityam Iyer v. Ramakrishna Iyer (10), that while want or failure or difference in kind of the consideration may be proved evidence to vary the amount of consideration in a registered sale-deed is inadmissible. This position is not inconsistent with the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Achal Ram v. Kazim Husain Khan (11) and Hanif-un-nisa v. Faizunnisa (12) which affirmed the proposition that it was open to the parties to prove by oral evidence that the actual consideration was different from what was mentioned in the deed, or that there was no consideration for the deed. This view was approved by this Court in the case of Gopal Singh v. Laloo Lall (13). There can be little doubt that the view taken by the Madras High Court in Adityam Iyer v. Ramakrishna Iyer (10) is well-founded on principle. To take an illsutration, suppose a mortgage-bond had been executed for Rs. 1,000. Would it be competent to the mortgagee who instituted a suit to enforce the security for Rs. 1,000 to prove by oral evidence that the real consideration was not Rs. 1,000 as stated in the bond but Rs. 5,000. If such a course were permissible, the protection intended by the Legislature to be afforded by the adoption of the rule embodied in section 92 of the Evidence Act would be completely nullified.

As regards the second point, there can be no doubt that if the plaintiffs are permitted to prove their allegation that the conveyance was not for Rs. 2,000 but for Rs. 3,000 they will have to establish that they have committed a fraud upon the revenues of the country. If the conveyance had been for Rs. 3,000 the stamp duty payable would have been Rs. 30. Their allegation is that, although the consideration was Rs. 3,000 it was deliberately stated to be Rs. 2,000 because they were unable to procure a stamp-paper of the proper value. This story has been disbelieved by both the Courts below. In such circumstances, if they are now permitted to contradict the statement in the conveyances, they would only be permitted to allege that they have violated the law. Under these circumstances, the principle applies, that a party cannot come into the Court with fraud on his lips and ask for a relief; as to such the Courts of Justice are not open; see the observations of Sanderson, C. J., in Gregory v. Hawoth (14) where a similar attempt was made. In the same case it was pointed out that the parties should not be permitted to depart from the deeds and to establish a case which is contrary to their pleadings. This cannot be allowed without a gross violation of the rule which requires that the allegations of the complaint, the evidence and the findings should correspond in legal intent. The averment, the proof and the finding should harmonise and proceed upon the same theory, each pointing with logical distinctness to the same result. A recovery, if had, must be secundum allegata and must be grounded upon facts which are averred in the complaint and not upon those which are denied.

We are consequently of opinion that the case has not been approached from the right point of view by the District Judge. The rights of the parties must be determined on the assumption that the statements in the conveyance are true. The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the case remitted to him for re-consideration. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

A suit does not lie for compensation for damages caused to crops in a field by the shade of trees standing in an adjoining field falling in it.

Mr. T. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is the appellant here, sued for compensation for damage caused to his crops by the shade of five trees standing in the defendant's field falling in his field. The Trial Court dismissed the suit and an appeal from its decision has also failed.

In the plaint the plaintiff has stated that all the five trees stood on the defendant's land but later alleged that two of them stood on the plaintiff's portion of the mend between the two fields. The plaintiff complains that the Court was wrong in not giving him an opprtunity of examining the Patwari who had been summoned to prove this fact. The Patwari was once summoned but was absent and a second summons was ordered to be issued. The plaintiff, however, paid the process-fee late and the summons was not returned at the next hearing; and as no other witnesses remained to be examined no further service was ordered and the case was closed. It is said that the Court, when it found that the Patwari was absent after service, should have ordered a warrant of arrest to be issued against him. No warrant would ordinarily be issued against a public servant who was cited as a witness and remained absent and knowing this the plaintiff appears to have accepted the order for a fresh summons. He did not ask for the issue of a warrant and it is very probable that he would not have liked one to be issued. In any case, in his grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff did not urge that the Patwari should be examined. All that he desired was a reference to a remark in a map prepared by the Patwari which, as the lower Appellate Court observes, has no evidentiary value. The finding of the lower Appellate Court that all the five trees stand on the defendant's land must, therefore, be accepted.

In this Court the plaintiff relies on a custom as to his right to claim damages on account of the shade caused by the trees. But no custom was alleged or has been proved.

Unless and until it can be said that every owner of a field has the right to have the sun's rays fall on it from every possible direction the plaintiff cannot succeed. There cannot be such a right, for if it were allowed the use and enjoyment of the adjoining fields by their owners would be very largely restricted. The use and enjoyment of the very land in respect of which such a right is claimed might be restricted by the claim of a similar right in respect of adjoining lands by their owners. In this connection the following passage from the judgment of Bramwell, L. J., in Bryant v. Lefever (1) may be cited with advantage:—

"What then is the right of land and its owner or occupier? It is to have all natural incidents and advantages as nature would produce them. There is a right to all the light and heat that would come, to all the rain that would fall, to all the wind that would blow—a right that the rain, which would pass over the land, should not be stopped and made to fall on it, a right that the heat from the sun should not be stopped and re-flected on it; a right that the wind should not be checked, but should be able to escape freely; and, if it were possible that these rights were interfered with by one having no right, no doubt an action would lie. But these natural rights are subject to the rights of adjoining owners, who, for the benefit of the community, have and must have, rights in relation to the use and enjoyment of their property that qualify and interfere with those of their neighbours, rights to use their property in the various ways in which property is commonly and lawfully used. A hedge, a wall, a fruit tree, would each affect the land next to which it was planted or built. They would keep off some light, some air, some heat, some rain, when coming from one direction, and prevent the escape of air, of heat, of wind, of rain, when coming from the other: but nobody could doubt that in such case no action would lie".

It must be held tht no suit for compensation for damages caused to the crops in a field by the shade of trees standing in an adjoining field falling in it lies. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The test for determining whether an alienation by the guardian of a minor is binding on the minor is, whether the alienation was for necessity or for the benefit of the minor. It is for the alienee to establish that he made all proper and necessary inquiries, and that he had acted in good faith in advancing monies to the natural guardian of the minor.

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Nasik, in Appeal No. 2 of 1921.

Mr. D. R. Patwardhan, for the Appellants.
Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Respondent.

INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case sued to recover possession of certain Survey Numbers on the strength of a sale-deed passed in his favour by Laxman and his wife Jai who purported to act on behalf of Bhavdya, the minor son of Jai, by her first husband. It appears that the property originally belonged to Laxman but before his marriage with Jai he conveyed the property to the minor Bhavdya in 1905. After the sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff, Bhavdya apparently mortgaged the property in suit to the defendants in 1916 and sold the same to them in 1918. Bhavdya's whereabouts at the date of the suit were not definitely known. The suit was filed on the 18th December 1919 and the question between the parties was really as to the merits of their respective titles.

The Trial Court disallowed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff was not proved.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Court, and that Court directed further evidence to be taken on the 1st June 1921. After the further evidence was received the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the sale-deed was proved. But the question as to whether the sale-deed was binding upon the minor Bhavdya does not appear to have been considered in the Trial Court, nor in the lower Appellate Court. It appears that in the Trial Court on the 9th September 1920 the defendants made an application requesting the Court to raise an issue as to whether the conveyance in favour of the plaintiff was for the benefit of the minor Bhavdya. They wanted to raise the question as to whether the sale-deed was really for the benefit of the minor but the Trial Court rejected the application and did not raise the issue on the ground that it was inconsistent with the defendant's contention.

In the lower Appellate Court it appears that the objection was taken in a different form. It was urged that the minor had repudiated the sale-deed. With reference to that point the learned Judge observed that the objection had been taken on that ground in the lower Court but it was belated and was disallowed. The point as to the repudiation of the sale-deed by the minor was dealt with by the learned Judge and decided against the defendants.

It seems to us, however, that both the lower Courts have missed the real point at issue in connection with this sale-deed. It was a sale of the property belonging to a minor by two persons Laxman and Jai. Laxman had no right whatever to deal with the property of the minor. It is not suggested that he was his legal guardian. Jai was his mother and she might be able to deal with the property as the natural guardian of her minor son for his benefit. But the test with regard to the binding nature of such an alienation upon the minor has been laid down in Hunoomanpersuad Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (1). It must be shown before the plaintiff can succeed that the power was exercised rightly for necessity or for the benefit of the infant. It would be open to the plaintiff to establish, as pointed out in that case, that he had made all proper and necessary inquiries and that he had acted in good faith in advancing the moneys to the natural guardian of the minor.

It has been suggested before us that Jai was not in the position of a natural guardian at all after her re-marriage and that, therefore, she would not have even the limited power which the natural guardian of a Hindu infant would have, to deal with the property of the infant. We must, however, disallow this contention having regard to the fact that she was the natural mother of the minor who lived with her at the time; under the circumstances she was the natural guardian of the minor.

Before we can dispose of this appeal, it is necessary to have a distinct finding on the question as to whether this sale-deed has been shown to be binding upon the minor Bhavdya. We accordingly send down the following issue to the lower Appellate Court:—

Is the sale-deed of 1912 binding upon Bhavdya?

Parties to be at liberty to adduce further evidence on this point. Finding to be certified in three months.

Mr. M. Obedullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by the purchaser of agricultural land to recover from the seller the purchase-money by way of damages as the latters' title to the land was declared to be defective. The land originally belonged to one Dewa Singh, who gifted it to Jaimal Singh, defendant, and the latter sold it to plaintiff. The reversioners of Dewa Singh sued for and obtained a declaration that the gift and subsequent sale of the land shall both be inoperative as against them after the death of the donor. The purchaser then brought the present suit while he was still in possession of the land and the donor was alive, and, therefore, the seller's defence was that the suit was premature and was also barred by the rule of caveat emptor, and he further pleaded that the vendee was precluded by the terms of the sale from claiming a refund of the price paid by him. The First Court found in favour of the defendant on both these points and dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the suit was not premature, but confirmed the First Court's decree on the ground that there was no covenant by the defendant-vendor to refund any of the purchase-money.

The plaintiff comes to this Court in second appeal, and it is urged on his behalf (1) that the rule of caveat emptor became nugatory by virtue of section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act; (2) that the suit was not premature; and (3) that even if it was at the time of its institution it is not so now, as the donor has died and his reversioners have taken possession of the land.

As stated in the Courts below and repeated before us, the ruleof caveat emptor was applied by the Chief Court in cases reported as Hira Nand v. Mahia (1) and Kashmira Singh v. Hanwanta (2). But Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant points out that the judgment in the former case was given long before the enactment of the Transfer of Property Act of 1882, that section 55 (2) of that Act was not referred to in the case of 1893, and that the principle of section 55 (2) was accepted and applied in Jai Kishen Das v. Arya Priti Nidhi Sabha (3).

Though the Transfer of Property Act does not extend to this Province, the fundamental principles laid down therein have generally been adopted by this Court as affording proper rules of decision. The rule of caveat emptor has now become obsolete and we a e, therefore, of opinion that consideration for the sale having failed the defendant is bound to return the price to the plaintiff though there was no covenant in the deed of sale guaranteeing his title. As held by several High Courts in the cases cited by the Counsel for the appellant, (which are noted on the margin*) there is an implied guarantee of title because, according to clause (2) of section 55, "the seller shall be deemed to contract with the buyer that the interest which the seller professes to transfer to the buyer subsists and that he has power to transfer the same." Counsel for the defendant-respondent argued that clause (2) of section 55 was not applicable because there was a contract to the contrary in the deed itself. That contract was, that "the heirs and reversioners of the seller would have no objection to the sale and that if any of them should claim the land he would have to pay all the price and costs and damages to the vendee and then take the land sold from him." This covenant cannot be said to be in any way contrary to clause (2) of section 55, and, therefore, was not sufficient to avoid that clause.

The purchaser had no knowledge of the defect in title and, therefore, he is not debarred from claiming a refund of the money.

The plea that the suit was premature is technically correct, but it will serve no useful purpose to compel the plaintiff to start the case de novo. In Sita Ram v. Ram Chandra (4) it was held in a suit for money, where the money became payable to the plaintiff after the institution of the suit, that the Court should pass a decree and not compel the plaintiff to institute another suit for the purpose. This ruling was followed in Ghulam Fatima v. Rahman (5).

We accept the appeal and, reversing the judgments and decrees of the Courts below, decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 19 (b)—Guardianship—Mother, position of—Unfitness of mother not proved—Application by other relatives, whether can be considered.

The principle underlying clause (b) of section 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act applies to a mother as well as to a father though with less force, and it must be shown that a mother is unfit to be the guardian of the person and property of her minor child before the relative fitness of other relatives can be considered. Appeal against an order of the Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, dated the 31st August 1922 in Civil Miscellaneous Case No. 47 of 1921.

Mr. P. C. Dutt, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. C. Ghose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The proceedings for the appointment of the guardian for the property of a minor originated in an application made by the respondent Subhadra Bai. She also has appealed against the final order in the case, and her appeal (Miscellaneous Appeal No. 41 of 1922) will also be governed by this judgment. The following table* shows the relationship between most of the parties with whom we have to deal. The figures in brackets under each name except in the case of Kedarnath give the ages in 1921 of the persons mentioned :—

*TABLE.

We are concerned also with one Hari prasad aged about 50, who is a second cousin to Kedarnath, and with Kapil Singh, the young Malguzar of Akaltari a village quite close to Prasada, who was Kedarnath's Mukhtiyar and is still the Mukhtiyar of his widow Sumitri. He does not belong to either of the families mentioned in the table above and may not be of the same caste, though we have been unable to ascertain his caste from the record of the proceedings in the lower Court. It is alleged by Subhadra Bai that there is reason to believe that immoral relations subsist between Kapil Singh and Sumitri Bai, but the only support for the allegation appears to lie in the facts that they are both young and that such relations between a young and wealthy widow and her Mukhtiyar are by no means uncommon.

(2) The original application by Subhadra Bai was for the appointment of herself as the gaurdian of both the person and the property of her grandson Siddhnath. There is no mention of his younger brother Ripudaman in the application as he was born after it was made. The learned Judge of the lower Court has refused to remove Sumitri Bai from the guardianship of the person of her son Siddhnath, and this part of his order has been accepted by Subhadra Bai. This fact and her failure to apply for the removal of Sumitri Bai from the guardianship of the person of Siddhnath's younger sister, throw some doubt on her allegations of immorality against her daughter-in-law and her own motives in asking to be made the guardian of Siddhnath's property.

(3). The order of the learned Additional District Judge, against which both Subhadra Bai and Sumitri Bai have appealed, is far from satisfactory. He has stated a finding, for which no real basis seems to exist, that both of them are incapable of managing the property, of which the annual income is between four and seven thousand rupees, "and of preserving the honour of this respectable family which consists of one infant owner or two; a daughter yet to be married and three widows to be maintained." For this reason, on the 5th of August 1922, he appointed the Collector a guardian, but cancelled the order on the same day on realising that he had not consulted the Collector. Then, on the 31st of August 1922, he again appointed the Collector as guardian without having consulted him in the interval except to the extent of having asked him to report the annual income of the property. When notice of the two appeals was served on the Collector he wrote to ask for a copy of the lower Court's order, and on receipt of it he wrote again to say that he did not accept the appointment, That is a sufficient commentary on the order,

(4). The case then requires examination from the beginning, but before any necessity can arise for a consideration of the relative fitness of Subhadra Bai and Sumitri Bai and her brother Madan Gopal, it has to be shown that Sumitri Bai is unfit for the position of guardian of the property as well as the persons of her own children, which she would otherwise occupy as a matter of course. The principle underlying clause (b) of section 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act applies to a mother as well as to a father, though with less force. No evidence has been given, and in this Court there was no suggestion made, that either party desired to give any. For a decision of the case we have, therefore, nothing but the allegations of Subhadra Bai and Sumitri and ordinarily no allegation made by the former could be accepted as true unless it had been admitted by the latter. But it has to be remembered that this is not a matter of the rights of rival claimants to the possession and management of certain property, though that is the light in which cases of this nature are frequently regarded by the Courts and almost invariably by the rival claimants themselves. The Court has to find out for itself what is for the interest of the minor and what is against that interest, and must itself call for evidence on any matter on which it is doubtful and thinks that evidence is available.

(5). In this light, therefore, we proceed to examine the allegations in regard to the unfitness of Sumitri Bai to be the guardian of the property left by her late husband Kedarnath. As I as already been pointed out, the allegation of her unfitness is based mainly on what is more a suggestion than an allegation of her immoral relations and close association with Kapil Singh and of the probability of mismanagement and misappropriation by him, not by her. It is discounted to some extent by the acquiescence of Subhadra in the continued residence of Siddhnath and his sister with their mother; if she is concerned with the interests of Siddhnath in any way, it is only with his material interests as an owner of property.

(6). In the original application the only allegations made against Sumitri Bai are that "she spends most of her time with this young man" Kapil Singh and "her relations with him are suspicious" and in any case unbefitting a lady in her position, and she "is said to have given away all her ornaments worth about Rs. 4,000 to Kapil Singh." The rest of the application is taken up with vague suggestions of what an undesirable person Kapil Singh is and of what, in the applicant's opinion, he is likely to do. That he is in debt and that he was once committed to the Court of Session on a charge of murder "in connection with some female" (but apparently acquitted, though mention of this is carefully omitted) and that some unspecified persons also had suspicions against him in connection with another murder, are matters which can hardly be called relevant in the present case.

(7) We have, however, two statements of facts which might be relevant. There is the assertion of the probability of a person so deeply in debt as he is said to be trying to fill his own pockets at the expense of the minor, and the statement that "in fact this process has already commenced," and the statement of fact already mentioned that Sumitri Bai "is said" to have given him all her ornaments, and that "he is taking away dan, etc.," The manner in which these statements are made suggests that there is little truth in them and that no object would be served by calling for evidence on them. This impression is confirmed by the second very voluminous written statement put in by Subhadra Bai, in which she has certainly said everything that could possibly be said about the relations between Sumitri Bai and Kapil Singh and the character of the latter.

(8) It has not been made out, nor is there any prospect if we were to call for further evidence of its being made out, that Kapil Singh possesses any undue influence over Sumitri Bai in the management of her late husband's property, or that, if he has any such influence, there is any danger of his using it to the detriment of that estate. Taking this view of the case we have to decide on the fitness of Subhadra Bai or Harprasad, whom she now puts forward instead of herself, to be appointed guardian of the property, but it may be added that both of them are very evidently unfit. The order of the lower Court is set aside and in its place an order will issue appointing Sumitri Bai to be the guardian of the property as well as the persons of all her minor children. The costs incurred by her in both Courts will be paid by Subhadra Bai. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be Rs. 50.

Order XXXIV, r. 8, governing redemption suits, does not require any notice to be given to a defendant after the decree has been passed before the plaintiff obtains possession, and a kanomdar who does not receive notice is not also prejudiced by such failure since he is not entitled to have delivery stayed pending a re-valuation of improvements. Mr. C. V. Anantha Krishna Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Ayyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent in this case obtained a decree for redemption of a kanom after the expiry of the kanom period. There was an appeal and the Appellate Court modified the District Munsif's decree on certain points. It confirmed it as regards the main right of the plaintiff to redeem the suit property. In this second appeal two points have been pressed. First, it is argued that before the decree-holder obtained possession, notice ought to have been given to the first defendant, and that the failure to give him notice prejudiced this defendant in respect of his right to remove the improvements made by him, if it appeared to him advantageous that he should do so, and in respect of his right to demand increased compensation for the period during which he had been in possession after the passing of the decree. The second point argued is that the decrees which have been executed have been misconstrued as regards the interest awarded by the First Court on costs. In support of the first point Mr. Ananta Krishna Ayyar has referred us to O. XXI, r. 1, clause (2), of the Code of Civil Procedure which requires that notice should be given of any payment made into Court under a decree. This Order and rule evidently refer to a money decree. The rule says that notice of such payment should be given to the decree-holder. In a redemption decree it is the decree-holder who makes the payment and the defendant who is to receive it. This rule is evidently not applicable to cases of mortgage-decrees, which are governed by O. XXXIV. Order XXXIV, r. 8, which governs decrees in redemption suits, does not specifically require any notice to be given to a defendant after the decree has been passed before the plaintiff obtains possession. Moreover, the kanomdar was not prejudiced by the want of notice seeing that he was not entitled to have delivery stayed pending a revaluation of improvements. This has been established by Sankaran Nambudripad v. Sankaran Nair (1). As regards interest on costs, the First Court in its judgment awarded to the defendants their costs with interest at the usual rate. This was taken to be 6 per cent. when the decree was drawn up. The plaintiff and the first defendant appealed and the Appellate Court directed the plaintiff to pay the first defendant Rs. 203-8-0 as costs instead of Rs. 343-8-0 and the first defendant to pay the plaintiff Rs. 146-8-0 as costs, and directed that in other respects the decree of the lower Court should be confirmed. As the lower Appellate Court reduced the amount of costs to be paid to the first defendant and increased the amount due to the plaintiff, it is reasonable to suppose that the Appellate Court considered it unnecessary to award interest on costs, altough it did not expressly say so. If it had thought it necessary to award interest to the first defendant, it might have also awarded interest to the plaintiff on his costs. While leaving the order awarding interest on the costs of the defendant untouched in the judgment, the lower Appellate Court simply directed that the decree of the District Munsif should be modified in accordance with the findings recorded. The words. "The decree of the lower Court is in other respects confirmed" appear in the decree only. The difficulty that has arisen in the present case is only as to the interpretation of the Appellate Court's decree. Under section 34 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure where a decree is silent with respect to interest, the Court shall be deemed to have refused such interest. The lower Court, therefore, appears to be right in holding that the result of the Appellate Court's decree was to abrogate the order of the First Court as regards interest on costs, and, therefore, the amount paid into Court must be treated as the correct amount, and the appellant is not entitled to have it increased or to have the property re-delivered to him.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Plaintiff purchased certain property inherited by defendant under a Will, and brought the present suit for a declaration of his right; for the administration of the estate of the testator, if any portion remained unadministered, and for the appointment of a Receiver, and valued the relief sought at Rs. 1,500 in respect of each claim. The question was as to the amount of Court-fee payable on the plaint:

Held, that the suit was one for a declaratory decree where consequential relief is prayed, and that, an ad valorem Court-fee was payable under section 7, clause (IV) of the Court-Fees Act, according to the amount at which the relief sought was valued in the plaint. [p. 569, col. 1.]

Babu Ram Charan Mitra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Chatterjea, J.—The only point for consideration in this appeal relates to the question of Court-fee payable on the plaint in the suit out of which this apeal arises.

The prayers in the plaint are as follows:—

(ka) That the Court may be pleased to declare that the plaintiff's purchase of the paternal right inherited by defendant No. 2 in the properties described in schedule (ka) and (kha) below is valid and binding on the defendants under the circumstances stated above.

(Kha) That the Court may be pleased to declare after a true construction of the Will of the deceased Puran Chandra Mahata, that the estate left by him was fully administered at the time the Probate was taken and that the executrixes to his estate were not competent to retain possession of his estate as executrixes and that the said Probate is now only an inoperative instrument.

(Ga) That the Court may be pleased to declare, that the defendants by their conduct and acts and deeds are estopped from claiming any sort of title against the plaintiff to the properties mentioned below which have been purchased by the plaintiff.

(Gha) That if in the judgment of the Court any portion of the said estate is yet unadministered, it may be ordered that the same may be administered by the Court, that arrangements may be made for keeping the plaintiff's purchased right therein unaffected, and that a Receiver may be appointed by the Court for that purpose.

(Una) That a decree may be passed against the defendants for all the costs of the present suit.

(Cha) That the Court may be pleased to grant any other relief to the plaintiff, to which he may be found entitled in the judgment of the Court".

The first prayer is for declaration of plaintiff's right, but in the fourth prayer the plaintiff prays for administration of the estate (if in the judgment of the Court any portion of it is yet unadministered) and for the appointment of a Receiver. The suit is, therefore, one for a declaratory decree where consequential releif is prayed and the Court below is right in holding that it is such a suit. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, fixed the value of the properties purchased by the plaintiff at Rs. 30,000 and held that the plaintiff must pay ad velorem Court-fee on that sum, viz,, Rs, 975 minus Rs. 30 already paid by him.

But the market value of the property cannot be taken to be the value of the relief sought as the plaintiff does not seek possession of the property. The plaintiff says that he is in possession, and there is nothing in the plaint to show that he is suing for possession. That being so, the case does not come under section 7 clause v. A suit for a declaratory decree where consequential relief is prayed falls under section 7, clause IV (c) of the Court-Fees Act. Clause IV provides that in suits to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed or in a suit for accounts the amount of fee shall be computed, "according to the amount at which the relief is valued in the plaint or Memorandum of Appeal" and that in all such suits the plaintiff shall state the amount at which he values the relief sought". The valuation of the relief sought in cases coming under section 7, clause IV, therefore, rests with the plaintiff and not the Court. The plaintiff valued the claim in the present case as follows :—Rs. 1,500 for declaration Rs. 1,500 for construction, and Rs. 1,500 for administration. The learned Counsel for the appellant contended that if ad valorem Court-fee is to be paid at all, it should be paid only on the amount at which the relief sought for in the fourth prayer of the plaint (i.e., for administration) was valued as a suit for "account" under section 7, clause IV (f), and that the first three prayers are merely for declaration and, therefore, a Court-fee of ten rupees only is payable. It is unnecessary to consider whether the 2nd and 3rd prayers are merely for declaration as contended for the plaintiff, or involve consequential reliefs, though in form for mere declaration as contended by the learned Senior Government Pleader (who was asked to appear in this case) because a Court-fee of ten rupees is payable (under Schedule II, clause 17) on a plaint in a suit to obtain a declaratory decree only where no consequential relief is prayed. In the present case consequential relief having been paid in the 4th prayer Schedule II, clause 17, cannot apply, and ad valorem Court-fee is payable as laid down in section 7, clause IV. In the cases cited before us, the only relief which was valued was that relating to administration. In the present case the plaintiff himself, as stated above, valued the suit at Rs. 1,500 for administration, Rs. 1,500 for construction and Rs. 1,500 for declaration, and paid Court-fee of Rs. 30 at Rs. 10 for "each claim". The fee, however, under clause IV, must be computed according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint. That being so, the plaintiff must pay ad valorem Court-fee on "each claim" of Rs. 1,500. The Court-fee payable is Rs. 300 out of which only Rs. 30 has been paid. The plaintiff must, therefore, pay the balance viz., Rs. 270 on the plaint. He must also pay a similar sum on the Memorandum of Appeal.

We accordingly direct that on the plaintiff paying the balance of the Court-fee, namely, Rs. 270 on the plaint and Rs. 270 on the Memorandum of Appeal on or before the 15th January 1918, the order of the Court below rejecting the plaint and the decree passed upon the said order, will be set aside and the case will be remanded to the Court below to be tried according to law.

We make no order as to costs of this appeal.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee (with him Mr. A. G. Desai), for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners applied for Letters of Administration de bonis non with a copy of the Will annexed of one Bandoba Vithoba who died on the 11th March 1896. The petition was opposed by Damodhar Bhukandas, the son of one of the persons appointed Panchas by the Will. The Will directed six persons to be Panchas of whom one was to supervise the work of administration. The Panchas were given power to appoint other Panchas. That power could only be exercised by the whole body of Panchas and when Bhukandas asserted his right to appoint his son to succeed him by his Will he was attempting to do what was not authorised by the terms of the Will of Bandoba. Evidently the testator had never intended that Panchas should have the power to appoint other Panchas by Will because it was intended by the testator that they should exercise that power as a body. That would exclude any power to appoint by Will. It follows then that Damodhar Bhukandas has no inherent right to be considered as executor of the Will. At the most he would be a person who might apply for Letters of Administration de bonis non. Whether the petitioners are proper persons to be appointed administrators has not been decided by the Court below. Therefore, we allow the appeal and the case must go back to the lower Court for the decision of the question whether the petitioners or any other person should be appointed adminsitrators de bonis non with the Will annexed.

The petition of Damodhar Bhukandas for Probate which was granted by the lower Court has no foundation in law. The petition ought to have been dismissed. First Appeal No. 122 of 1921 will be allowed and the petition dismissed.

Costs in both appeals to be costs in the cause.

Res judicata—Two suits against same defendants for recovery of rent for different holdings—Decree in one at consolidated rental for all lands—Dismissal of other suit—Appeal, whether competent—Plaintiff accepting decree, whether can challenge decision against them.

Two suits were instituted against the same defendants for recovery of arrears of rent for different holdings at different rentals. The suits were heard together; the issues framed were common to both suits, and they were disposed of by one judgment, in which the Trial Court found that the defendants had only one holding, and not two holdings, and that the lands covered by the two suits formed one holding at one consolidated rent, for which a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff in one suit only conditional on his paying additional Court-fees. Plaintiff paid the deficit Court fees and agreed to take a decree for the amount the rentals for the lands covered by both suits: a final decree was accordingly drawn up for this amount, the decree in the other suit was one of dismissal of suit. The plaintiff preferred an appeal against the latter decree, but preferred no appeal against the former decree: the Appellate Court reversed the decree dismissing the suit, and decreed that suit also. The defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court:

Held, (1) that the decree in the first suit having become final operated as res judicata and it was not open to the plaintiffs to raise the same question again in appeal in the other suit; [p. 571, col. 2.]

(2) that the plaintiff having accepted the decree of the Munsif and having agreed to take a decree for an amount as representing the consolidated rent for the lands covered by both the suits it was no longer open to him to challenge the correctness of the decree. [p. 572, col. 1.]

Messrs. Ram Prasad and D. C. Varma for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr reversing the decree of the Munsif of Beguserai and decreeng the plaintiff's suit with costs.

Four suits were heard together and disposed of by the Munsif by one judgment. The suits were for recovery of arrears of rent for certain holdings alleged to have been held by the defendants in these suits. Out of those four suits, Suits Nos. 1452 and 1453 of 1919 were against the same defendants, except that in suit No. 1452 one Dwarka Singh was added as defendant, but he was not made a party in Suit No. 1453. The plaintiff's allegation was that the defendants in these two Suits Nos. 1452 and 1454 held two different holdings at different rentals. They alleged that the defendants in Suit No. 1452 had a holding of 16 bighas 17 kathas 3 dhurs at a rental of Rs. 38-1-9 with cesses and they claimed arrears of rent for the year 1918 and three-quarters of the year 1919. In Suit No. 1453 the allegation was that the defendants had a holding of 19 bighas 8 kathas 19 dhurs at a rental of Rs. 24-7-0 and the suit was for recovery of arrears of rent for the same period. The defence in these two suits was that the lands in both the suits formed one holding and that the entire holding consisted of 32 bighas and odd at a rental of Rs. 40-0-9 besides cesses. The defendants further alleged that they were occupancy tenants of the lands in suit and that their rent could not be enhanced in contravention of the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Munsif held that the holding in the possession of the defendants in these two suits was one holding at one rental of Rs. 40-0-9 as alleged by the defendants. He further held that the defendants were occupancy raiyats and that their rents could not be enhanced in contravention of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He accordingly ordered that the plaintiffs will get a decree at the admitted jama of Rs. 40-0-9 in one suit only, if the plaintiffs paid additional Court-fee, while the other suit will stand dismissed. As Suit No. 1452 was brought first, he decreed that suit and he dismissed Suit No. 1453. The order made by him runs thus: "Suit No. 1452 be decreed in full with costs and interest at 3 per cent. per annum at a jama of Rs. 40-0-9, besides cesses, at one half-anna per rupee, if the plaintiffs pay the deficit Court-fee within three days hence, otherwise only for the amount claimed with costs and interest at 3 per cent. per annum and that Suit No. 1453 be dismissed with costs". It appears that the plaintiffs paid the deficit Court-fee in Suit No. 1452 and a final decree was drawn up by the Munsif in Suit No. 1452 as directed by him and the decree in Suit No. 1453 was a decree of dismissal of the suit. Against the decree in Suit No. 1453 of 1919 the plaintiffs preferred an appeal before the Subordinate Judge. No appeal was preferred by them in Suit No. 1452. The learned Subordinate Judge has reversed the decree of the Munsif in Suit No. 1453 and has decreed the suit with costs as claimed by the plaintiffs. Against this decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, passed in Suit No. 1453 of 1919, the defendants prefer this second appeal to this Court and the first point taken by their learned Vakil is that no appeal having been filed against the decree in Suit No. 1452, that decree has become final and operates as res judicata to the hearing of the present appeal. In my opinion this contention is sound. The suits were heard together. The issus framed in the suit were common. They were disposed of by one judgment. The result was that it was found by the Munsif that the defendants had only one holding and not two holdings and that the lands covered by the two suits formed one holding at one consolidated rent as alleged by the defendants. The decree in Suits No. 1452, which decided the very point which was ought to be agitated before the learned Subordinate Judge in appeal in Suit No. 1453, having become final, it was not open to the plaintiffs to raise the same question again in appeal in Suit No. 1453. Moreover, the plaintiff having accepted the decision of the Munsif in Suit No. 1452 and paid the deficit Court-fee and agreed to take a decree for the entire amount as alleged by the defendant as representing the rental for the lands covered by both the suits, he was precluded from raising the question in appeal before the Subordinate Judge that he was entitled to additional rent for the land covered by Suit No. 1453. That the principle of res judicata applied to the hearing of the appeal before the learned Subordinate Judge is supported by authority. In the Full Bench case of Zaharia v. Debia (1) two persons filed two separate suits for pre-emption in respect of the same sale, each claiming a right of pre-emption preferential to that of the other. Each plaintiff was made a party defendant to the suit brought by the other. A judgment was delivered in the suit of one of the plaintiffs and a copy thereof was placed on the record as the judgment in the suit of the other plaintiff; but separate decrees were prepared in each suit, one of the suits being decreed and the other dismissed. The plaintiff, whose suit had been dismissed, preferred an appeal from the decree in his own suit but not from the decree in the other suit which decree became final before the appeal was decided. It was held that the doctrine of res judicata applied and the appeal was barred. In the same Volume of the Allahbad Series of the Law Reports at page 151* there is a decision in the case of Dakhni Din v. Syed Ali Asghar (2) which follows the decision in the case of Zaharia v. Debia (1). The same view was taken by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Midnapore Zemindary Company Limited v. Nitya Kali Dasi (3). A different view was taken by two learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Mariammissa Bibi v. Joynab Bibi (4); but Mr. Justice Rampini dissented from the view taken by the other two Judges and the view taken by Mr. Justice Rampini was adopted in the Full Bench case of Zakaria v. Debia (1). Moreover, having regard to the fact that the plaintiff accepted the decree of the Munsif in Suit No. 1452 and agreed to take a decree for a consolidated rent for the lands covered by both the suits, it is no longer open to him to challenge the correctness of the decree in Suit No. 1453 and to obtain a decree for rent for a portion of the same holding twice over.

I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the hearing of the appeal before the learned Subordinate Judge was barred by res judicata. In this view of the case it is not necessary to discuss the other points raised by the learned Vakil for the apppellant. I would allow the appeal, set aside the decreee of the learned Subordinate Judge and restore the decree of the Munsif. The appellant will be entitled to his costs in the lower Appellate Court. There will be no order for costs in this Court as the respondents did not appear.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER No. 106 OF 1920.
March 6, 1923.

Present:—Justice Sir Francis Oldfield, KT., and Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao.

SIVASUBRAMANIA PILLAI—RESPONDENT—APPELLANT

THEETHIAPPA PILLAI AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS—RESPONDENTS.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 24 (3), 28, 39 (4), 146—Proof of debt after discharge of insolvent and declaration of dividend, admissibility of—Debt enforceable at date of adjudication but subsequently barred whether can be proved—Insolvent, whether person aggrieved by order admitting creditor to proof of debt—Appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48, applicability of, to proof of decree-debt in insolvency.

An insolvent is a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of section 46 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 by an order admitting a creditor to proof of his debt and is, therefore, entitled to appeal against it. [p. 575, col. 1]

Under sections 24 (3) and 39 (4) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, a creditor is not bound to tender proof of his debt before the discharge of the insolvent or before the declaration of the final dividend, but is entitled to tender proof of his debts at any time during the administration so long as there are assets to be distributed and no injustice is done to third parties. A debt not barred at the commencement of the Insolvency does not, in and for the purpose of the insolvency, become barred by lapse of time and, therefore, under section 28 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, any debt of the insolvent subsisting on the date of adjudication is provable in insolvency even though on the date of presentation of proof the debt had become barred. SIVASUBBARAMANIA PILLAI v. THEETHIAPPA PILLAI.

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The object underlying section 24 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is to enjoin upon creditors to tender proof as early as possible, a course tending to convenience in the administration of the insolvent's estate and the provision does not enact a rule of limitation. [p. 578, col. 2.]

Section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code deals only with the execution of a decree and has no applicability to the proof of a decree-debt in insolvency proceedings. [p. 578, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Tinnevelly, in I. A. No. 488 of 1919, in I. P. No. 6 of 1909, dated the 3rd of January 1920.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar (with him Mr. T. Nalla Sivan Pillai and Messrs. Chidambaram and Marthandam), for the Respondents :—There is a preliminary objection to the maintainability of the appeal. Although an application lies under section 46 (2) against an order of the District Court under section 24 admitting proof of a debt, the appellant is not a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of section 45 (2) because he is an insolvent who has no interest as to the persons among whom the money is distributed. This is specially so in the case where by the order of discharge the insolvent, subject to a personal allowance, has to place all his properties whatever present and future at the disposal of the Court.

Further, the Official Receiver has not been a party to the proceedings here. The practice in this Court is not to hear the insolvency appeal without his being on record. The appeal is incompetent on this ground also.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Iyer, (with him Messrs. T. L. Venkatarama Ayyar and T. A. Ananta Ayyar), for the Appellant.—The insolvent is clearly entitled to the surplus after distribution to creditors. This contingent interest is sufficient to bring him within the scope of the section and he is a "person aggrieved" by a wrong admission of a debt.

All parties interested are before the Court. The Official Receiver's presence is hence not essential. In any case, non-joinder though an irregularity is not fatal.

On the merits.—The order allowing tender of proof of debts is bad.

Firstly. The statutory limit of time under secton 24 (3) for tendering proof of a debt is any time before discharge. The discharge here on 20th September 1918 is long before the date of proof.

A discharge under section 24 (3) read with section 44, clause 2 (c), may be conditional as well as absolute and under section 45, clause (2), an order of discharge releases the insolvent from all debts entered in the schedule so that the case of debts not so entered is even stronger. The creditor is hence not entitled to tender proof at that stage.

Secondly. A creditor tendering proof must on the date of tender be capable of enforcing his right or claim in the ordinary course. The decree obtained by the respondent here was barred on the date of proof both under Art. 182 of the Limitation Act and section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code since more than 12 years had elapsed, without any execution application from the date of decree to date of proof. The period of 12 years fixed under section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code can in no case be extended [see Subbarayan v. Natarajan (1) as to what a period of limitation means]. The only circumstances when there can be suspense of a right to sue is set out in the order of reference of Oldfield, J., in Muthu Korakki Chetty v. Mahamad Madar Ammal (2). The case in Rokhia Bi v. Official Assignee, Madras (3) makes it clear beyond doubt that limitation does continue to run even after debtor's insolvency has intervened. So it has been held that subsequent annulment of adjudication does not attract the provisions of section 15 of the Limitation Act.

See observations of Seshagiri Aiyer, J., in [Ramaswami Pillai v. Govindasami Naicker (4) explaining In re General Rolling Stock Company, Joint Stock Discount Company's Claim (5) which may be apparently against me. There is nothing in law to prevent a creditor from keeping the debt alive against or suing the insolvent. Indeed section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act does not effect an absolute stay of suits at all; only leave of Court has to be procured. The general principle of law embodied in section 9 of the Limitation Act that when once limitation has begun to run, subsequent disability of any sort does not stop it, has been clearly affirmed in In re Benzon, Bower v. Chetwynd (6). The decree-debt here being clearly time-barred on the date of tender cannot be admitted to proof.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar :—On the first point, the discharge in this case is not with reference to any particular enumerated debts; it is not absolute but is only conditional and until the conditions are fulfilled, there is no discharge at all within the meaning of section 24 (3) since a conditional order of discharge is liable to being rescinded by Court for non-fulfilment of conditions. [See English Bankruptcy, Rules 238 and In re Summers, Ex parte Official Receiver (7).] Again section 24 only provides that proof of debts may be made at any time before discharge. This does not impose a prohibition against tender after discharge and under section 39 until all properties of the insolvent are realised and final dividend is declared, there is no bar at all to proof of debt. The only disability for late proof after declaration of a dividend is that the creditor cannot disturb dividends already declared and the well-established principle of limitation of right to proof is only not to disturb existing rights and declared dividends. The English Law is very clear and well-settled.

See In re McMurdo, Penfield v. Mc Murdo (8), Ex parte Boddam, In re Taylor (9), Per L. J. Turner. 2 Halsbury's Laws of England, S. 380, Note P., S. 394, Note D. Re Fentor Montague's Reports in Bankruptcy page 212.

The order of discharge is thus irrelevant. The Act even permits such an order the next day after adjudication even before schedule is framed subject only to the fulfilment of formalities, such as publication of the application for discharge.

On the second point, there is no bar of limitation at all for proof of debts. Section 24 (3) does not enact a rule of limitation. The Provincial Insolvency Act is a self-contained Statute and reference to the Civil Procedure Code or the Limitation Act is irrelevant. Neither Art. 182 of the Limitation Act nor section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code has any application to an insolvency proceeding. The English Law on the point is entirely in my favour and definitely negatives any notion of a period of limitation for proof of debt (see Williams on Bankruptcy, 12th Edition, page 147; Sugdan on Bankruptcy, 13th Edition, page 139 citing Ex parte Ross (10), also see In re Crosley, Muns v. Burn (11) and Ex parte Lancaster Banking Corporation, In re Westby (12) observations of Bacon, C. J.

This is not an application for execution at all and the case in Subbarayan v. Nataraian (1) cannot be against me. Muthu Korakki Chetty v. Mahamad Madar Ammal (2) proceeded on a construction of sections 3 9, 14 of the Limitation Act and no question of insolvency arose there. Rokhia Bi v. Official Assignee, Madras (3) a decision of Abdur Rahim and Seshagiri Aiyer, JJ., is a case on the special facts of that case and is no authority for any general or limited proposition material to the present case. The case in In re General Rolling Stock Company, Joint Stock Discount Company's Claim (5) states the general rule to be that after intervention of insolvency, no leave to sue should as a rule be granted, and even where such a leave is granted, the fruits of such decrees enure not only to the decree-holder plaintiff but for all creditors in general (see section 34 of the Act).

In re Benzon, Bower v. Chetwynd (6) is not an insolvency case but arose in an administration suit and the general principle as to insolvency cases is also recognised at pages 75 and 76.

Further, in the present case I may contend that no proof of debt is necessary since the decree was included in the insolvent's schedule.

The judgment of the lower Court is correct.

JUDGMENT.

Oldfield, J.—This insolvency originated in the arrest by first respondent of the insolvent, here appellant. On the latter's adjudication, however, only two creditors, now represented by other respondents, proved debts, the appellant refraining from proving his, until after a dividend of less than half an-anna had been distributed and about nine years had elapsed. Evidently what has led him now to tender proof of his debt under section 24 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907, is that on the 20th September 1918 the lower Court granted the insolvent what is described as a conditional discharge the condition being that he should, subject to his right to an allowance of Rs. 25 per month for maintenance of himself and his family, place at the disposal of the Court all property he might afterwards acquire. This discharge was granted on the application of the insolvent based on the expectation that in case of his discharge his mother would relinquish a life-estate to which he was entitled in reversion, in his favour, and the appellant evidently thought it worth while to prove in order to obtain a share in these new assets. The lower Court held that he was entitled to do so, notwithstanding the two points urged before it and here that his claim was made after the order of discharge of 20th September 1918 and that recovery of his debt would in proceedings other than insolvency be barred by limitation.

A preliminary objection has been taken to this appeal by the insolvent on the ground that he is not a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of section 40 (2) of the Act, because he has no interest in the distribution of assets, which have vested in the Official Receiver for his creditors, whoever they may be. But that is unsustainable for, under section 41, he will eventually be entitled to any surplus remaining, after the creditors, who have proved, have been satisfied and will be deprived of such surplus if the proof of another creditor whose claim may diminish or exahaust it, is wrongly admitted. Another formal objection to the proceedings is that the Official Receiver has not, so far as appears, been a party to them at any stage. But, as all the creditors concerned have had notice of them we simply note this irregularity and proceed.

First, as regards the order of 20th September 1918, it is, we may observe, defective, because it contains no definite provision for, or directions to the Official Receiver regarding the manner, in which it is to be given effect; and it should probably have been framed with reference to section 44 (5), explicitly, as imposing a condition and also suspending the discharge until that condition had been fulfilled by the execution of the anticipated release in favour of the Official Receiver or otherwise for the benefit of the creditors. But its terms have already been stated and its meaning is clear. First, a point referred to by the lower Court, although in doubtful language, this order is consistent with the future declaration of a final dividend since it contemplates the realization of further assets for distribution in one and, it may be added, it is clear from the text of the order, by which the insignificant dividend already distributed was declared, that it was not final. Next, the order of 20th September 1918 was not one of absolute discharge. For it was in terms conditional and expressly contemplated the continuance of the insolvent's disability to acquire property except for the benefit of his creditors and subject only to the reservation of a monthly income for himself and his family. Those terms are, as already stated, anomalous and it is doubtful what exact change in the insolvent's position they were intended to effect and whether they were intended to do or did more than release him from liability for his scheduled debts, those debts being made payable only from the property, which he was expected to acquire. Certainly, however, and this is the material point, there is nothing to indicate an intention on the part of the Court or other parties to the order to release such property from provable debts or to make any change in respect of them except as regarded the liability of the insolvent himself. It is then impossible to accept the first argument for the insolvent (appellant), that this order constituted such a discharge, as is referred to in section 24 (3) as fixing the stage in the insolvency, afte which no more proofs, such as the respondents', could be received.

That argument is, moreover, open to objection on the further ground that the reference to discharge in that section does not fix that stage. No doubt the section is at first sight explicit—"Any creditor may, at any time before the discharge of the insolvent, tender proof of his debt." But those words must be read in the light of section 39 (4) under which debts, if notified, as was the respondents' in the present case, can be proved until a final dividend is declared and the fact that it will in many cases be harsh and useless to postpone the grant of discharge until its declaration. For, although it may be impossible for the purpose of section 44 (3) (a) to ascertain the proportion between assets and liabilities at an early stage in the insolvency, it may be clear that the insufficiency of the former has arisen from causes, for which the insolvent is not responsible; and there will then be no reason for postponing his discharge, if he asks for it, as he can do under section 44 (1) at any time after the order of adjudication. We have not, it is worth observing, been shown that this reference to the right to prove before discharge corresponds with anything in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act or English Law; and it is possible that it was worded with reference to the description of debts provable under the Act in section 28 (1) as including those, to which the debtor becomes subject before his dischage by reason of obligations incurred before his adjudication. See section 46 (3), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act III of 1909 and section 30 (4) and (5), George V, C. 59. In any case the general law of insolvency contemplates proof of debts at any time, so long as there are assets to be distributed and no injustice is done to other parties. Ex parte Boddam, In re Taylor (9) and In re McMurdo, Penfield v. Mc Murdo (8). We accordingly hold, as a fair construction and one which will reconcile the policy of the Act and section 39 (4) with section 24 (3), that the words we are concerned with in the latter are not restrictive, but, as Vaughan Williams, J., said in the second of those decisions of similar words "as soon as may be after the making of a receiving order" in the Bankruptcy Act of 1883, Schedule II, r. 1, are merely directory and that "non-compliance with them does not in any way deprive any creditor of his right or limit his right."

That contention failing, it is argued next that the respondents' debt is not provable because it would be time-barred in other proceedings, or, more definitely, because the decree, in which it is merged, would be unexecutable after the twelve years which have elapsed since its date, under section 48, Civil Procedure Code. That twelve years elapsed between the respondents' decree and the presentation of his proof is no doubt true. But we are still of opinion that his debt is provable under section 28 (1) of the Act. The definition in that section of a provable debt contains no reference to the date at which the proof is presented or to any date except that of the adjudication, when respondents' debt embodied in the decree which he had lately been executing, was certainly recoverable, and the view that the existence of the debt at the date of adjudication alone is material is in accordance with English Authority on the similar provision of the English Law. The matter is dealt with generally in Ex parte Ross (10), that decision, it may be observed, being unaffected by the facts that (1) the debts in question had not, like respondents' debt, been merged in a decree and that they represented obligations which became enforceable only after the date of the adjudication, but before that of the discharge, the Indian and English definitions of provable debts alike including such liabilities. On the other side reliance has been placed on In re Benzon, Bower v. Chetwynd (6) and no doubt there reference was made to the principle that, if the Statute begins to run, it continues, whatever happens, to do so; and that principle would be applicable in the case before us, because the twelve years' period available to respondent for execution of his decree had opened before appellant's petition was filed. But the principle was applied in the case then under disposal, only because that case was, what the case before us is not, one of an administration suit and not of insolvency. If the question had been of insolvency, Ex parte Ross (10) would, as the earlier part of the judgment shows have been followed and it would have been held that a debt not barred at the commencement of the insolvency does not, in and for the purpose of the insolvency, become barred by lapse of time. Respondent has then relied on the decision in Subbarayan v. Natarayan (1) that section 48 contains an unqualified prohibition of execution of decrees over twelve years old. But the answer is that, when (as we hold) the respondent can prove for his decree-debt in the insolvency, no question of his right to execute is raised. In these circumstances, we must, following Ex parte Ross (10), hold that his debt is provable within the meaning of section 28 (1).

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs of legal representatives of first respondent.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I agree and would like to state my reasons for the conclusion at which we have arrived.

It was first contended by Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar for the insolvent-appellant that, under section 24 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, a creditor would be bound to tender proof of his debt before the discharge of the insolvent and that, as in the present case, proof was submitted after the insolvent's discharge the creditor's application should not have been entertained. In the view I am taking, it is immaterial that the discharge in the present case was conditional. The relevant portion of section 24 (3) is as follows: "Any creditor of the insolvent may, at any time before the discharge of the insolvent, tender proof of his debt and apply to the Court for an order directing his name to be entered in the schedule as a creditor in respect of any debt provable under this Act and not entered in the schedule." I am unable to interpret this provision as rendering it obligatory upon a creditor to submit proof before the discharge of the insolvent. Under section 44 a debtor may, at any time after the order of adjudication apply for an order of discharge. There is nothing in the Act to prevent an order of discharge being passed at a very early date after the order of adjudication, and it seems to be inconsistent with the scheme of the Act to hold that a creditor, who does not prove his debt before an order of discharge, is deprived altogether of his remedy. I need only refer to section 39. Clauses (3) and (4) of that section set forth the disabilities of the creditor guilty of laches in the matter of proving his debt. Clause (3), while giving him a certain right, provides that he shall not be entitled to disturb any dividend declared previous to the proof of his debts. Clause (4) refers to a declaration of a final dividend. It must be first observed that no inflexible rule is laid down as regards the point of time when a final dividend is to be declared. The clause only provides that when the Receiver has realised all the property of the insolvent or so much thereof as can be realised without needlessly protracting a Receivership he shall declare a final dividend. The matter is largely one of discretion to be exercised by the Court. When a final dividend is to be declared in a particular case, will depend upon the circumstances of that case. It is next material to observe that the penalty described for neglect, or omission to prove a debt before making a final dividend is, that that dividend shall be declared without regard to the claim of the creditor who has failed to prove the debt. These are the provisions which limit or affect the right of a creditor who fails to tender proof of his debt before a specified point of time.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Aiyar's second contention was that, if a creditor omits to prove his debt before the declaration of a final dividend he is barred from doing so. There is no warrant for this position in the sections to which I have referred. It is unnecessary to deal with this contention further than to say that this argument is entirely destructive of the first argument to which I have referred. According to the first contention based on section 24 (3) the discharge of the insolvent is the furthest point of time beyond which no debt can be proved, whereas the second contention fixes the declaration of the final dividend under section 39 (4) as an event subsequent to which a proof of a debt cannot be tendered. In my opinion, neither of these arguments is sound. No limitation is fixed for the creditors to come in and prove their claims. This is the English rule, and we have been shown nothing to induce us to hold that under the Provincial Insolvency Act a different rule is intended.

Rule 1 of the Second Schedule to the English Bankruptcy Act, 1883, runs thus: "Every creditor shall prove his debt as soon as may be after making of a receiving order." It will be noted that the word used is 'shall'. But In re Mc Murdo, Penfield v. McMurdo (8) Vaughan Williams, L. J., held that the rule was "merely a directory clause, a clause non-compliance with which does not in any way deprive any creditor of his right or limit his right." He observed that in his experience of Bankruptcy practice there never was any doubt as to the right of a creditor to come in and prove at any time during the administration. This rule was stated to be subject to certain conditions which are not material for the present purpose. See also Halsbury, Volume II, paragraphs 380 and 394.

No Indian cases were cited to us. But I find that in Lakshmanan v. Muttla (13) a Bench of this Court observed that it is open to a creditor at any time while the assets are undistributed to prove his debt and added "this is the course in all Bankruptcy and Insolvency proceedings." I am not quite clear how the statement in the judgment that even if a schedule had been framed it was still open to the creditor so long as assets were available to apply to be admitted on the schedule, under section 352 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 is reconcilable with Art. 174 of the Limitation Act of 1877 which prescribed for an application under section 353 of the said Code a period of 90 days from the date of the publication of the schedule. But I am referring to the case only for the purpose of showing that it was regarded as a settled doctrine that, apart from any particular Statute in Bankruptcy proceedings, no limitation was fixed for creditors to prove their debts. I may state that the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907, repeals not only the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to insolvency, but also Art. 174 of the Limitation Act of 1877.

I also find that in Parshadi Lal v. Chunni Lal (14) a distinction was drawn between applications under section 353 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 governed in regard to limitation by Art. 174 prescribing a period of 90 days and applications under section 353 to which Art. 178 prescribing a period of three years was held applicable. An argument based upon Parshadi Lal v. Chunni Lal (14) that an application by a creditor to prove his debt is governed by Art. 181 of the present Limitation Act was not advanced before us, and possibly the omission to advance this argument was due to the fact that Art. 181 is held applicable only to applications under the Civil Procedure Code and that as at present the Insolvency Law is contained in the Insolvency Act and not in the Civil Procedure Code, Art. 181 can have no application.

The object underlying section 24 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is the same as that which underlies rule 1 of the Second Schedule to the English Bankruptcy Act, 1883, namely, to enjoin upon creditors to tender proof as early as possible, a course tending to convenience in the administration of the insolvent's estate, and the provision clearly does not enact a rule of limitation.

I, therefore, hold, as my learned brother has done, that the creditor's application to prove his debt was not made beyond the time allowed by the law, and this ground of appeal consequently fails.

The next argument of Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Iyer was that the debt itself was barred, and as there was no subsisting debt there could be no proof of debt. In my opinion, this argument is also untenable. The creditor's debt was merged in a decree and it was argued that under section 48, Civil Procedure Code, the decree became extingusihed. This argument cannot be accepted because section 48 deals only with execution and lays down that no order for the execution of the decree shall be made upon an application presented after the expiration of twelve years from certain dates which, however, it is immaterial to specify for the present purpose.

Then, the general argument remains that a barred-debt cannot be proved in insolvency. I shall say nothing in regard to the question as to whether the pendency of insolvency proceedings does or does not save a debt from the bar of limitation. In the present case the debt is sought to be proved in the insolvency itself and no claim is based upon the debt in a separate proceeding. Ex parte Ross (10), to which Mr. Srinivasagopalachariar referred us, clearly held that in bankruptcy a debt did not become barred by lapse of time if it was not barred at the commencement of the bankruptcy. The same view was taken in Ex parte Lancaster Banking Corporation, In re Westby (12) which was also relied on by the learned Counsel. A very clear statement of the principle is contained in the following passage in the judgment of Bacon, C. J. in that case "When a bankruptcy ensues, there is an end to the operation of that Statute, with reference to debtor and creditor. The debtor's rights are established and the creditor's rights are established in the bankruptcy and the Statut of Limitations has no application at all to such a case, or to the principles by which it is governed." The authority of these decisions have not, in the slightest degree, been shaken by In re Benzon, Bower v. Chetwynd (6). On the contrary the judgment in it while holding that the pendency of bankruptcy proceedings did not save a claim made in the course of an administration suit from being barred by the Statute of Limitations, carefully distingusihed the Ex parte Ross (10) and other cases similar to it as beng cases where the proof was in the bankruptcy itself. I cannot do better than quote the following passage from the judgment: "As to the second point, cases were quoted beginning with Ex parte Ross (10) which show that in the bankruptcy a debt does not become barred by lapse of time if it was not so barred at the commencement of the bankruptcy and of this there can be doubt, but this is only in the bankruptcy."

The rule contained in section 28 (1) as regards debts provable under the Act is consistent with the rule deducible from the English cases. All debts to which the debtor is subject when he is adjudged an insolvent (quoting only the material portions) are debts provable under the Act. Under the section, therefore, it must be a debt to which the debtor was subject on the date of adjudication. If the debt was then subsisting, it is provable in insolvency.

On these grounds the second contention of the appellant also fails.

I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs of the legal representatives of the first respondent.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 7th February 1922.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and H. K. Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. N. Misra and M. H. Qidwa for Respondents Nos. 1, 3 to 6.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi, dated the 7th February 1922, by which the suit of the plaintiff-respondent was decreed against the defendants, who are the appellants in this Court.

The facts of the case are complicated; and the best way of solving the tangle will be to state them in chronological order.

A 2-biswas 17-biswansis and 5-kashwansis share in village Antaura, Pargana Sarra Samali, Tahsil Shahabad, District Hardoi, was owned by the ancestors of the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 and by the ancestor of one Mohan Singh; 4/5ths of the share being held by the former, and 1/5th by the latter. On the 16th August 1887, all the owners of this share mortgaged it by way of conditional sale to the predecessors of the defendants Nos. 3 to 9, who are the appellants before us. On the 20th August 1892 a deed of further charge in respect of a fresh loan was executed by the mortgagors in favour of the mortgagees. This was followed by the execution of a second deed of further charge on the 5th September 1895. The mortgagees entered into possession of the property which was the subject-matter of the mortgages mentioned above; that is to say, the whole of the share of 2 biswas 17 biswansis and 5 kashwansis.

MOHAN SINGH v. SEWA RAM.

On the 2nd September 1905, Raghunandan Prasad, defendant, purchased the 1/5th share which belonged to Mohan Singh, under a sale-deed executed by Musammat Parbati, acting as the guardian of her minor son, Mohan Singh. In 1906 the mortgagees brought a suit for the recovery of Rs. 3,036-10-0, the mortgage-money, due to them under the deeds of the 16th August 1887, 20th August 1892 and the 5th September 1895. Besides the representatives of the original mortgagors, Raghunandan Prasad was made a defendant to that suit. On the 24th August 1906 the Court granted a foreclosure decree. This decree provided for the payment of the sum of Rs. 3,439-10-0, by the judgment-debtors on the 24th February 1907; and further that, "if such payment be not made on or before the aforesaid 24th day of February 1907, then it is ordered that the defendants shall be absolutely debarred of all rights to redeem the mortgaged property." (Exhibit 2).

On the 21st February 1907 Raghunandan Prasad and one Fauji Singh, defendant No. 2, (who died during the pendency of the suit in the Court below and is represented by defendants Nos. 14 to 16) executed a deed of mortgage (Exhibit 1) to secure a loan of Rs. 3,600 in favour of Sewa Ram, the plaintiff to the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen. Raghunandan Prasad mortgaged the 2 biswas 17-biswansis and 5-kachwansis share in village Antaura, which was the subject of the foreclosure decree of the 24th August 1906, to which reference has just been made. Fauji Singh mortgaged his share of 4 biswansis in the same village. This was a simple mortgage and is the basis of this suit. The deed expressly stated that the object of raising the loan was to satisfy the foreclosure decree of the 24th August 1906. It may be noted here that the decree under appeal directs the sale of the 4-biswansis share of Fauji Singh also. His representatives have neither appealed from that decree, nor have appeared before us at the hearing of the appeal. The appellants have also not attacked the propriety of that part of the decree. We are, therefore, not concerned with that part of the decree of the Court below which directs the sale of the 4-biswansis share belonging to Fauji Singh.

We have seen that out of the 2-biswas 17-biswansis and 5-kachwansis share 1/5th belonged to Mohan Singh, which was purchased in 1905 by Raghunandan Prasad. In view of the events which happened later, to which reference will be made in its proper place, this 1/5th share has also dropped out of the present litigation. The suit in the Court below related to the remaining 4/5ths share owned by the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 and the present appeal is solely confined to that share.

On the 2nd March 1907, Raghunandan Prasad paid the entire amount due under the foreclosure decree by depositing that sum in Court (Exhibit 4), the 24th February to the 1st March being holidays. On the 8th March 1907, he applied to the Court to be put in possession of the 2-biswas 17 biswansis and 5 kachwansis share in virtue of his having entirely satisfied the foreclosure decree. In this application he alleged that the other judgment-debtors, that is, the ancestors of the defendants Nos. 10 to 13, not having paid a 'single shell' in satisfaction of the foreclosure decree, had "lost their right of getting possession" of any portion of the share then in suit (Exhibit 5). The Court accepted his prayer, and on the 16th March 1907, issued a warrant for delivery of possession of the mortgaged property (Exhibit 8). In this warrant Raghunandan Prasad was described as a plaintiff-decree-holder. The warrant was addressed to the Bailiff of the Court and stated that, "whereas the decree-holder has been awarded possession over 2-biswas 17-biswansis and 5-kachwansis share of village Antaura ..... by the decree dated the 24th August 1906 you are directed to get the possession of the same given to the said decree-holder."

On the 23rd March 1907 the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 executed a deed of possessory mortgage in favour of the defendants Nos. 3 to 9, in whose favour, of course, the foreclosure decree of the 24th August 1906, had been passed, in respect of the 4/5ths of the 2 biswas 17 biswansis and 5 kachwansis share in dispute before us for Rs. 2,807 (Exhibit 12). The purpose of the execution of this deed was to raise money to pay Raghunandan Prasad the sum of Rs. 2,571-7-3 due to him in respect of the 4/5th share of the mortgagor's liability under the foreclosure decree, which, as we have seen, Raghunandan Prasad had paid off in its entirety. This amount was left with the mortgagees for payment to Raghunandan Prasad.

On the 1st April 1907 Raghunandan Prasad was put in actual possession of the entire share under the warrant of the 16th March, to which reference has already been made.

On the 9th April 1907 the mortgagees under the deed of the 23rd March 1907, that is, the present appellants, defendants Nos. 3 to 9, deposited in Court the sum of Rs. 2,751-7-3 for payment to Raghunandan Prasad the payment being described as on account of "redemption money" (Exhibit 13). This deposit was made under the old section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). On the 20th April 1907 Raghunandan Prasad refused to accept the tender. On the 27th April 1907 the Court rejected the application accompanying the tender. On the 22nd May 1907 the mortgagees brought a suit, which they described as one for redemption of the share in dispute against Raghunandan Prasad and the mortgagors (Exhibit 110). On the 2nd July 1907, Raghunandan Prasad by a petition of that date admitted their claim, and agreed to take the sum of Rs. 2,751-7-3 previously deposited by them. In this application he said: "I have redeemed the mortgage property." (Exhibit 111). A consent decree was accordingly passed the same day. The property, of which possession was given under this decree, was described therein to be 2 biswas 5 biswansis 6 kachwansis and 8 nanwansis, which practically represents 4/5ths of the entire share of 2 biswas 17 biswansis and 5 kachwansis (Exhibit 16). It is common ground that these mortgagees under the deed of the 23rd March 1907, in other words, the defendants Nos. 3 to 9, that is, the appellants before us, have since then been and are still in possession of the property in suit.

We said that further reference would be made to the share of Mohan Singh. In the year 1913 Mohan Singh, in conjunction with a transferee of his, named Drigbije Singh, brought a suit against Raghunandan Prasad and the present plaintiff for cancellation of the sale-deed of the 2nd September 1905, and for possession of his share conveyed thereby in favour of Raghunandan Prasad by his mother, Musammat Parbati. This suit was decreed on the 14th July 1914. The plaintiffs, Mohan Singh and Drigbije Singh, were, however, ordered to pay Rs. 700 to Sewa Ram, the plaintiff-respondent before us, in discharge of the proportionate liability of Mohan Singh's 1/5th share under the foreclosure decree paid off by Raghunandan Prasad with the aid of the money borrowed from the respondent under the deed of mortgage of the 21st February 1907 referred to.

Now, on the date of the mortgage of the 21st February 1907 which, as we have said before, is the basis of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, Raghunandan Prasad owned, by virtue of the sale by Mohan Singh's mother of the 2nd September 1905, only 1/5th of the entire Zemindari share which he purported to mortgage by that deed in favour of the plaintiff-respondent. We have further seen that by the decree of the 14th July 1914, which Mohan Singh obtained against Raghunandan Prasad, the latter eventually lost even that 1/5th share. The result is that no portion of the mortgage share of 2 biswas 17 biswansis and 5 kachwansis was, on the date of this suit, either in the ownership or in the possession of Raghunandan Prasad. In the plaint of the present suit the property mortgaged, apart from the share of Fauji Singh, is described as follows:—"2 biswas 17 biswansis 5 kachwansis zemindari property situate in village Antaura, ... out of this 1/5th property was owned by the defendant No. 1 (Raghunandan Prasad) which he, under a sale-deed dated the 2nd September 1905, has purchased from Musammat Parbati, mother and guardian of Mohan Singh. The defendant No. 1 was mortgagee or charge-holder of the remaining 4/5ths portion of the Zemindari property because, having paid off the prior charge due to the defendants Nos. 3 to 9 from the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 had got redemption effected and obtained possession." No claim is made in respect of Mohan Singh's 1/5th share now. The main relief for which the plaintiff prayed is given in the plaint as follows:—

"(a) That a decree for recovery of Rs. 11,233-3-0, as per details given in Lists A and B besides interest and compound interest accruing during the pendency of suit, and in future up to the date of realization, with costs of the suit, be passed in his favour against the defendants in the following terms that they be ordered to pay up the total amount due to him in Court within a date fixed by the Court, else the amount may be realized by sale of the zemindari property to the extent of 4/5ths out of 2 biswas 17 biswansis 5 kachwansis, situate in the said village Antaura owned by the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 and the said 4 biswas, situate in the said village Antaura owned by the defendant No. 2, and that in case the sale-proceeds be not sufficient he may be allowed to obtain a simple money decree." The nature of the plaintiff's claim is stated in paragraph 1 of the plaint, which is as follows:—

"That the plaintiff is the mortgagee of zemindari property owned by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and sub-mortgagee of zemindari property owned by the defendants Nos. 10 to 13, the charge-holder of which is the defendant No. 1 and the subsequent mortgagees of which are the defendants Nos. 3 to 9."

It is common ground that when Raghunandan Prasad paid the foreclosure decree and obtained possession in virtue of that payment he acquired a charge in respect of the 4/5 ths share of the 2 biswas 17 biswansis and 5 kachwansis under the provisions of section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). In the circumstances, the plaintiff claims that Raghunandan Prasad be treated as a mortgagee of the 4/5ths share and he, the plaintiff, as a sub-mortgagee of the same under the deed of the 21st February 1907. He consequently asks for sale of the 4/5ths share of the property mortgaged under the deed of the 21st February 1907 by enforcing the charge which Raghunandan Prasad subsequently acquired under the provisions of the section just cited. This then is the substance of the suit now brought by the plaintiff. The decree against which this appeal is preferred describes the property liable to be sold in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim as follows:—

"4/5ths, out of 2 biswas 17 biswansis and 5 kachwansis haqiat zemindari, situate in Mauza Antaure, Pargana Sarra Shumali, Tahsil Shahbad, District Hardoi, which is in possession of the defendants Nos. 10, 11, 12 and 13." No other defendants except the defendants Nos. 3 to 9 have appealed against this decree; the others being arrayed in the group of the respondents.

The basis of the decision of the Subordinate Judge is that, in virtue of the principle of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, the plaintiff is entitled to sell the share in suit in enforcement of the charge which Raghunanadan Prasad acquired under the provisions of section 95 of that Act in satisfaction of the debt due under the deed of the 21st February 1907. The claim of the plaintiff was resisted by the defendants on various grounds. These will appear from the following lines of attack adopted in this Court against the decision of the Court below:—

1. That neither the principle nor the provisions of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) apply.

2. That neither the defendants Nos. 10 to 13, the owners of the property in suit, nor their transferees, the defendants Nos. 3 to 9, that is, the present appellants, had any notice of the plaintiff's option to enforce the charge in favour of Raghunandan Prasad and that consequently the said charge having been redeemed by payment to Raghunandan Prasad of the amount for which he held that charge and his having surrendered possession early in July 1907, the plaintiff is no longer entitled to enforce that charge by sale of the property in suit.

3. That the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation.

4. That, in any event, the plaintiff cannot get a decree for more than the amount for which Raghunandan Prasad acquired a charge as against the shares of the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 under the provisions of section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

5. That, in any event, the mortgage of the 23rd March 1907 in favour of the appellants is entitled to priority over the charge which Raghunandan Prasad had, the latter not having come into existence before the 1st April 1907, the date on which Raghunandan Prasad was put in actual possession of the share in suit.

As to (1), the principle of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) is a principle of law generally known as feeding the grant by estoppel, and, as was pointed out by Lord Buckmaster in the case of Tilakdhari Lal v. Khedan Lal (1), is well established in England. His Lordship stated the principle in the following words:—"If a man who has no title whatever to property grants it by a conveyance which in form would carry the legal estate, and he subsequently acquires an interest sufficient to satisfy the grant, the estate instantly passes." On this principle, therefore, the interest which Raghunandan Prasad acquired by virtue of the provisions of section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) would pass to the plaintiff by way of mortgage under the deed of the 21st February 1907, the basis of the suit. What he purported to mortgage by that deed was his "zemindari" interest in the 2 biswas 17 biswansis and 5 kachwansis share in village Antaura. This interest he never possessed; but subsequently he acquired a lesser interest; that is, a charge merely upon 4/5ths of the share. It is also clear that the covenants of the deed of mortgage of the 21st February 1907 will also attach to this acquired interest of the mortlagee, that is, the plaintiff will be entitled to the benefits of those covenants as against that interest of Raghunandan Prasad. Raghunandan Prasad and his assignee are in the same position as if the estate had been ab initio an estate in interest —Cuthbertson v. Irving (2). In the case of Partridge v. Ward (3), Swinfen Eady, J., laid down the following propositions:—"If an assignor with a defective title purports and intends to assign property for valre, any interest subsequently acquired by him in that property is available in equity to make the assignment effectual, even though the defect in title is apparent on the face of the assignment."

The learned Counsel for the appellants argued that the principle of equitable estoppel as stated above is not applicable to cases arising in this country and the law which would govern all cases must be found within the limitation of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Tilakdhari Lal v. Khedan Lal (1), already referred to, s instructive on this point. Their Lordships thought that "there may be statutory provisions or provisions of native law which would prevent the operation of the doctrine." Consequently, they remitted "that part of the case and that part only for further consideration." No such provisions have been brought to our notice. We have considered our own judgment in the light of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council and have come to the conclusion that there is nothing in the provisions of section 43 or of any law in force in India or in this Province which would preclude us from giving effect to the principle of feeding the grant by estoppel. We are of opinion, therefore, that the plaintiff-respondent is entitled to rely on that principle.

Coming to the terms of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) the first thing we have to consider is whether there was or was not an erroneous representation on the part of Raghunandan Prasad as to his zemindari title in respect of the 2 biswas 17 biswansis and 5 kachwansis share which he purported to mortgage to the plaintiff-respondent by the deed of the 21st February 1907. The recitals in the deed of mortgage, the circumstances surrounding its execution and the subsequent conduct of Raghunandan Prasad, leave no room for doubt in our minds that he represented himself as the owner of the whole of the share which he professed to mortgage to the plaintiff-respondent; and it is agreed on all hands that if he did make such a representation, it was erroneous. It will be remembered that the deed of mortgage was executed both by Raghunandan Prasad and Fauji Singh, each mortgaging different property; and, therefore, we find the use of the words "we" and "our" in the questions which we give below from the deed in question :—"For the satisfaction of the said creditor we have mortgaged and hypothecated in lieu of the principal.....due under this deed our zemindari property of 2 biswas 17 biswansis and 5 kachwansis." (Exhibit 1). This makes it perfectly clear that Raghunandan Prasad represented that he was the zemindar, that is, the owner, of the said share. It should be borne in mind that the money which Raghunandan Prasad borrowed under this deed of mortgage was borrowed for the purpose of satisfying the foreclosure decree already mentioned. In fact, both the purpose and the decree are mentioned in the deed. The last date fixed by the foreclosure decree for the payment of the mortgage-money was the 24th February 1907 and the deed in question was executed only three days before that date. It is, therefore, highly probable that, with a view to carry through the bargain successfully, Raghunandan Prasad represented to the creditor that he was authorised to make a mortgage of the whole of the share mentioned in the document. He seems to have believed that by paying the foreclosure decree in its entirety he would acquire the rights of the decree-hoder. In other words, that he would become the full owner of the property by virtue of the foreclosure as against the interests of the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 to the extent of their 4/5ths share in the property mortgaged. In the tender which he made on the 2nd March 1907 (Exhibit 4) Raghunandan Prasad described himself as the decree-holder. Similarly, he arrogated that position to himself in his application of the 8th March 1907 (Exhibit 5) asking for delivery of possession and, curiously enough, the Court in granting the application accepted the position of Raghunandan Prasad as that of the decree-holder. This conduct of his leads to the inference that he thought that as soon as he made the payment in satisfaction of the foreclosure decree and acquired possession in consequence, he would be the owner of the 4/5ths share. In the deed of mortgage he merely anticipated the situation in which he believed he would eventually be. There is no evidence whatsoever which would make us doubt the accuracy of the inference which we have drawn. We, therefore, hold that there was erroneous representation on the part of Raghunandan Prasad in respect of his authority to mortgage this 4/5ths share.

It was also argued by the learned Counsel for the appellants that the recital of the foreclosure decree with reference to its date and the number of the suit in which it was passed was enough to put the plaintiff to inquire into the title of Raghunandan Prasad, and if he had made that inquiry he would have reached the result that he had no title except in respect of the 1/5th share. We are of opinion that the argument is unsound. The doctrine of constructive notice is no part of the law of estoppel. It is enough that the person estopped has made the representation to the other party of an existing fact and the other party has believed in the truth of the representation and acted on it. It would obviously be unfair to allow the first party to turn round and say to the other party: "You should not have believed me but made inquiries as to whether I was speaking the truth or not." In case of Bloomenthal v. Ford (4), the Lord Halsbury, L. C., made the following observation:—"But once the conclusion is arrived at that the belief was induced, and intentionally induced, by a mis-statement of fact intended to operate upon the mind of another, upon which the man has acted, then I do not think any case can be found in the books in which it has been suggested that the legal consequence does not follow, namely, that there is estoppel, and that it is open to the person who has made the representation to say, 'I told you so-and-so; but you ought not to have believed me. You were too great a fool. I had a right to mislead you because you were too great a fool.' I do not believe that any such case can be brought forward, or that there is any authority for such a proposition."

The second line of attack in this connection taken by the learned Counsel for the appellants was, that the charge which was subsequently acquired by Raghunandan Prasad could not be validly mortgaged by him and consequently the plaintiff's mortgage could not operate on that interest of Raghunandan Prasad. To begin with, the following argument was put to us:

A mortgage is the transfer of title (or of an interest) in specific immoveable property (section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882).

A charge is not a 'transfer of title' in any property [Burlinson v. Hall (5)].

Ergo, there can be no mortgage of a charge.

In our judgment the premises are correct, but the conclusion is not rightly drawn. The true and the only conclusion following from the premises is that a mortgage is not a charge and vice versa. It was admitted by the learned Counsel for the appellants that a charge could be sold. It is difficult to escape the conclusion flowing from this admission that it can also be hypothecated or given as a security for the performance of an obligation. We think it is well established that in equity the benefit of a lien or a charge may be assigned with the debt in respect of which it is claimed. Bull v. Faulkner (6). It may be that, where the assignment of a debt is in the form of a hypothecation with the consequent right of redemption on re-payment, the assignment would for all practical purposes work out as an absolute assignment. It will expressly be so under section 25, sub-section (6), of the Judicature Act, 1873, (36 and 37 Vic. c. 66)—Tancred v. Delagoa Bay Ry. (7). Independently of the Act, however, the assignee will have authority to sue in his own name in a Court of Equity and recover the debt from the original debtor (Fisher's Law of Mortgage, 6th Edition, page 126, paragraph 231). It would follow from this that if the amount of the debt recovered is equal to the claim of the assignee he will appropriate the whole amount. If, however, the amount recovered exceeds the debt due to the assignee, the original debtor will be entitled to the surplus. The proposition of such an assignee is exactly the same as that of a sub-mortgagee. The plaintiff was, therefore, not much to blame when he treated himself as a sub-mortgagee in the circumstances of this case. A charge is defined in section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). It will be noticed that the definition is partly of a positive and partly of a negative character. Immoveable property is made security for the payment of money both in the case of a mortgage and in the case of a charge. That section clearly gives the charge-holder rights and remedies of a mortgagee. The right to hold immoveable property as a security for the re-payment of a loan and the further rights corresponding with the rights of a mortgagee in a similar position are, according to our judgment, substantial rights. Such rights would certainly be classified under incorporeal hereditaments in English Law; and we have no hesitation in holding that they are "property" within the meaning of sections 5 and 6 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). The latter section enacts: "Property of any kind may be transferred except as otherwise provided by this Act or by any other law for the time being in force." It is not contended that the rights mentioned above are either within the exceptions provided by Act IV of 1882 or by any other law for the time being in force. We, therefore, hold that a mortgage of a chargee's rights, if made, would be valid in law. This conclusion is further supported in this particular case by the fact that Raghunandan

Prasad not only acquired the incorporeal right of a charge-holder, but that he also acquired and entered into the possession of the property. The charge was, therefore, a possessory lien. A possessory title by itself is capable of being transferred, devised and inherited: Asher v. Whitlock (8) and Wajid Khan v. Dargahi Khan (9). We think, however, that the argument just considered and disposed of is irrelevant. Raghunandan Prasad made no mortgage of his charge-holder's interests. What he mortgaged was a 2 biswas 17 biswansis and 5 kachwansis zemindari share. It is only by the operation of law that those interests of his can be availed of by the plaintiff in enforcement of his claim under the deed of mortgage. Before we part with this point we may observe that a contract which is void ab initio cannot be validated by the provisions of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act. If a contract, therefore, purports to transfer property which the law makes inalienable that contract cannot be given effect to with reference to another property by which the transferor may subsequently acquire. On this ground the decisions in the cases of Gangabai v. Basvant (10) and Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbaraju (11) as well as the other cases cited by the learned Counsel in support of his argument on this point are clearly distinguishable. We, therefore, overrule the first point of argument.

As to the second point, that is, the question of notice, it is agreed that if the owner of the property, that is, the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 or their transferees, the appellants, paid up the charge which Raghunandan Prasad had in respect of the 4/5ths share owned by the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 in ignorance of the assignment in favour of the plaintiff, the plaintiff is not entitled to enforce the said charge. It is also agreed on all hands that the plaintiff may be assigned the position of a sub-mortgagee by analogy. We a e also of opinion that this may be conveniently done. The substance of the plaintiff's claim, as we have shown above, is the enforcement of the charge which came into existence in favour of Raghunandan Prasad on the 2nd March 1907. It is, therefore, incumbent on the plaintiff to show that the original debtors or their transferees had notice of his sub-mortgage. The plaintiff must prove such notice. The finding of the Court below is that the appellants had notice of the mortgage of the 21st February 1907 executed by Raghunandan Prasad in favour of the plaintiff. The evidence in support of this finding is, in our judgment, not convincing; but, in view of what we are going to state just now, it is not necessary to record any formal disagreement with it. Assuming, therefore, that the appellants had notice of the mortgage of the 21st February 1907, the question which arises is, is the notice of the contents of the deed of the 21st February 1907 notice of the transfer of the charge now sought to be enforced? Our answer to this question must be in the negative. The charge was not in existence on the date of the mortgage. We must, therefore, hold that neither the appellants nor the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 had any notice of the assignment of the charge in favour of the plaintiff.

It is a well settled principle of law that if the sub-mortgagee gives no notice to the original mortgagor of the assignment of the mortgagee's rights in his favour the original mortgagor would be justified in paying the debt wholly or in part to the assignor, thereby extinguishing the original mortgage altogether. It follows that on such extinction taking place the sub-mortgagee has no remedy left against the property—In re Lord Southampton's Estate, Allen v. Lord Southampton Banfather's Claim (12) and Dixon v. Winch (13).

The proviso attached to section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) is as follows:—"Nothing in this section shall impair the rights of the transferee in good faith for consideration without notice of the existence of the said option." The appellants will be protected by the proviso if they had no notice of the plaintiff's option to enforce Raghunandan Prasad's interests of a charge-holder in the property originally mortgaged to him. It may be that the appellants had notice of the original mortgage in favour of the plaintiff but that is immaterial. What is material is that they should have notice of the plaintiff's option to proceed against Raghunandan Prasad's interests as a charge-holder in enforcement of his claim under the deed of the 21st February 1907. It is difficult to fix the precise point of time at which the plaintiff became aware of the defect of Raghunandan Prasad's title as an owner in the share mortgaged by him to the plaintiff. At the earliest, he might have known this when Raghunandan Prasad surrendered his possession of the 4/5ths share in favour of the appellants in July 1907 and, at the latest, when he instituted the present suit. There is no evidence on the record that the plaintiff gave notice of his option to the appellants at any time. The transfer in favour of the appellants had come into existence on the 23rd March 1907.

We have seen that Raghunandan Prasad surrendered possession to the appellants in July 1907. In view of the possessory nature of the mortgage on which the foreclosure decree was founded it is obvious that the charge in favour of Raghunandan Prasad could arise under the provisions of section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) only in the event of his obtaining possession of the property which he redeemed by satisfying the foreclosure decree. See in this connection the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ahmad Wali Khan v. Shamsh-ul-Jahan Begam (14). It is common ground that he did obtain possession. The learned Counsel for the appellants argues that the charge came into existence only at the moment when Raghunandan Prasad was put into physical possession of the property, that is, on the 1st April 1907. On the other hand, the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent contends that it is enough that Raghunandan Prasad was in a position to enter into the possession of the property and that this position he acquired when he deposited money on the 2nd March 1907. In the view which we are taking of the case, it is not necessary to decide between these two contentions. We will assume that constructive possession is sufficient for the acquisition of the charge contemplated by section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). We are, however, clearly of opinion that the acquisition of possession, constructive or actual, is in the present instance a condition precedent for the creation of a charge under that section. It follows that the continuance of the charge depends upon the continuance of possession. That this is the intention of the Legislature is clear from the terms of section 95 of the Act. As a general rule, there is no lien at law without possession and this rule of Common Law seems to have been adopted by the Legislature for the purpose of section 95. In equity, possession in certain cases will not be necessary but in the present case we must be guided by the provisions of section 95. On this view of the case the charge now sought to be enforced had come to an end when Raghunandan Prasad parted with possession in favour of the appellants early in July 1907. The appeal, therefore, succeeds.

In view of our findings on the point of notice the appeal succeeds in so far as the decree for sale of 4/5ths of 2-biswas 17-biswansis and 5-kachwansis share in Mauza Antaura is concerned. The other points raised in the arguments at the hearing of the appeal are all points of law, and, in view of our opinion just expressed, it is not necessary to decide them.

We, therefore, allow the appeal, reverse the decree of the Court below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit in respect of the relief for the sale of that share. In other respects, the decree of the lower Court will stand. The appellants will get their costs from the plaintiff-respondent in both the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

The procedure provided in the Civil Procedure Code in regard to suits must be followed so far as it can be made appllicable, in all proceedings arising out of an application for the restoration of a suit dismissed in default of the plaintiff. [p. 590, col. 1.]

Manakji v. Surajmal, 10 Ind. Cas. 705; 7 N. L. R. 32, followed.

An appeal lies from an order dismissing an application for restoring to file an application for the restoration of a suit dismissed in default of the plaintiff. [p. 590, col. 1.]

Revision of an order of the Subordinate Judge, Bhandara, dated the 22nd December 1921, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 72 of 1920.

Mr. G. R. Pradhan, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—A suit filed by the applicant, Kalicharan, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bhandra, against the three non-applicants was dismissed on the 23rd of June 1920, on account of his absence, the first two defendants being present, that is to say, under r. 8 of O. IX of the Civil Procedure Code. On the 25th of June 1920, he put in an application under r. 9 of the same Order for restoration of the suit and this application also was dismissed in his default and in the presence of the first defendant on the 24th of September 1920. He then applied again on the 30th of September 1920 for the restoration of his application to restore his suit, and succeeded in satisfying the Court that there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance on both the 23rd of June and the 24th of September, the dates on which his suit and the application for restoration of it were dismissed. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, appears to have regarded the second application as one for restoration of the suit itself and not as one for restoration of the first application, and accordingly dismissed it as barred by time.

2. In appeal against this dismissal the finding that good cause has been shown for non-appearance on both occasions was accepted and it was held that the Subordinate Judge ought to have restored the second application and thereafter the suit, section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code being applicable to the proceedings, as was laid down in Manakji v. Surajmal (1). The learned District Judge was, however, of opinion, based apparently on the use of the word "suit" in clause (c) of r. 1 of O. XLIII, that though an appeal lies against an order under r. 9 of O. IX refusing to restore a suit, there can be none against an order passed under the same rule read with section 141 refusing to restore an applicaton. The plaintiff has now applied for revision of the Subordinate Judge's order dismissing his second application, admitting the correctness of the view taken in the Court of the District Judge that he has no right of appeal against that order.

3. In Harlal v. Narayan (2) I distinguished the case of Manakji v. Surajmal (1) as not being concerned with execution proceedings. I went out of my way, however, to suggest a doubt as to its correctness in regard to proceedings of the nature of those with which we are concerned now in view of the rulings of the Privy Council in Thakur Prasad v. Fakir-Ullah (3) and the Calcutta High Court in Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen (4). That doubt I find on examination to be without basis. Both the cases mentioned dealt with an application in execution, and it was held that section 647 of the old Code in the earlier case and section 141 of the present Code in the later case did not make the procedure laid down for suits the procedure to be followed in such cases, but only for the reason that the Code itself lays down a full procedure for them. That reason does not apply to applications of the nature of that with which we are now dealing. I hold, therefore, following the ruling in Manakji v. Surajmal (1), that the procedure provided in the Civil Procedure Code in regard to suits must be followed so far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings arising out of the present application.

4. But the view taken by the learned District Judge is in effect that section 141 makes O. IX applicable to the present case but does not make clause (c) of r. 1 of O. XLIII similarly applicable. The words of the section, however, make the whole of the Procedure Code applicable, as far as that is possible. The distinction seems to be based on the use of the word "suit" in the latter rule, but that is the word used all through r. 9 of O. IX and also in section 141. It appears in clause (c) of r. 1 of O. XLIII merely as a repetition of the exact terms of the rule against which an appeal is allowed that repetition being necessary merely becasue the appeal is allowed only against the rejection of an application, that is to say, only one of the orders that can be passed under r. 9 of O. IX; otherwise it would have been sufficient to mention no more than an order under that rule. The right of appeal is no more and no less a matter of procedure than the right to apply for the setting aside of a dismissal in default, and the ruling of Skinner, A. J. C., which the learned District Judge followed comes to this, that after the word "suit," wherever it occurs in r. 9 of O. IX, we must read the words: "or other proceeding to which this rule applies by virtue of section 141." It follows that the same words must be added after the word "suit" in clause (c) of r. 1 of O. XLIII. In that view, an appeal did lie to the Court of the District Judge, and that Court ought to have restored the application, leaving the Subordinate Judge to make the necessary consequential restoration of the suit.

5. In strictness, therefore, the order of the Subordinate Judge being appealable cannot be revised, and the correct course for this Court would be to set aside the appellate decree, against which no second appeal lay, and to remand the case to the Appellate Court. That Court could pass no order but that the application for restoration should be restored, and thereon the first Court could only order that the suit should be restored. No object can possibly be served by going through these formalities, which can only mean at least two unnecessary appearances in Court for the parties. I, therefore, order that, the suit itself shall be restored to the file and tried out according to law. The costs of these proceedings, in which the Pleader's fee will be Rs. 15, will be costs in the suit.

First appeal against a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Simla, dated the 12th October 1921.

Mr. Badri Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sagar Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit for accounts out of which this first appeal arises was based on a written agreement according to which the plaintiff, who is a Barrister of Simla, undertook to obtain contracts for the defendants, who are Bankers and contractors of Ferozepore Cantonment, on the condition, inter alia that, the latter would pay him 10 per cent. of the net profits on the contracts. The agreement was executed at Ambala on the 22nd October 1920, and by the end of that month the defendants, through the instrumentality of the plaintiff, were given at Simla three contracts to supply to Government 300 tons of Ghee, 1,140 tons Gur and 375 tons Sugar. In February 1921 they paid to plaintiff Rs. 2,000 in part satisfaction of his claim to a share in the profits and in April he began to urge for paymentl of the balance. At first, on the 2nd April 1921, he sent them a letter demanding settlement of accounts but not receiving a reply thereto till the 15th April he sent them notice in a registered cover intimating that they should refer the matter to arbitration in accordance with clause 14 of the agreement and nominate their arbitrator within a week and that if they failed to do so he would file a suit against them. In reply to this letter of 2nd and the notice of the 15th April the defendants wrote back on the 20th April to say that they never denied his claim but could not calculate the net profits as the accounts were not ready; that in case he should insist upon immedaite payment they were ready to make a rough calculation of the profits; that no controversy or dispute had arisen between them which could be referred to arbitration, and that he might come to Ferozepore and examine the account-books to satisfy himself but should not rush to Court. But the plaintiff did not wait much longer and on the 17th May 1921, instituted the present suit for accounts in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Simla. The defendants pleaded inter alia that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit because, according to clause 15 of the agreement, the Courts at Ferozepore alone were given jurisdiction to try cases between the parties; that according to section 18 of Schedule II to the Code of Civil Procedure the suit should be stayed and the parties directed to refer it to arbitration, in compliance with clause 14 of the agreement, and that the suit was premature as no cause of action had accrued to the plaintiff. Upon these pleadings the Court below framed the following issues:—

(1) Has this Court no jurisdiction? (2) Does clause 14 of the agreement bar this suit? (3) Can the suit be stayed, if so, should it be stayed? (4) Is the suit premature? (5) Is the plaintiff not entitled to rendition of accounts? The lower Court recorded a finding on issue No. 3 only stating in its judgment that defendants' Counsel gave up his case on all the issues except No. 3 and decided that issue against the defendants and granted the plaintiff a decree with costs for rendition of accounts. Counsel for the defendants-appellants contends before us (1) that the lower Court ought to have given findings on all the law points specially on the question of jurisdiction because the admission of Counsel on a law point does not bind his client and, further, because jurisdiction could not be conferred by consent of parties, and (2) that the suit should have been stayed and that the parties should have been directed to refer the matter to arbitration according to clause 14 of the agreement.

As regards the plea of want of jurisdiction it is clear that the litigants can, by agreement inter se, divest a Court of its inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit no more than they can confer jurisdiction on it by consent where it has none. The learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants could cite no authority in support of his proposition that the agreement to have the suit decided by the Ferozepore Courts to the exclusion of other Courts which could lawfully, entertain the same, was enforceable Prosunno Chunder Bose v. Prosunno Chunder Roy (1) and Barkat-un-nissa Begam v. Mahboob Ali Mian (2) cited by him are not in point. We are, therefore, of opinion that the jurisdiction of the Court below could not be ousted by the agreement between the parties.

As regards the finding of Issue No. 3, the reasons given by the Court below in support of it are untenable. The defendants' plea that the accounts were not ready is on the face of it true. To purchase and supply hundreds of tons of Ghee, Gur and Sugar, they must have made numerous transactions with a large number of persons at different places, and must have expended lacs of Rupees thereon, and, therefore, it was not possible for them to complete accounts of all these transactions and calculate net profits within the time at their disposal before the institution of the suit. The lower Court says in its judgment that the point in dispute between the parties was whether the accounts were ready or not and that the defendants refused to refer this point to arbitration. But they asked the plaintiff to inspect their account-books and see for himself whether what they stated was true or not. There is nothing to show that in reply to the defendants' letter of 20th April the plaintiff wrote back to say that he wanted to refer to arbitration the question whether the accounts were ready or not. The plaintiff made no allegation which the defendants denied and, therefore, the latter were justified in telling him that there was no point in dispute between them which could be referred to arbitration.

The next question is whether the suit should be stayed and the parties directed to have recourse to arbitration according to clause 14 of their agreement. As more than 21 months have now elapsed since the institution of the suit the accounts must have been completed during this period and the defendants must now be in a position to tell what has been the amount of their net profits, if any. We are, therefore, of opinion that the suit must be stayed and the parties directed to appoint arbitrators to examine the accounts and find out therefrom the amount of net profits if any, and award to the plaintiff the amount due to him. Accordingly we accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the Court below and remand the case to be dealt with as stated above. The Court-fee stamp on the memorandum of appeal to be refunded. Other costs in this Court to be borne by the parties.

Mr. V. G. Tambe, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The guardian who has been appointed by the District Court should have been made a party to this appeal, but the point is really immaterial for I intend to dismiss the appeal. It is clear from the record that the present appellant is an unfit person to be appointed the guardian of her minor sons' property. She has in the past been immoral and has spent the minor's money in wandering about the country to get away from her village for her delivery for an illegitimate child. It is also clearly established that she has been mismanaging and wasting the minor's estate. Under these circumstances, the District Judge was clearly right in not entrusting the further custody of her minor son's property to her.

It is here argued that the maintenance ordered by the District Judge, namely, Rs. 25 a month, for the maintenance of herself and her two children is insufficient, but no appeal lies from an order on a guardianship application fixing the amount to be paid by the guardian of the property for the maintenance and education of the ward: See Gopammal v. Srinivasa Iyengar (1). There is nothing to prevent the guardian or the present appellant applying to the District Judge to increase the monthly allowance should circumstances exist to make this desirable. This appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellant to bear the respondent's costs. I fix Pleader's fee at Rs. 20.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Meerut, dated the 2nd September 1920.

Mr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.
Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of possession of a one-third share of 49 bighas and old land. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled to the property on the death of his mother and aunt, Bhurya and Kirpya, daughters of Pirthi, the last male owner.

On behalf of the defendants it was pleaded that the plaintiff was bound by a family settlement arrived at between the defendants and the ladies and that the claim was also barred by the principle of res judicata in consequence of a previous litigation.

Pirthi, the last male owner, died some 22 years ago and his widow, Musammat Shibya, succeeded to the estate. She died in 1910. On her death an application for mutation of names was made in the Revenue Court by Musammat Bhurya and Kirpya, the two daughters of Musammat Shibya, which was opposed by Chajju, defendant, on the allegation that he was the adopted son of Musammat Shibya. The matter remained pending in the Revenue Court for a long time and, ultimately, on the 11th October 1911, a compromise was filed in that Court, under which two-thirds of the properties went to the two daughters in equal shares and the remaining one-third to Chhajju and other collaterals. Mutation of names followed accordingly. Very soon after this compromise, namely, on the 18th of June 1912, Musammat Bhurya and Musammat Kirpya instituted a suit in the Civil Court to recover possession of the one-third share of the properties which had gone to Chhajju and others, on the allegation that the previous compromise was not binding on them. In the plaint, as originally filed, there was no relief asked for as to the cancellation of that compromise. The Court of first instance threw out the suit on the technical ground that the plaint was defective. On appeal the plaint was ordered to be amended, and a relief for the cancellation was added, and the case remanded for disposal on the merits. On the 24th of March 1914 the Court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding that the ladies could not avoid the previous compromise. This decree was affirmed in appeal by the District Judge and by the High Court on the 13th of April 1916. The result was, that Chhajju and others remained in possession of the one-third share of the estate of Pirthi, and a suit brought to recover possession of it by Pirthi's daughters stood dismissed. Both the daughters have since died. Gokul, the present plaintiff, who is the son of Musammat Bhurya has instituted the present suit to recover possession of the one-third share which had passed out of the estate. This suit has been decreed by both the Courts below.

In appeal two points have been raised before me: (1) that the present claim is barred by the principle of res judicata and

(2) that, in any case, the previous compromise was a family settlement and was binding on the plaintiff.

It would be convenient to dispose of the second point first. If the question of res judicata does not arise then, in my view, on the findings recorded by the learned District Judge, the compromise cannot be held to be binding on the plaintiff. In the first place, there is a finding by the lower Appellatte Court that this really did not amount to "a genuine family settlement." In the next place, he has held that this compromise could not bind the ladies nor the plaintiff for want of registration. This latter view is supported by the Full Bench ruling in the case of Jagrani v. Bisheshar Dube (1) in which it was held that a document which purports or operates to create or extinguish any right or interest in immoveable property worth Rs. 100, even though it records a family settlement, was compulsorily registrable. I am, therefore, of opinion that, if the present claim is not barred by the principle of res judicata then, on the findings, the compromise cannot bind the plaintiff. The principal point for determination, therefore, is the plea of res judicata. The former suit was instituted by the ladies to recover possession of a part of the estate which was in the wrongful possession of Chhajju and others who were claiming a paramount title in themselves. The suit obviously must be deemed to have been instituted in the interest of the estate and for the benefit of all the persons who might come to inherit it thereafter. The two ladies represented the estate for the time being and it was their duty to raise all the ground of attack which would entitle them to recover possession of the estate. If they failed to raise any such ground, or if they raised it and it was not accepted by the Court, the decree nevertheless would be final. It is not suggested anywhere that the former decree had been obtained by collusion or fraud. The suit being, in my opinion, a representative one the decree would bind not only the ladies who were the plaintiffs in the suit but all subsequent successors to the estate. It has, however, been strongly contended by the learned Vakil for the respondent that that former suit was brought in the personal capacity of the ladies and for their own benefit, inasmuch as their main object was to get the compromise cancelled in which they had entered into, and that such a suit was really not a representative suit. It is further contended that the defendants at that time were in the position of transferees from these ladies and a decision arrived at between the ladies and their transferees could not bind the present plaintiff who was not claiming title through them but claiming in his own right. But, as was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (2), the property which is acquired by persons under a compromise based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in themselves which was acknowledged and defined by an agreement, is not the same thing as an alienation by limited owners in their favour. Chhajju and others did not acquire any title from the two ladies, but, on the other hand, they in compromise of an independent claim acquired a portion of the property. They cannot, therefore, be treated as mere transferees from those ladies. The learned Munsif in the former case had dismissed the suit for possession on the ground that the compromise had not been obtained under any undue influence, mistake of law or fact, and was in fact valid. The mere fact that the ladies at that time did not raise the plea that the compromise was not binding on them for want of registration cannot nulify the effect of that decree. Even if that suit had been dismissed on the ground of personal estoppel against the ladies, it seems to me that the adjudication would still be final. In the case of Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (3), their Lordships of the Privy Council held a decree dismissing a widow's suit on the ground of personal estoppel as binding on subsequent reversioners. If the previous suit was a suit instituted in the interest of the estate and for the benefit of not only the ladies but all the persons who may come to succeed after them, then it must be deemed to have been a representative suit, and if it was such a suit then the decision arrived at in that litigation, in the absence of any fraud or collusion, would operate as res judicata. This was the view accepted in the Full Bench case of Kesho Prasad Singh v. Sheopargash Ojha (4). The learned Vakil for the respondent has strongly relied on the case of Narain Singh v. Raj Kumar Singh (5), in which it was held that a previous compromise decree between an adopted son on the one hand and certain other claimants on the other was no bar to a subsequent claim raised by the adopted son. That case, however, is clearly distinguishable because in that case a compromise decree did not stand on any higher footing than the compromise itself. There was really no adjudication by the Court and a question of res judicata in that case did not arise. The learned Judges were of opinion that, under the circumstances of that case, the compromise was not a settlement of any bona fide family dispute and as such was not binding on the plaintiff. In the present case I have already said that if it were not for the decree in the previous suit which was obtained after a fair fight, the compromise would not have been binding on the plaintiff.

The result, therefore, is that I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the suit with costs in all Courts.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 39 (h)—Guardian, appointment of—Person residing outside jurisdiction of Court, whether eligible for appointment.

There is nothing in the Guardians and Wards Act to prevent a Court from appointing as guardian a person who ordinarily resides outside the limits of its jurisdiction.

Asghar Ali v. Amina Begam, 24 Ind. Cas. 59; 36 A. 280; 12 A. L. J. 392, dissented from.

Application for stay of the execution of an order of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 16th April 1923.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—This is an application to stay execution of the District Judge, Wardha's order dated the 16th April 1923 regarding the guardianship of two minors, Vital aged eleven and his sister Kamala aged six. The first applicant in the case, Musammat Vitha Bai, is a real sister of the minor's father. The second applicant is the son of the first. These, who are residents of Bombay, have been appointed joint guardians of the persons of the minors with permission to take them to their home near Bombay. The case is now under appeal in this Court. It being fixed for the 19th September for hearing applicant with the records. One application to stay execution of the order having failed, this is the second. The ground urged is that it is against the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act to appoint guardians residing outside the Court's jurisdiction. I am referred to section 39 (h) which lays down that a Court may remove a guardian who ceases to reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court. The Act does not say must remove such guardian, and nothing in the Act itself has been shown me preventing the appointment of a person ordinarily residing outside the limits of the Court's jurisdiction. It is conceivable that in many cases no proper objection could be raised to such a course. I am also referred to Asghar Ali v. Amina Begam (1) which lays down that the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890 contemplates that an applicant for guardianship should reside within the jurisdiction of the Court to which he made the application. With due respect, I doubt the correctness of the dictum above referred to. Under the peculiar circumstances of the present case, namely, that the present applicant apparently is no relation of the minors and that she is a prostitute by profession, I see no reason to stay execution of the District Court's order. I decline again to stay it.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Farrukhabad, dated the 12th July 1921.

Mr. Durga Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. Agarwala and Gulzarilal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the findings of both the Courts below, Musammat Durga and Sia Ram are the licensees of a certain piece of land in Farrukhabad town upon which a kacha puckka house has been constructed, and the plaintiffs are the licensors of that land. In a previous suit; Durga denied the plaintiff's title Sia Ram did not. Durga also executed a usufructuary mortgage, under which, however, possession was not given. The plaintiffs then sued for a declaration that the usufructuary mortgage was inoperative against their title to the land and for the ejectment of the defendants. The Trial Court granted them a declaration that the usufructuary mortgage was inoperative and that Durga had lost her right to residence but refused ejectment.

The lower Appellate Court granted both reliefs. The defendants appeal here.

It is quite clear that the defendants, Durga and Sia Ram, are licensees. Apart from the fact that Sia Ram never denied the plaintiff's title, it is settled law in this Court that a licensee in possession does not, like a tenant, by denying title of the grantor of the license, forfeit the license and become liable to ejectment [Dharam Kunwar v. Fakira (1) and Akbar Ali Khan v. Shah Muhammad (2)]. So there is no case for ejectment. I do not agree with the appellants that Musammat Durga did not deny the title of the plaintiffs. I think she did. It is to be noted that the plaintiffs did not sue for ejectment by revocation of license. Had they done so, the defence raised under section 60 of the Easements Act would have been material.

As a result, I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and uphold the decree of the learned Munsif only so far as it awards a declaration that the mortgage cannot operate against the interests of the plaintiffs. The suit for dispossession of Durga and Sia Ram is dismissed. The plaintiffs will pay their own costs and those of Durga and Sia Ram in this Court and the Courts below. These costs will include in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 20th November 1920.

Mr. A. Haider, for the Appellants.

Messrs. K. N. Katju, Jang Bahadur Lal and S. P. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the litigation out of which this appeal arises afford some indication of the hardness of the way of the decree-holder in India. Ram Richpal Singh is the father of two sons, Shambhu Dayal Singh and Girja Dayal Singh. They were members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mirakshara Law. Shambhu Dayal Singh was born about 1908, Girja Dayal Singh was born about 1910. Before they were born, the father, Ramrichpal Singh, commenced borrowing money from the Kayasth Trading Company, Gorakhpur. He continued borrowing money and in 1913, when Shambhu Dayal Singh was five and Girja Dayal Singh was three, he executed a promissory-note for Rs. 2,028, and in 1914 executed a second promissory-note for Rs. 350 in favour of the same Company. In 1916 the Company obtained a decree on the first promissory-note and sold the decree-holder's rights under that decree together with this second promissory-note to Munshi Chhotu Lal. Munshi Chhotu Lal subsequently obtained a decree on the second promissory-note later. Both decrees were against Ramrichpal Singh alone, he being the executant of the promissory-notes in question. In execution of the first decree Munshi Chhotu Lal attached certain property in 1918. Shambu Dayal Singh, aged ten, and Girja Dayal Singh, aged eight, objected in execution proceedings that two-thirds of the property so attached was not liable to attachment under the decree for the following reason:—

Their allegation was that they and their father were members of a joint Hindu family, and that in the year 1916 after both the decrees had been passed against their father they, the elder, then being eight, and the younger, then being aged six, had separated from their father by means of a partition decree which had been obtained not in the Gorakhpur District where they resided and where the property under attachment is situated, but in the Fyzabad District under the jurisdiction of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. Their plea was accepted in 1918 by the Court executing the first decree and a two-thirds share of the property in question was exempted from attachment accordingly. Within a year of the success of the plea of Shambhu Dayal Singh, and Girja Dayal Singh, Munshi Chhotu Lal instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur for a relief which must be examined rather closely. The relief which he sought was for a declaration that the decree of the 20th December 1916 passed by the Fyzabad Court was invalid; secondly, for a reversal of the order passed in execution on the 27th July 1918 declaraing two-thirds of the property not liable to attachment, and, thirdly, for a declaration that the whole of certain family property was liable to attachment and sale in execution not only of the first decree but of the second decree, and, as far as I can gather, he also desired that the two-thirds share of the property already exempted should be liable for the satisfaction of both decrees. Upon the facts before me it does not appear that he has as yet put the second decree into execution. In the meanwhile, the situation has become further complicated by the fact that Ramrichpal Singh has become an insolvent. The Receiver was added as a party to the suit.

The learned Counsel who represents the plaintiff in this appeal has said that all that the plaintiff wishes is for a declaration that both these decrees bind as much joint family property as is at present in the hands of Shambhu Dayal Singh and Girja Dayal Singh and that he wants nothing more. The plaint might have been drafted more artistically. It, however, in my opinion, suggests that that is the actual relief which the plaintiff desired from the beginning. In respect of the father's property, such as it is, he can of course only obtain such satisfaction as the Receiver can give him and what he clearly now desires is that he shall be at liberty to execute both his decrees against the joint family property which has come to the sons, and which is not in the hands of the Receiver. The Trial Court decided that the promissory-note of 1913 was executed in satisfaction of antecedent debts and that the whole of the joint family property was thus liable under the decree passed upon it. It held that the second promissory-note had not been executed in lieu of antecedent debts or for legal necessity and that, therefore, the joint family property was not liable under the decree passed upon it. It gave relief accordingly. The learned Second Additional District Judge in a careful and reasoned judgment on an appeal by the defendants and a cross-objection by the plaintiff decreed the whole relief for which the plaintiff had prayed. The present appeal is preferred by the two minor children, Shambhu Dayal Singh and Girja Dayal Singh. Before I discuss the grounds taken in the Memorandum of Appeal it is necessary to go back to the original pleadings, and it is to be noted, that not only are the reliefs sought completely separate but that in two instances they depend upon separate causes of action. The first relief is for a declaration that the decree partitioning the property between the father and the two sons which was passed by the Court of Fyzabad is invalid as against the plaintiff. The second relief, for a reversal of the order in execution exempting the sons' property, is clearly based on O. XXI, r. 63 and the cause of action there arose upon the order exempting that property which was passed on the 27th July 1918. The third relief, however, for a declaration that other property held by the present appellants is liable in execution of the first decree and that that other property and the property already exempted are liable in execution of the second decree, is based not upon the order of the 27th July 1918 but upon the denial of the plaintiff's rights to execute against such property which was implied in the objection filed in 1918, upon which the order of the 27th July 1918 was passed. There were, thus, three declarations sought and a Court-fee of Rs. 30 should have been paid and only Rs. 20 were paid but that error can be corrected now.

I shall now take the grounds of appeal in order:

The first ground is, that the suit is barred by limitation. The suit is certainly not barred by limitation in respect to any of the three reliefs. It was instituted in March 1919. The partition decree of the Fyzabad Court was passed on the 23rd October 1916. The plea that Shambu Dayal Singh and Girja Dayal Singh were in no way liable was not put forward till 1918 and the order in the Execution Department was not passed till the 27th July 1918. The period of limitation in respect of the third cause of action was one year, and the period of limitation in respect of the other two causes of action was not less than three years.

The next point taken is, that the suit is barred by the provisions of section 16 (2) of Act III of 1907. It certainly is not so barred for two reasons. In the first place, the relief sought, as I read it, in respect to property was against Shambhu Dayal Singh and Girja Dayal Sirgh only. Their father was joined as a necessary party, but no relief was actually sought against him, except in respect of the declaration that the decree of 1916 was not binding upon the plaintiff. The plaintiff did not seek relief against any of the property which had come into the hands of the Receiver under the insolvency proceedings. Further, the joining of the Receiver as a party would have been sufficient to cure any irregularity.

I now come to the next point. It is, that the two-thirds share of the sons in the family property is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of simple money-decrees obtained against the father. We here have to differentiate the two promissory-notes. The promissory-note for the large amount, Rs. 2,028, has been found by both the Courts to have been executed by Ramrichpal Singh to discharge antecedent debts incurred by him. The finding of the lower Appellate Court on this point is as follows :—"There is abundant evidence to show that the promissory-note dated the 22nd January 1913 was executed in consideration of several promissory-notes. Besides the oral evidence on the point, there is the certified copy of the ledger of the Kayasth Trading and Banking Corporation, Limited, Gorakhpur, the original creditors, from whom Munshi Chhotu Lal purchased the decree. I find the issue in favour of the respondents." The issue (which he elsewhere calls the point) was whether the lower Court was right in holding that the promissory-note dated the 22nd January 1913 on which the earlier decree was passed was supported by antecedent debts. This finding is a conclusive finding which cannot be contested in second appeal. The first promissory-note was executed in lieu of antecedent debts due from the manager of a joint Hindu family. So the appeal must fail upon that point.

But in the case of the second promissory-note which was executed only for Rs. 350, on the facts, there were no antecedent debts and no legal necessity is established. The lower Appellate Court has here found that the decree was passed upon the basis of that note before any partition had taken place in the family. I agree with the learned Additional District Judge that, as both decrees were passed against the father at the time that the family was joint, no subsequent partition could affect the creditor's rights whatever they might be against the joint family property. His rights would be against the joint family property, as it was on the dates on which the decrees were passed in his favour and could not be affected by subsequent actions of the members of the family. But we have it that here there was no legal necessity and no antecedent debt. Nevertheless, the property in the hands of the sons is liable in execution of the decree upon the second promissory-note. This is clear from the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sripat Singh Dugar v. Prodyot Kumar Tagore (1). The words used by their Lordships which govern this particular matter are these :—

"The property in question was joint property governed by the Mitakshara Law. By that law a judgment against the father of the family cannot be executed against the whole of the Mitakshara property, if the debt in respect of which the judgment has been obtained was a debt incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. In every other event it is open to the execution creditor to sell the whole of the estate in satisfaction of the judgment obtained against the father alone." These words could not be clearer and they are absolutely comprehensive. There are no limitations, qualifications or reservations to the effect that the debt must be incurred by the father as representing the estate or purporting to be for the benefit of the estate or in some capacity other than his personal capacity. The words are : "In every other event it is open to the execution creditor to sell the whole of the estate in satisfaction of the judgment obtained against the father alone"—and there is nothing to qualify the words "the father alone". It has been argued by the learned Counsel for the appellants that, in view of a subsequent judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, it must be taken that the share of the sons in such circumstances can only be attached and brought to sale, if at that time their father is dead and they are made liable under the doctrine of pious duty. On the facts, here the debts were not incurre for illegal or immoral purposes, and the qualification which the learned Counsel would apply cannot, as I read the decision which I have quoted, be attached. It is true that in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council, less than three months after they had pronounced judgment in Sripat Singh Dugar v. Parodyat Kumar Tagore (1), laid down that, under the Mitakshara Law joint family property could not be the subject of gift, sale or mortgage by one co-parcener except with the consent, express or implied, of all the other co-parceners, and that the father in his capacity of manager and head had no power of sale or mortgage in absence of such consent or of family necessity or in payment of antecedent debts, and that the obligation of religion and piety which is placed upon sons and grandsons under the Mitakshara Law to discharge their progenitor's debts does not attach while the said progenitor is alive. It would have been most surprising if their Lordships of the Privy Council had in less than three months after they had passed the first decision arrived at a second decision which in effect overruled their former views. This is what the learned Counsel for the appellants is arguing for. Unless the second decision overruled the first decision, the words of the first decision which I have read hold good. But as I read them, the second decision not only does not overrule the first decision but in no way covers the same ground. The first decision is to the effect that, once a simple money-decree is passed against the father and manager of a joint Hindu family, that simple money-decree can be executed by the execution creditor against the whole of the estate, and will operate against the interests of the sons, unless the debt has been incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. The second decision lays down an absolutely different proposition that joint family property cannot be transferred by an act of volition on the part of the manager, except with the consent of other co-parceners or for legal necessity or in payment of antecedent debts, and that the doctrine of the pious duty of a Hindu son to satisfy his father's debts can have no operation to validate such a transfer, so long at any rate as the father is alive. But in order to apply the principle of the second decision there must be a transfer by the volition of the manager. In the previous case and in the case before me there was no transfer at all. There was a decree for debt against the manager. He had transferred nothing. I am concerned with the execution of a decree and not with a transfer of joint family property. I am unable to see that any difficulty arises. The two matters are complete and separate, one is in no way included in the other. There is no advantage, in view of the fact that the law is laid down plainly by their Lordships of the Privy Council, in proceeding to discuss decisions of Benches of High Courts upon the point. The Privy Council decision states the law. Therefore, I agree with the learned Additional District Judge that the property in the hands of the sons is liable in execution of the decree upon the second promissory-note.

The fourth point taken was that some of the property against which it is sought to execute the decrees are buildings belonging to agriculturists and occupied by them. The Court below has found that the buildings in question are not buildings belonging to argriculturists and occupied by them. This point has not been pressed in appeal.

The fifth point was also not pressed in appeal.

The sixth point argued, which is not in the grounds of appeal, was that the two reliefs for setting aside the order of the Execution Court and for a declaration that property could be attached in execution of the second decree could not be joined in the same suit. I was inclined to think that there might be some force in this objection, but in any circumstances as it is not in the grounds of appeal it could not prevail. However, I do not think that the appellant has in any way been prejudiced by omitting to place it in the grounds of appeal for, on consideration I am satisfied that the parties being the same, it was open to the plaintiff to join all three reliefs together.

It now remains to consider the question of Court-fees. There has been some slight mistake here. The suit should have been instituted on a Court-fee of Rs. 30. As the lower Court granted only two reliefs out of three, the fee in appeal should have been Rs. 20 and the cross-objections should have been on a stamp of Rs. 42-12-0. Only Rs. 10 were paid in respect of the cross-objections. The Court-fee in this Court on the appeal should have been Rs. 30. Now, there has been a deficiency in the First Court of Rs. 10 by the plaintiff; there has been a deficiency of Rs. 32-12-0 in the second Court by the plaintiff; and there has been a deficiency of Rs. 20 in this Court by the appellants. I dismiss this appeal with costs. The result is that the plaintiff can put his decree into execution, but before he can put his decree into execution he must make up a deficiency of Rs. 52-12-0. The decree will not issue from this office until he has made up this deficiency.

It is open to a tenant to surrender his holding which is amenable to the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, to his landlord for a pecuniary consideration, and such a transaction does not amount to a transfer in contravention of the provisions of section 46 of that Act. [p. 602, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Manbhum, dated the 14th April 1921, reversing a decision of the Munsif, Chaibasa, dated the 13th November 1920.

Mr. A. B. Mukherji, for the Appellants.
Mr. N. N. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a second appeal from a judgment of the District Judge of Manbhum, dated the 14th April 1921 by which he reversed a decision of the Munsif of Chaibasa, dated the 13th November of the preceding year. The point which is now brought up before me is a very simple one, and, so far as I can see, appears to be substantially covered by authority. The first three plaintiffs (who are the appellants) were three sons of one Jujhar Santhal and the fourth plaintiff was the son of another but deceased son of the same man. They, according to their plaint, had two cousins, one named Gopal and the other Singar Santhal. Some years ago there was a partition between them of their family property and the land in respect of which this litigation has been instituted fell within the portion which was allotted on the partition to these cousins of the plaintiffs. Now, it is alleged that both these cousins of the plaintiffs, (Gopal and Singar Santhal), have died without heirs, and the plaintiffs now claim that that being so, they are in some way or another entitled to inherit the property of their deceased relatives. They state in their plaint that the defendant, who, it should be mentioned, is the landlord of the property which the plaintiffs' deceased cousins used to hold as raiyats, had dispossessed or rather has unjustly cultivated the properties in dispute. The defendant, however, himself in his written statement points out that, as a matter of fact, there had been a surrender by the plaintiffs' cousins to him of their holding, which, it may be added, was a holding which is amenable to the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908. The plaintiffs in answer to this have endeavoured to point out that, as a matter of fact, there was no real surrender but that what had happened had been that their cousins had or purported to have given back their holding to the landlord (the defendant) on account of partially a very small amount of rent which was due to the defendant from them, but largely on account of money which had, so it was stated, been lent by the defendant to their cousins. Now, the Munsif came to the conclusion that the defendant, having admitted that the two cousins of the plaintiffs had surrendered the lands in suit in liquidation not only of arrears of rent but also of certain debts due to him which were alleged to have been covered by a handnote, could not defend the transaction in its main elements because it took place in contravention of the provisions of section 46 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. He says: "It has been admitted by the defendant in his deposition that Gopal and Singar surrendered the suit lands in liquidation of their debts alleged to have been covered by a handnote and for the decretal amount for arrears of rent. But the arrears of rent amounted to only Rs. 47 and odd annas and this amount was also subsequently deposited in Court by the plaintiffs. The evidence available goes to show that had this been the only debt, it would not have been necessary at all for the plaintiffs to relinquish the lands. It is obvious, therefore, that the relinquishment was tendered to the defendant not as pradhan but as money-lender and the entire transaction is a sale only covered by a camouflage of relinquishment. In accordance with the provisions of section 46 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act sale of a raiyati holding is strictly prohibited. The suit lands are admittedly raiyati lands of Gopal and Singar. Accordingly the istifanama must be regarded as invalid in law". He, therefore, decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiffs.

The learned District Judge, however, basing his view upon certain decisions which have been given both in this and in other Courts, comes to the conclusion that the view which the Munsif has taken is not in law justified. He says: "The defendant's case is that Gopal and Singar had mortgaged their holding to him as they had incurred debts to the defendant amounting to Rs. 510 to defray the expenses of the partition suit and that afterwards they relinquished the schedule (kha) to liquidate this debt as well as a decree for arrears of rent obtained by the defendant. The Munsif held that this so-called relinquishment was really sale and was, therefore, void according to section 46 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. The lower Court holds this view as the consideration for the surrender was liquidation of the handnote as well as the arrears of rent. But section 46 does not apply to the present case which was a surrender in favour of the landlord, vide Trilochan Panda v. Dinabandhu Panda (1), Abdul Majid v. Hari Charan Halder (2). Section 46 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act puts no bar on surrender to the landlord. The transaction was not a sale in my opinion. The lower Court in drawing a distinction which does not exist in the law between surrender to the pradhan qua pradhan and qua money-lender. The plaintiffs cannot, therefore, succeed on this point, so the suit must fail."

This is not the first occasion within the last few weeks that this point has, in a somewhat slightly different form, been brought to my attention. In a previous case, in which I held that in my view I must follow the decisions to which the District Judge has referred and that in another case, Jairam v. Gopikisan (3). I have already expressed the opinion that it is possible that this may conceivably result in some form of evasion being effected against the intention of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. The decisions, however, seem to be clear that it is open to a tenant to give back his holding to or to let his landlord take his holding (i. e., surrender it) for a pecuniary consideration. In the case of Trilochan Panda v. Dinabandhu Panda (1) decided in this Court, Mullick and Atkinson, JJ., state that a surrender is not a transfer within the meaning of section 46 of the Central Provinces Tenancies Act, 1898. In that Act the language of the section is very much the same as that utilized in the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. In the case of Abdul Majid v. Hari Charan Halder (2) Walmsley and Huda, JJ., held that a surrender, though for consideration, by a tenant is operative and that the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act do not require any registered instrument to evidence the surrender. The most important case, however, (and which is more important than these others) is that of Jalram v. Gopiklsan (3). It was there held that a surrender of an occupancy holding for a consideration is not a transfer in contravention of the provisions of section 46 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908.

I think that, in view of these findings, it would be extremely difficult for me to contemplate coming to any other view than that which has been held by those learned Judges. Indeed, in the case which I had to decide the other day, Nagru Kumhar v. Chhugu Nath Mandal [Second Appeal No. 1030 of 1921], the position went in my opinion somewhat further than that which obtains in this case; for in that case in which a similar decision was arrived at by the lower Appellate Court to that which has been arrived at in this case, the facts were that a third party had paid a consideration to a tenant as a result of which the tenant had agreed with the landlord to surrender his holding whilst the landlord had agreed to re-settle the property with the person who had given the consideration to the outgoing tenant. It was, however, very difficult to see how this circuitous arrangement could in law be regarded as definitely illegal.

In my opinion, therefore, this appeal must be dismissed with costs and the judgment of the District Judge upheld.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 765 OF 1921.

MALONY CLUB, through CHIRANJI LAL—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Registration—Lease for thirty years determinable at will of lessor—Registration, whether necessary—Right of lessee.

A lease of land purported to be for thirty years and reserved a yearly rent, and stated that the lessee would vacate the land in case he failed to pay the rent reserved or whenever the lessor required him to do so. The question was whether the lease was admissible in evidence without being registered:

Held, that the lease was not for a term exceeding one year, nor had the lessee the right to remain in possession for thirty years, as the lessor could on the day succeeding the grant o the lease have required the lessee to vacate, and that, consequently, the lease did not require registration to render it admissible in evidence against the lessee.

Second appeal against a decree of the Sub-Judge, Aligarh, dated the 10th March 1921,

Mr. Saila Nath Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for ejectment and recovery of Rs. 6-12 arrears of rent. The defence taken was that the defendant took a lease of the land from the Municipal Board on the 24th November 1898, and had built a pucca house on the land leased worth about Rs. 2,000 and had been in possession for 22 years. It was further contended that the notice given was one not in accordance with law. The facts of the case are briefly as follows: The land originally belonged to Government. It was handed over to the Municipal Board later on and the Municipal Board leased the disputed land to the defendant. The Board then transferred the ownership to the plaintiff, the Malony Club, and the defendant was informed of this fact and continued paying rent to the Club. The so-called lease was for a period of thirty years at Rs. 4-8 a year, determinable on the failure of the defendant to pay rent or to give it up to the Municipality when required to do so. The plaintiff came into Court on the allegation that the tenancy was a monthly tenancy ending with the end of a month of the English calendar; that the defendant was a bad paymaster, and the plaintiff Club had given him a notice terminating with the end of a month of the tenancy and the plaintiff wanted to dispossess him. The defendant pleaded in reply that the term of his lease had not expired and he had built a house worth Rs. 2,000 and was not liable to ejectment.

The First Court came to the conclusion that the so-called lease did not require registration and was admissible in evidence and that, in any event, it amounted to a license coupled with a grant and was as such irrevocable. It dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff went up in appeal and the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the document was an agreement, pure and simple, and was as such admissible in evidence. He further came to the conclusion that rent had not been paid and under the terms of the lease the defendant was liable to ejectment. He allowed the appeal, set aside the decree of the First Court, and decreed the plaintiff's claim with costs. The defendant comes here in second appeal. Various points have been urged before me at great length, namely, that the document did not require registration and that if it was inadmissible for want of registration it amounted to a license coupled with a grant. The decision of this case has given me anxious consideration. In my opinion, however, it is not necessary to discuss those points at length for the purpose of this appeal. On the very words of the agreement, dated the 24th of November 18 8, the suit was bound to succeed. This document which purposts to be one for thirty years and reserves an yearly rent of Rs. 4 8 says that the defendant will vacate the land in case he fails to pay the rent reserved or whenever the Board, the lessor, requires him to do so. It is clear from this condition that the lease could not be said to be for a term exceeding one year as the Board could on the very day succeeding the grant of the lease ask him to vacate the land. The lease, therefore, did not require registration. Having regard to the express terms of the lease the defendant had no right to remain in possession for thirty years. It may be a hard case for the defendant but he is himself to blame by acting on such a lease and erecting a costly building on the land. He was liable to ejectment at the will of the Municipal Board and the plaintiff, its successor, has the same right. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

ORDER—This is an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against an order passed by one of us sitting as a Single Judge, under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and section 107 of the Government of India Act. That order confirmed the order of the lower Court and dismissed the civil revision petition filed in this Court. The present petitioner who was the petitioner in the revision petition has applied to us to grant him leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

A preliminary objection is taken to this application on the ground that section 111, Civil Procedure Code, bars any such application. Section 111 says, notwithstanding anything contained in section 109, no appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council, among other things, (a) from the decree or order of one Judge of a High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861. This is manifestly an application for an appeal from such an order. It is difficult to see how the petitioner can escape the obstacle placed in his way by this section. His learned Vakil says, however, that under section 39 of the Letters Patent a right of appeal is given in all cases of final orders or decrees of this High Court to the Privy Council and since the amendment of the Letters Patent whereby the right of appeal to two Judges from the judgment of a Single Judge sitting in Revision has been taken away, this order which was passed in such proceedings has become final and, therefore, he contends that he is entitled to ask for leave. Section 44 of the Letters Patent expressly provides that any provision in the Letters Patent can be altered or controlled by the legislation of the Governor-General in Legislative Council: and such an Act is the Civil Procedure Code and when there is express provision in that Code, we must hold that that provision must be given effect to even if it is possible to bring the case under the general wording of section 39 of the Letters Patent. In these circumstances, we have no other alternative but to dismiss the application with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 96, applicability of—Thekadar, status of—Suit by thekadar under section, whether maintainable.

The provisions of section 96 of the Agra Tenancy Act are meant to apply only to a non-occupancy tenant of an agricultural holding, and not to a thekadar who is not such a tenant. A suit, therefore, by a thekadar under that section is not maintainable. [p. 606, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 18th March 1921.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellant.
Messrs. K. N. Katju and Kumuda Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a point which, so far as I know, is a novel one. The suit was brought in the Court of the Assistant Collector of Benares under section 96 of the Agra Tenancy Act. It was alleged in the plaint that the plaintiff had been a thekadar of Mouza Udaychandpur under H. H. the Maharaja of Benares; that his theka was about to expire and negotiations were entered into between him and State officials for the purchase of a permanent lease of this mauza. It was agreed on behalf of the Maharaja that a permanent lease should be granted and certain sums of money were paid into the Treasury by the plaintiff in accordance with the contract. There is some dispute apparently as to the nature of this payment which is described as amanat, or deposit. It is then alleged that the village was sold to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and that the plaintiff had previously given notice to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 of the contract entered into between the Maharaja and himself for the permanent lease. It was mentioned in the plaint that the plaintiff had applied to the Local Government for sanction to bring a suit against the Maharaja for specific performance of the contract, and, on this application being refused, the present suit was filed under section 96 of the Agra Tenancy Act. Among other pleas taken in defence, it was urged (1) that no contract had been completed between the parties, and (2) that in any case the suit as brought was not maintainable.

The Court of first instance upheld both these pleas and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed and the learned District Judge of Benares has disposed of the matter in a short judgment. It held that section 96 did not apply to the facts of this case. The plaintiff is not in possession without a lease. He had been in possession under his theka and when the theka came to an end he was ejected and never retained possession with the consent of the zemindar after the expiry of his theka. He, therefore, dismissed the appeal on this short point.

In second appeal before me it is urged (1) that this view of section 96 is erroneous, and (2) that in any case, under the provisions of section 197 (1), as all the materials were on the record, the lower Appellate Court ought to have decided the matters in issue between the parties as if the suit had been properly brought in a Civil Court. On the first point it seems to me that the Court below is right not only on the ground that it has taken but also because I think that, although the thekedar is a non-occupancy tenant within the meaning of the general definition in section 19, that nevertheless section 96 can apply only to a non-occupancy tenant of an agricultural holding, which a thekadar is not. Reading the whole section and looking at the form of the lease in the Third Schedule, it seems to me to be clear that the section is meant to apply only to a non-occupancy tenant of an agricultural holding but even if it does apply to a thekadar, I think for the reason given by the learned District Judge it is not applicable in this case. The section runs:—

"A non-occupancy tenant is entitled to receive a written lease from his landholder, and a landholder upon delivering or tendering to a non-occupancy tenant a lease consistent with the provisions of this Act, is entitled to receive from him a counterpart thereof."

I think the two parts of this section must be read together so as to get at the real meaning, and that the one is the converse of the other. A landlord is not entitled to get a counterpart from his tenant until he delivers or tenders a lease. Similarly, it seems to me that the firs part of the section applies to a person who is in possession of the land as a tenant but who has not obtained a lease in writing. Such a person under the section may require the landlord to give him a written lease.

On the second point I do not think section 197 can be read so as to give the Civil Court jurisdiction in a case of this kind. The obvious remedy for the plaintiff was to bring a suit for specific performance in the Civil Court. Such a suit could not be brought against the Maharaja under the circumstances of this case as the Local Government had refused sanction. Whether it could have been brought against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 without joining the Maharaja is another matter which I do not think need be considered. The Maharaja was joined as a party to this suit and it seems to me it was only because the plaintiff found that he could not bring his suit in the Civil Court that he tried to obtain the remedy which he could have got from a Civil Court by bringing the suit in this form in the Revenue Court. As the suit brought by him was not maintainable it seems to me there was nothing left for the learned District Judge to do but to dismiss the suit. I can scarcely imagine that it could be held that if a suit for sale on a mortgage, let us say, was brought in a Revenue Court that if the matter went up in appeal, the District Judge would be bound to go into the merits of the case just as if the suit had been properly brought in the only Court which had jurisdiction to try it, viz., the Civil Court.

In my opinion the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), Ss. 96, 97—Contract—Municipal Board, acceptance by, of contract as valid—Third party, whether can question validity—Second appeal—New point raised for first time.

Where a Municipal Board accepts the validity of a contract, made otherwise than as provided in section 96 of the U. P. Municiplaties Act, and its liability thereunder, it is not open to a third party to challenge the validity of the contract. [p. 608, col. 1.]

A point not raised in the Trial Court and which requires a finding on a question of fact cannot be entertained if raised for the first time in second appeal. [p. 608, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Saharanpur, dated 9th February 1921.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. M. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit for restoration of the yard of an enclosure to its original state and for recovery of a certain amount as damages for the occupation of certain rooms in that compound by the Municipal Board. Te plaintiff also prays from an injunction restraining the Municipal Board form realising a certain amount alleged by them to have been spent in paving the yard with bricks to make it sanitary. It appears that the plaintiff has a compound in the City of Saharanpur in which there are 21 shops. In April 1917, a notice was give to the plaintiff by the Municipal Board to pave the yard of the compound in such a way that the water therefrom be properly drained and this was to be done by paving the yard with bricks or kankar or stone ballast. Later on, he was served with another notice directing him to pave the yard as aforementioned or in the alternative to raise its level by putting on earth so that the water might be easily drained away and the place might not become muddy by the coming in and going out of the carts which come to that compound. The plaintiff made some attempt by placing earth towards making the yard sanitary. This was not approved by the Municipal Board who prosecuted him criminally. The plaintiff after that once more tried to make the yard better but this, too, did not find favour with the Municipality. The Municipality therupon gave him the last notice which was served on him on the 30th of May 1917, telling him further that if he did not comply with the order within three months, action would be taken under section 307 of the Municipalities Act. All these notices purported to be under section 271 of the Municipalities Act. The plaintiff made no further attempt to comply with this notice and, at last, in April 1918, that is, about a year afterwards, the Municipal Board had the yard made pacca with bricks on edge and sent the bill amounting to about Rs. 315 to the plaintiff for payment to defendant No. 2, the contractor who had done the work. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit.. The Municipal Board contended in defence that they were justified in the action which they took and that their contractor, the defendant No. 2, was entitled to the money. The first Court decreed the claim for recovery of Rs. 250, as damages and dismissed the rest of the suit. On appeal the learned Judge has come to the conclusion that the action of the Municipal Board was perfectly legal and within its powers and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the decree which he got. He has found that the plaintiff did not comply with the notice sent to him and that the materials of the Municipal Board were kept in the two rooms with his consent, and that he was not entitled to the rent of those rooms. The plaintiff comes here in second appeal. The first argument advanced on his behalf is that the contract between the Municipal Board and the contractor, defendant No. 2, was not binding on him because it was neither in writing nor was it sanctioned by any resolution of the Municipal Board and reliance was placed on sections 96 and 97 of the Municipalities Act. It is not easy to understand this contention. Under section 97 of the Act any contract made in any way other than that prescribed by section 96 of the Municipalities Act would not be binding on the Municipal Board, but if the Municipal Board accepts liability under that contract I do not see how a third party can come in and say that the contract is illegal. In my opinion the Municipal Board having accepted the validity of the contract the plaintiff cannot challenge its validity. There is no force in this contention and I repel it. The next contention raised on behalf of the plaintiff is that he had done what the Municipal Board had asked him to do and the Municipal Board was not justified in having the pavement made as it did. This argument must fail on the finding of the First Court which has been accepted by the lower Appellate Court and is to the following effect: "The plaintiff did not put earth or brick kiln earth, etc., in the sahan as directed by the notice served on him by the defendant No. 1 (i.e. the Municipal Board)." This ground of appeal also fails. Another plea which was taken before the lower Appellate Court and which has been pressed before me is that the notice sent by the Municipal Board was not valid inasmuch as it was not signed by the Chairman. There are no materials on the record to show whether the Secretary who signed the notice was authorised by any resolution or otherwise of the Municipal Board to sign such notices. The point was not taken in the First Court and as it requires a finding on a question of fact, I refuse to entertain it. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 26, Expl. — Easement — Period of user necessary to establish easement— Interruption—Denial of right—Cause of action.

A mere denial of right affords a cause of action, and any person whose property is threatened with a servitude may bring a suit for a declaration that an easement is enjoyed on sufference and not as of right. The effect of the Explanation to section 26 of the Limitation Act is to confer an indefeasible right of easement on any person after an enjoyment of anything over nineteen years, provided he waits less than one year before challenging an interruption and the beginning of his enjoyment arose twenty years before suit. But the Explanation does not come into operation where, at the time of the suit, there had been no interruption. [p. 609, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 11th January 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 5th July 1921.

Mr. K. J. Rustomji, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. N. Rozdon, for Mr. Nur-ud-Din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff and defendant are the owners of a party-wall; defendant on 5th October 1899 obtained sanction to build his house and in the upper storey let into the wall the windows which are the subject of this litigation, but there is no evidence when the windows were actually made.

The plaintiff in his turn wished to build on the party-wall and to close the said windows and was met with opposition from defendant whereupon he instituted this suit for an injunction to restrain defendant from opposition.

The Courts below have decreed for plaintiff, holding that defendant had enjoyed the easement for less than 20 years on 1st August 1919 the date of institution.

This appeal was admitted on the plea that defendant had no cause of action, inasmuch as his building was not actually obstructed but there are other grounds to the effect that an enjoyment of a little over 19 years is sufficient to establish the right of easement.

The finding of both Courts is that the plaintiff wished to build against the windows and defendant objected; in my opinion this gave plaintiff a right of action for his liberty of dealing with his own property was threatened.

A mere denial of right affords a cause of action and I see no reason to doubt that any person whose property is threatened with a servitude, may bring a suit for a declaration that an easement is enjoyed on sufferance and not as of right. In other words, as soon as my neighbour by opening windows, etc., in the common wall affects my property, I am at liberty to sue for a declaration that his enjoyment shall not be deemed an easement as of right but on sufferance. It is true that the effect of the Explanation to section 26 of the Limitation Act is to confer an indefeasible right of easement on any person after an enjoyment of anything over nineteen years, provided he waits less than one year before challenging an interruption and the beginning of his enjoyment arose twenty years before suit, but in this case the Explanation does not come into operation, for at the time of this suit there had been no interruption.

At that date, the easement had not been enjoyed for twenty years, and as the date of the construction of the windows is not ascertained, it cannot be said that it had been enjoyed for even ninteen years.

But on the assumption that it had been in existence for ninteen years, the defendant even had he been the plaintiff would not have succeeded for he would still have had to prove a twenty years user under the first and cardinal clause of section 26.

The Explanation does produce anomalous results, but we must apply the law as we find it.

I hold that plaintiff had a cause of action and that the defendant has not established the easement contended for.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 28, applicability of—Hundi signed by Munim of firm—Munim, whether personally liable.

Section 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act has no application where a hundi is signed by a person in his capacity as the Munim of a firm, so as to make him personally liable.

Second appeal from the decree of the Second Sub-Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 1st April 1921.

Mr. Kamuda Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. M. Sulaiman, K. N. Katju and M. A. Aziz, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for recovery of money alleged to be due upon a hundi, dated the 26th of December 1917, executed in their favour on behalf of the firm of Ajudhya Prasad-Sheikh Kallu. The hundi was signed by the first defendant Sohan Lal and by the second defendant Husain Bakhsh. The plaintiffs alleged that Husain Bakhsh had paid Rs. 800 out of Rs. 1,600, the amount of the hundi. They accordingly claimed the balance of Rs. 800, and interest against both the defendants. Sohan Lal's contention was that he was not a partner in the firm of Ajudhya Prasad-Sheikh Kallu and that he had signed the hundi in his capacity as munim of that firm and that consequently he was not personally liable for the amount of the hundi.

The Court of first instance overruled this objection and made a decree against Sohan Lal. Sohan Lal appealed to the lower Appellate Court and that Court, for reasons stated in its judgment, came to the conclusion that Sohan Lal was not a partner in the firm of Ajudhya Prasad-Sheikh Kallu and that he was only a servant of the firm and was receiving a salary from it. This is a finding of fact with which we cannot interfere in this second appeal. It may be a right finding or a wrong finding, but the fact remains that the lower Appellate Court found that Sohan Lal was only munim of the firm. That Court accordingly dismissed the suit against Sohan Lal and allowed his appeal. The plaintiffs have preferred this appeal and the first contention on their behalf is that as Sohan Lal had signed the hundi a decree ought to have been made against him. Section 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act has been relied on. We think that, in view of the finding of the lower Appellate Court, namely, that Sohan Lal signed the hundi as munim and that money was lent not to him in his personal capacity but to the firm, that is, the persons who owned the firm, section 28 can have no application to a case of this kind. Sohan Lal has, therefore, upon the finding of the lower Appellate Court, been rightly exempted from the claim. It is next urged that the Court ought to have made a decree against Husain Bakhsh and reference is made to O. XLI, r. 33 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is true that had Husain Bakhsh been a party to the appeal in the Court below, the Court might have made a decree in the plaintiffs' favour against Husain Bakhsh in pursuance of the provisions of rule 33, but, unfortunately for the plaintiffs, Husain Bakhsh was not made a party to the appeal. The Court did not exercise its powers under r. 20 of O. XLI and add him as a party, nor did the plaintiffs move the Court to make Husain Bakhsh a party. As Husain Bakhsh was not a party to the appeal in the Court below no decree could be made against him under O. XLI r. 33. Therefore, the plaintiffs have now lost all their remedy in the present suit as against both the defendants, and this appeal must fail. We dismiss it with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 10th March 1922, confirming that of the Senior Sub-Judge, Jhelum, dated the 17th March 1921.

Lala Mool Chand, R., S., and Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Appellant.

Malik Barkat Ali, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. One Nizam

Din Lohar, sold 1 kanal 18 marlas of land to defendants Nos. 2 to 4 for Rs. 1,368. This piece of land is situated in the Machine Mohalla which is said to be a suburb of the Jhelum City. This Mohalla is carved out of a village called Pira Ghaib. Lala Diwan Chand instituted this suit for pre-emption on the ground that he was a proprietor in the village Pira Ghaib and thus had a right of pre-emption. The vendees resisted the suit on the ground that the land was neither agricultural, nor was it village immoveable property, for, although at one time it formed part of the village it has ceased to be so by reason of its being attached to the Jhelum City as a suburb. The vendees further pleaded that the Machine Mohalla having been only recently attached to the Jhelum City, the custom of pre-emption, if any, prevailing in the City proper cannot effect the lands situated in that Mohalla.

Both the Courts below have found that the land is neither village immoveable property, nor is it effected by the custom of pre-emption prevailing in the Jhelum City.

The plaintiff has preferred this second appeal and it has been contended on his behalf that, inasmuch as the land is found to be within the limits of Pira Ghaib, it must still be considered to be a part of that village and as such subject to the right of pre-emption under section 15 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, I of 1913. It is contended on behalf of the respondents that it has been found as a fact that the land covered by the Machine Mohalla has ceased to be a part of village Pira Ghaib and has become a suburb of the Jhelum City and that, therefore, it is not open to the appellant to challenge that finding in second appeal. On the other hand, it has been urged on behalf of the appellant that the question whether a certain land is village immoveable property is a question of law and that it is open to the appellant to challenge the finding of the lower Appellate Court on this point. It was held in the case of Mahmud v. Jumma (1), that the question whether a certain place is a town for the purposes of the Punjab Pre-emption Act is a question of fact and cannot be raised in second appeal. It cannot be denied that, whenever such a question arises it is to be decided upon the evidence and the particular circumstances of each case. It is, therefore, difficult to hold that it is a question of law. I must, therefore, hold that the finding of the lower Appellate Court on this point is conclusive. In the case of Kishan Dial v. Ali Bakhsh (2) it was held that a village may be absorbed in a town. On the question whether the custom of pre-emption prevailing in the Jhelum City should apply to the Machine Mohalla, also it is contended, that, according to the authorities, it is not necessary that a custom prevailing in the town should apply to the outgrown Mohallas or suburbs. Reliance is placed upon the following cases:—

Umar Bakhsh v. Abdul Karim (3), Karam Ilahi v. Babua Mal (4) and Abdulla v. Punnu Ram (5).

This contention is fully borne out by the above authorities.

On behalf of the appellant reliance is placed upon a judgment of Mr. Shafi, Munsif, (Exhibit P. 6) in proof of the alleged custom. An examination of that judgment shows that the land in dispute in that case was held to be agricultural land. Reliance is also placed upon a judgment of Mr. Prabh Dayal, (Exhibit P. 3) which related to a Mohalla of the Jhelum City. That Mohalla was held to be a part of the old town of Jhelum and was as such governed by the custom of pre-emption. These judgments, therefore, can hardly be of any use for the decision of the question of custom in this case. Having regard to the findings recorded by the two Courts below, it is not necessary to discuss the various rulings cited on behalf of the appellant in support of his contention, for each case must be decided upon its particular facts. In this case the facts found are opposed to the contention of the appellant.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal —Point not raised in Trial Court, effect of.

When a point is not taken in the lower Court, that operates as a conclusive bar to an appeal to the High Court. As soon as it is established that the point ought to have been taken in the Trial Court the appeal should be dismissed.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Stuart, dated 5th December 1922, reported as 71 Ind. Cas. 296.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmed, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—A Muhammadan lady, by name Khudija-al-kubra, died on the 29th of November 1900, in child birth. The dower-debt owing by her husband was said to be Rs. 5,000 and a female member of the family who was present stated that the lady had an apprehension of death. There was apparently some difficulty in reference to the delivery of the child which was then in her womb, and she, it is said, having the fear of death on her, did renounce her dower in favour of her husband after having asked him to forgive her faults and expressing manifestly the opinion that she was about to die. She in fact died shortly after. In 1919, after a lapse of thirteen years, the plaintiffs who were minors in 1906 brought this suit for the recovery of their share of the dower in accordance with their degree of relationship. The defendants pleaded that Musammat Khudija-al-kubra gifted her dower-debt before her death according to the practice of the brotherhood. No particulars were asked as to when, where and under what circumstances such renouncement was made and the matter got into the Court of the Subordinate Judge. There he framed an issue as to the amount of the dower-debt of the lady and whether she had remitted her dower-debt at the time of her death. It was, therefore, known to everybody then, when that issue was framed, that it was done very shortly before her death. Then was the time when the plaintiffs should have taken the point that, even conceding this to have happened, the lady was suffering from marz-ul-maut. The Subordinate Judge did not believe in the renouncement of the dower as a fact and he decided in favour of the plaintiffs. The matter then went up to the District Judge where, it may be said, the marz-ul-maut point need never have been brought to the attention of the lower Court as a matter of argument, because he decided that such renouncement had not been made. Nevertheless, it was absolutely necessary that the plaintiffs should have debated this matter in the Court of first instance as a conclusive answer in law to the alleged renouncement. Nothing was said about it in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. The matter came up before the lower Appellate Court which set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge on the ground that it was unable to understand why the Court should have rejected the testimony of the lady who was present at the time when the renouncement was said to have taken place. There would have been the time for this question of marz-ul-maut to have been referred to in the lower Appellate Court as an answer to that opinion of the Judge. That is to say, if the marz-ul-maut issue had been on the record, Counsel for the plaintiffs could have said that, even if the learned Judge accepted the evidence of the solitary witness who was present, nevertheless that evidence in law did not help the defence. When the matter came up here, Mr. Justice Stuart allowed there to be a discussion on this matter. We think it ought to be understood that when a point is not taken in the lower Court that is conclusive bar to an appeal in this Court. As soon as it is established that the point ought to have been taken in the Court of first instance the appeal should be dismissed. We dismiss the appeal.

MUKAMBIKA SHETTITHI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS NOS. 7 AND 8—APPELLANTS

SHIDDAYA SHETTI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 TO 6—RESPONDENTS.

Practice—Suit for possession based on ownership—Title by adverse possession found by First Court—No plea of prejudice on appeal—Appeal, second—Adverse possession, plea of, not definitely set up in the plaint, whether can be urged.

Where in a suit for possession the plaintiff based his title inter alia on ownership and the Court of first instance found plaintiff and his predecessor had been in possession of the suit property for over the statutory period and decreed the suit and on appeal no plea was raised by the defendants-appellants that he was prejudiced or taken by surprise by the plaintiff's title by prescription being considered by the First Court, the defendant in second appeal is not entitled to contend that plaintiff's title by adverse possession was not definitely pleaded in the plaint.

Sundari Dassee v. Mudhoo Chunder Sircar, 14 C. 592; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 392, followed.

Somasundarum Chetty v. Vadivelu Pillai, 31 M. 531; 4 M. L. T. 344, Shiro Kumari Debi v. Govind Shaw Tanti, 2 C. 418; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 556, distinguished.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Kanara, in A. S. No. 129 of 1920, (in A. A. No. 194 of 1920, on the file of the District Court), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Kundapur, in O. S. No. 240 of 1919.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellants.—The lower Court was wrong in giving a decree to the plaintiff on title based on adverse possession. Such a title was not set up in the plaint nor was there any issue on it. The Court was wrong in granting a decree on title neither stated in the plaint nor raised in the issues. Somasundarum Chetty v. Vadivelu Pillai (1).

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, for the Respondents.—Firstly, this is not a declaratory suit and there is a well-recognised distinction between a declaratory suit and one for possession. In the case of the former, where the granting of any relief is discretionary, if the specific title set up is not found, no decree can be given, but in the case of a suit in ejectment, relief may be given on any title found on the evidence, the only matter for consideration is whether the other side is not prejudiced. Here the title by adverse possession was found by the Trial Court and no objection was taken in appeal. The point cannot be raised now. See Sundari Dassee v. Mudhoo Chunder Sircar (2).

The decision in Somasundarum Chetty v. Vadivelu Pillai (1) refers to and distinguishes the cases in Shiro Kumari Debi v. Govind Shaw Tanti (1) and Sundari Dassee v. Mudhoo Chunder Sircar (2).

Secondly, the present case is not a case strictly of adverse possession. Plaintiff claims title by assignment, but the assignor himself on the date of conveyance had completed his title by prescription and full title, therefore, passed under the assignment. The plaintiff was owner at the date of the conveyance. The decree of the lower Court is correct.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal it is contended that the question of adverse possession has not been properly pleaded or considered. The plaintiff at first based his title on purchase of mull right which is said to refer to a Judicial Decision in 1897 whereby the suit property was declared to belong to the ancestors of defendants Nos. 7 and 8. Defendants Nos. 7 and 8 were not original parties but subsequently added as parties to the present suit and the plaint was accordingly amended and plaintiff based his right on ownership also. It is urged for defendants Nos. 7 and 8 that this only arose in 1916 when the artha-mulgeni interest was assigned to plaintiffs by certain members of the Kanabettu Manjeyas family who had held the land since 1887 at least. It is said that this title by adverse possession to the ancestors of defendants Nos. 7 and 8 ought to have been distinctly pleaded and that defendants Nos. 7 and 8 have been prejudiced by this omission. It is to be remarked that by 1919, the date of the present suit, the plaint-

if had acquired title by the assignment of 1916, and that long before this the prescriptive title of the Kanabettu family had accrued. The Munsif went very carefully into the facts and came to the conclusion that plaintiff and his predecessors had been in possession of the suit property through their chalgeni tenant (the first defendant) for over the statutory period and that defendants Nos. 7 and 8 were never in possession. On appeal these defendants did not plead that they had been prejudiced or taken by surprise, or that plaintiff's title by prescription ought not to have been considered by the District Munsif. The lower Appellate Court gave judgment to the same effect as the District Munsif. There is no evidence that any objection was taken at the trial as to the consideration of these facts. We think the plaint sufficiently raises the question of plaintiff's title and that the lower Courts were justified in considering the steps by which plaintiff's title had been completed. The plaintiff was entitled to rely on his assignment of 1916 as to the ownership in that title. Mr. Sitarama Rao relies on the case of Somasundarum Chetty v. Vadivelu Pillai (1) for authority that a declaratory decree cannot be passed on a title neither stated in the plaint nor raised by the issues and a plaintiff who simply alleges title cannot succeed on the basis of title by adverse possession. This case follows Shiro Kumari Debi v. Govind Shaw Tanti (3) which was distinguished in Sundari Dassee v. Mudhoo Chunder Sircar (2) which was a case (as here) for possession upon proof that plaintiff was entitled to the land. The present case is closely analogous to the later Calcutta decision. Somasundarum Chetty v. Vadivelu Pillai (1) has no application. We dismiss this second appeal.

Where during the lifetime of a widow a stranger is in possession of her estate such possession does not become adverse against her reversioners until after her death. [p. 615, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Budaun, dated 12th August 1921.

Mr. S. H. Haider, for the Appellant.
Mr. Iqbal Ahmed, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In my opinion the decision of the lower Appellate Court in this case is correct.

The property in question belonged to one Kuber Singh who died and was succeeded by his widow, Musammat Anandi.

It appears that after Kuber's death the appellant here, Jagannath Singh, took possession of the property. A suit was brought by Musammat Anandi for the ejectment of Jagannath Singh and in that case a compromise was arrived at between the parties. It was declared that Jagannath Singh had given possession to Musammat Anandi and that she was to pay Jagannath Singh in instalments a sum of Rs. 50 which Jagannath had paid on account of her husband's debts. In the terms of this compromise the suit of Musammat Anandi was dismissed.

It is said that this compromise never took effect and that Jagannath has remained in possession all along.

The present suit has been brought by the transferees of the daughter's son of Kuber Singh. They claimed to be entitled to the possession of this property and asserted that Musammat Anandi having died twelve years before the suit their suit was still within time.

In the Courts below Jagannath Singh resisted the claim on a plea of adverse possession. Both the Courts below have decided that plea against him and there can be no question that this decision is correct. Adverse possession could not run against the present plaintiffs until after the death of the widow.

It is argued here, however, that, on the principle which was laid down by their Lordships in the case of Katama Natchier v. Rajah of Shivagunga (1), the plaintiffs' suit is incompetent for they are barred by the terms of a decree which was fairly obtained against Musammat Anandi who, it is said, was representing the estate.

Assuming, if it can be assumed, that in the suit which Musammat Anandi brought she was really representing the estate of her deceased husband and was not really suing on her own behalf to enforce the right she had as a widow to possession, it is for the defendant to show, if he appeals to the doctrine which is laid down in the Shivagunga case (1) referred to above, that he is in possession under and by force of a decree which is binding against the widow. Obviously, this cannot be done because the position of the defendant really is that he has been in possession of this property not under the decree but in spite of decree; and so we come back again to the old plea of adverse possession which cannot avail the defendant-appellant in the present case. The decision of the Court below must be affirmed. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XLI, r. 6 (2)—Stay of execution—Appeal, whether lies—Application to stay sale—Court, duty of.

The expression "an order relating to the execution of a decree" in section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code is comprehensive enough to include an order relating to the stay of execution, and such an order is, therefore, appealable.

Srinivas Prosad Singh v. Kesho Prosad Singh, 12 Ind. Cas. 745; 14 C. L. J. 489, relied on.

When an application is made under r. 6 (2) of O. XLI of the Civil Procedure Code, it is obligatory on the Court to stay the sale on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as it thinks fit.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Ambala, dated the 13th June 1922.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of a Subordinate Judge refusing to stay a sale of immoveable property in execution of decree, during the pendency of an appeal in this Court, under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 6 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Manohar Lal on behalf of the respondent raises a preliminary objection that no appeal lies. To this Mr. Jagan Nath replies that the order is really one relating to the execution of the decree and comes within the purview of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and is, therefore, appealable. He cites Srinivas Prosad Singh v. Kesho Prosad Singh (1), wherein it was held that the expression "an order relating to execution of a decree" under section 47 is comprehensive enough to include an order relating to the stay of execution thereof. Mr. Manohar Lal has nothing to say against this view and I fully agree with appellant's Counsel and hold that an appeal does lie.

Now, O. XLI, r. 6 (2) says that, where an order has been made for the sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree, and an appeal is pending from such decree, the sale shall, on the application of the judgment-debtor to the Court which made the order, be stayed on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as the Court thinks fit until the appeal is disposed of. The lower Court summarily rejected the application of the judgment-debtor for stay of sale and this was clearly erroneous. It was obligatory on the Court to stay the sale on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as it thought fit.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the lower Court, direct it to make an order staying the sale on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as it thinks fit. Mr. Monahar Lal has referred to the case reported as Ram Nath Singh v. Kamleshwar Prasad Singh (2), and has urged that the Court should demand very ample security in a case of this sort. It will be for the lower Court to decide what security is sufficient. I make no order as to costs in this Court.

Grove land—Tenant, rights of.

While grove land has the characteristics of a grove the tenant thereof can do what he wishes upon it, and there is no objection to his constructing houses for agricultural purposes, or for any other purposes upon it; he may even construct a residential house upon it. Where, however, the land loses its characteristics of a grove, the case may be altered. [p. 617, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Sub-Judge, Moradabad, dated the 9th February 1921.

Mr. Mohan Lal Sandal, for the Appellant.
Mr. Durga Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of one of the many cases of small valuation in which zemindars endeavour to exercise pressure upon their tenants by distorting the facts. The facts are these.—In the village of Govindpur in the Moradabad District was grove No. 183 in area either 2 bighas and 19 biswas or 2 bighas and 9 biswas. In one set of proceedings the first area is given and in another set of proceedings the second area is given, but there can be no doubt as to the identity of the grove. It is No. 183. This grove was originally granted to a man called Chhidda. He died some years ago. It was recorded as rent-free muafi. On Chhidda's death Sirajuddin and his other sons who are occupancy tenants in the village succeeded to the grove. They are still in possession. In 1913 Ahmad Husain, the present plaintiff-appellant, instituted proceedings in the Revenue Court against the sons of Chhidda for resumption of this grove which he describes as a rent-free grant. The Assistant Collector decided, on the 17th February 1914, that the grant was a rent-free grant but that it was not resumable. He noted in his judgment that at that time there were cow-shed and other buildings for agricultural purposes upon the land but the land was still a grove. In appeal the Commissioner decided on the 26th May 1914 that the Rent Court had no jurisdiction as the grove had not been granted nor was it held for agricultural purposes. He accordingly upheld the order of dismissal of the suit and referred the parties to the Civil Court. In 1920 Ahmad Husain instituted the suit out of which the present appeal has arisen against Sirajuddin on the allegation that Sirajuddin and his brothers had cut down some of the trees in the grove and constructed buildings upon it in some of which buildings persons resided. He nowhere suggested that the land had ceased to possess the characteristics of a grove. He asserted that Sirajuddin and his brothers had agreed to pay him rent in respect of the buildings constructed and that they had not done so for three years. He claimed 12 rupees as arrears of rent or in the alternative 12 rupees as damages for use of the houses, or any other relief which the Court might deem proper to grant. It is to be observed that he in no way challenged the title of defendant as a grove-holder of a rent free muafi grove and that he set up a specific agreement to pay rent, putting it, it is true, in the alternative, that if he could not prove his specific agreement he should be granted damages.

He made no attempt to explain how he had a cause of action for damages. The Trial Court found that there was such an agreement to pay rent and decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court found on the facts that there was no agreement to pay rent. It, therefore, dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appeals here. He takes two grounds that the defendant having been a rent free tenant of the grove had no right to convert the land into a site of houses for residential purposes and that he was entitled to damages for use and occupation.

The finding of fact that there was no agreement to pay rent is final. The case then stands thus: The defendant has cut down a certain number of trees in the grove which he holds rent-free. The Revenue Courts have held that the special provisions of the Tenancy Act which permit zemindars to resume rent-free grants has no application in this case. There is nothing in the civil law which would permit the resumption of this grove. So the defendant is holding in perpetuity this grove without payment of rent. So long as the land has the characteristics of a grove he cannot be ejected. The plaintiff never suggested that the land has lost the characteristics of a grove. While it has the characteristics of a grove the defendant can do what he wishes upon it. There is no objection, if he chooses, to his constructing houses for agricultural purposes or for any other purposes upon it. If he wishes to construct a residential house upon it he has every right to do so. When the land loses its characteristics of a grove the case may be altered, but at present the plaintiff has not even suggested that the land has lost its characteristics as a grove. The learned Subordinate Judge rightly dismissed the suit. I dismiss this appeal with costs which include fees on the higher scale.

Where lands are conveyed to temple servants by a sanad under the Bombay Summary Settlement Act, the lands being described in the sanad as the private property of the holders, the sanad would not negative the right of a person to eastablish, if he can, that the lands are really devasthan lands and not private property. [p. 618, col. 1.]

The fact of the sanad having been granted would not constitute a cause of action upon which to maintain a suit. [p. 619, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Ratnagiri, in Appeals Nos. 30 and 26 of 1919, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Vengurla, in Civil Suit No. 56 of 1916.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Shah, Ag. C. J.—These two appeals arise out of a suit filed by the plaintiff, as representing Gaukars of the village of Khanoli entitled to the management of the temple, against the defendants who were the Devlis and the Bhavnis connected with the temple as servants, and defendants Nos. 29 and 30 who were alienees from defendant No. 1. The plaintiff's case was that the lands in suit were really Devasthan lands given to the defendants Devlis and Bhavnis for the services which they rendered to the temple, and that the alienation of these lands was invalid. He sued for a declaration that the property was Devasthan property and prayed for possession of the lands.

The defendants in substance pleaded that these lands were Jat-inam property of the Devlis and that they were entitled to alienate the lands. It was apparently common ground in the lower Court that it it was found that these lands were Devasthan property, the alienation would be clearly invalid. The Trial Court found in favour of the plaintiff and passed a decree making the necessary declaration and ordering that the land in the possession of defendants Nos. 29 and 30 should be restored to the plaintiff.

In the appeals to the District Court, the same points were in controversy between the parties, and the result of the decision of that Court was that the decree of the Trial Court was confirmed.

Two appeals are now preferred to this Court one by defendants Nos. 29 and 30 and the other by defendant No. 27. The contentions urged in support of these appeals are that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the property was not the Jat-inam property of the defendant but the Devasthan property is wrong, and that it was not open to the lower Appellate Court to come to that conclusion in view of the fact that a sanad under the Summary Settlement Act (VII of 1863) was granted to the defendants in which the property was described as the private property of the holders. Further, it is urged that the plaintiff's claim is time-barred and that the amendment as to the claim for possession should not have been allowed.

As regards the first point, which is clearly the only point of importance in the case, it is no doubt true that the sanad granted to the defendants in respect of the lands in suit under Act VII of 1863 describes the property as the private property of the holders. But it is clear from the proviso to section 7 of that Act that "the rightful owners of the property shall not by this Act or anything therein contained be deprived of any right or remedy to which they may be entitled against the holders and their heirs and assigns for the recovery of the said lands dealt with under the Act." It follows that the sanad granted to the defendants does not negative the right of the present plaintiff to establish, if he can, in this suit, that the lands are really the Devasthan lands and not the private property of the defendants.

Mr. Desai has not been able to suggest any answer to the effect of this proviso to section 7 to which I have referred, and his argument on this point, when analysed, really comes to this that the evidence upon which the lower Appellate Court has relied in coming to the conclusion that the property is Devasthan property and not the Jat-inam property does not really justify that inference. It is also suggested in the course of the argument that a part of the evidence referred to by the lower Appellate Court was not admissible in evidence. It does not appear that any point as to the admissibility of evidence was taken either in the Trial Court or in the lower Appellate Court. Mr. Desai has not been able to point out how any particular statement is inadmissible in evidence. Treating the statements referred to by the lower Appellate Court as evidence in the case, it is really a question of appreciation of the evidence on the point. Both the Courts have decided in favour of the plaintiff and against the defendants and I do not think that in second appeal any valid reason is shown for disturbing that finding. But I may add that there is one broad consideration which strongly supports the finding and that is that the defendants who are servants of the temple have been rendering service to the temple; and it is not shown in the course of argument before us by Mr. Desai as to what other remuneration these persons have been receiving for this service. The plaintiff's case is that the remuneration they receive is the income of the land which they hold on behalf of the Devasthan. That is the inference which the lower Appellate Court has drawn, and it seems to me almost inevitable under the circumstances. In the absence of any explanation on the part of the defendants as to how they are otherwise remunerated for their services, is a circumstance which tells against their contention.

As regards the point of limitation, the only Article relied upon is Art. 120 of the Indian Limitation Act. But I do not see how it could be said that the fact of the sanad having been granted to the defendant constitutes a cause of action upon which the plaintiff could sue the defendants. They performed their services and rightfully enjoyed the profits of the land during all this time, and it was only when they attempted to alienate the land wrongfully to strangers that the occasion for filing the present suit arose. It could not be said that the right to sue accrued within the meaning of Art. 120 at the time when the sanad was issued. No authority has been cited in support of this contention raised, and on the general ground I am quite unable to accept the view that the mere fact that the sanad has been issued is sufficient to give rise to the cause of action to which the suit relates. It may be that he might have been able to institute a suit for a declaration that it was not Jat-inam property but Devasthan property soon after the sanad was granted; as to that I express no opinion. But I do not think that the fact that the sanad was granted rendered it necessary for him to institute the present suit. The Art. 120 does not apply to the case, as there is a claim for possession. It is also clear that the amendment of the plaint was very properly allowed. It would be quite wrong to allow the strangers who are alienees to continue to hold possession of the Devasthan land, and if the Court came to the conclusion that it was Devasthan property, it was quite proper to order defendants Nos. 29 and 30 to restore the possession to the plaintiff. It is not necessary for us to consider in these appeals whether the plaintiff is entitled to possession in preference to defendant No. 1, who held the lands originally and alienated the same to defendants Nos. 29 and 30. Defendant No. 1 has not appealed and he has not appeared either before the lower Appellate Court or before us.

It is urged, however, by the plaintiff by way of cross-objections against defendant No. 27 that though he has been rendering services to the temple, the fact that he contended that the lands in suit were not Devasthan land but the private property of the Devlis was sufficient to entitle him to the possession of the lands from the temple servants. Both the lower Courts have declined to give effect to this plea in the exercise of their discretion. In my opinion they were perfectly justified in declining to give possession to the plaintiff and in not depriving the defendants of their possession of these lands which have been in their possession for many years as remuneration for their services which they have been rendering to the temple, and which they are still ready to render. On these grounds, I am of opinion that the appeals must fail.

The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is confirmed and the appeals and cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Moradabad, dated the 25th February 1921.

Mr. M. L. Sandal, for the Appellants.
Mr. Panna Lal for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit for possession of a certain plot of land and demolition of a wall erected thereon by the defendants. The plaintiffs had also claimed damages, etc., but we are not concerned with this portion of the case in appeal. The defence was that the plot of land on which the wall in dispute stood belonged to the defendants and a new wall had been built up in place of the old one. The Munsif found in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed the claim in part, namely, he allowed the plaintiffs possession of the land and decreed Rs. 30 as damages. On appeal the lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had failed to prove their ownership of the land in dispute and has reversed the decree of the First Court and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs come here in second appeal and their main ground is that the defendants themselves, whilst objecting to the Commissioner's report, offered to be bound by the decision which the Court arrived at on inspection of the locality and were not competent to appeal to the lower Appellate Court and reliance is placed on Shahzadi Begam v. Muhammad Ibrahim (1) and an unreported decision of Mr. Justice Stuart in Second Appeal No. 1213 of 1919 decided on the 23rd of June, 1921, [Ram Lal v. Satya Ranjan Sircar]. In my opinion these cases have no bearing on the present case. In these cases there were agreements of the parties agreeing to be bound by the decision of the Trial Court on the question involved. In the present case there was no such agreement. An application was put in by the defendants but there is nothing to show that the plaintiffs had agreed to it, and neither the Court nor the parties took it seriously in this sense and later on went into the evidence. Under these circumstances the application put in by the defendants does not estop them from questioning the correctness of the decision of the Munsif. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has on considering the evidence come to a finding of fact that the plaintiffs do not own the land in dispute. The suit was, therefore, rightly dismissed by him. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Estate—Inheritance—Death of last holder—Reversion of estate.

If an estate is an absolute estate of inheritance it cannot revert, in any circumstances, to the original grantor, for the law regards the Crown as the heir of the last holder. But if the estate is a limited estate, such as a fixed rate tenancy, it reverts on the death of the last holder without heirs not to the Crown but to the zemindar. [p. 622, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Farrukhabad, dated the 3rd February 1921.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmed for Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, Musammat Ramman Bibi, is the zemindar of the village Amrauli. A certain Hari Ram resided in Amrauli as an agricultural tenant. He occupied a dwelling house in the abadi and he was the holder of a certain grove with the rights of a tenant grove-holder. It is alleged that he owed money on a deed to a certain Mathra Prasad. Hari Ram died. At the time of his death it was alleged that he had not satisfied the amount due to Mathra Prasad. Mathra Prasad instituted a suit against a child called Bilaso, who, he alleged, was the daughter of Hari Ram in respect of the amount which Hari Ram, was alleged to have owed him. He obtained a decree against the assets of Hari Ram in the hands of Bilaso. I am unable to ascertain whether this decree was obtained ex parte or after contest. In execution of that decree he brought to sale the interests of Hari Ram in the house and grove. They were purchased by Lachmi Narain brother of Mathra Prasad. Lachmi Narain is now in possession of those interests. The plaintiff instituted a suit against Mathra Prasad and Lachmi Narain for possession of the house and grove, her case being that Bilaso was not the daughter of Hari Ram; that Hari Ram had died without heirs or successors, and that she as zemindar had succeeded to the house and grove upon his death. Mathra Prasad and Lachmi Narain contested the suit. Bilaso was not a party. The Courts below have arrived at a concurrent finding of fact to the effect that Bilaso was not the daughter of Hari Ram and that Hari Ram died without heirs or successors. The Trial Court decreed the suit in full. The learned District Judge considered that the plaintiff as zemindar could only succeed to the house and grove on condition of paying off the debts of Hari Ram. He accordingly made her success conditional on the payment of those debts with the result that he awarded the materials of the house to the purchaser and awarded him the grove in consideration of the fact that the value of the materials and the grove together were less than the debts due from the deceased.

The plaintiff appeals here.

The first point taken is this. On the findings of both Courts Musammat Bilaso was not the daughter of Hari Ram, so there is no force in the decree in favour of Mathra Prasad against Bilaso. It was, however, open to the defendants to prove aliunde their debt from Hari Ram. They do not appear to have done so. Had the decision of this appeal turned on that point alone, it might have been necessary to remit further issues for proof upon this point. The non-joinder of Bilaso does not defeat the suit (O. I, r. 9) and, as I read O. XLI, r. 20, it is not possible to join her now.

But the second point remains. It was decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1876 in Sonet Kooer v. Himmut Bahadoor (1) that the principles of the English Law of escheat have no application to the case of a Hindu zemindar, although they have application to the case of escheat to the Crown on failure of heirs. It was decided in 1910 by a Full Bench of this Court in Tulshi Ram Sahu v. Gur Dayal Singh (2) that on the death of a fixed rate tenant without heirs, his tenancy did not escheat to the Crown but reverted to the zemindar. The question whether the zemindar would be liable to pay the debts of such a tenant was considered but not decided in that appeal. Their Lordships in the previous case had decided that an istimrari mokarrari tenure escheated on the death of the last-holder to the Crown and not to the zemindar. The ratio decidendi in this matter is comparatively simple. If an estate is an absolute estate of inheritance it cannot revert in any circumstances to the original grantor for the law regards the Crown as the heir of the last-holder. But if the estate is a limited estate such as a fixed rate tenancy it reverts on the death of the last-holder without heirs not to the Crown but to the zemindar. The circumstance that the interest is transferable will not affect the matter. A fixed rate tenancy is transferable. The right of the tenant to reside in a house in the inhabited site of an agricultural village of this Province and the right of a tenant groveholder to a grove in this particular village are both limited estates. When the last holder of such a house dies without heirs the house reverts (the word escheat should not be used, though it frequently is used in common parlance to express the process) to the zemindar, and in this particular village when a tenant groveholder dies without heirs, the trees and the land revert to the zemindar. It is good law that, in the case of escheat to the Crown, the Crown is liable to pay off the debts of the last-holder; the Crown is so liable because it succeeds as heirs. But the question which remains to be decided is, does the zemindar succeed as heir? I agree with the learned Counsel for the appellant that he does not succeed as heir. The zemindar has divested himself both in the case of the house and the grove of his interest in the property for a period which terminates when the last holder dies without heirs. This period may be indefinitely prolonged but nevertheless it is a terminable period and the estate is a limited estate. It could not be questioned that if a zemindar divested himself of his title and property for a definite term of years, the interest returning to him absolutely at the end of that term of years; the holder of the limited interest could not encumber more than the limited interest, and in no circumstances could the zemindar be held responsible for the debts of the last holder. It appears to me that the same rule must be applied in the case of all limited estates and that, therefore, the zemindar is entitled to recover the house and the grove absolutely on the death of the last holder without heirs.

I, therefore, allow this appeal. I set aside the decree of the learned District Judge and restore the decree of the learned Munsif. The defendants-respondents will pay their costs and those of the plaintiff-appellant in all Courts. These costs will include in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 110—Lease unregistered — Admissibility in evidence —Relationship of landlord and tenant—Ownership.

An unregistered lease deed is admissible in evidence to show the position of landlord and tenant and would, under section 110 of the Evidence Act, tend to show ownership.

Appeal from a decree of the First Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 459 of 1921, decided on 15th February 1922.

Messrs. A. V. Khare, and D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued for an open site and the gadhi at Borgaon, Taluq Basim, which he had bought from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by a sale-deed dated 29th May 1918.

He states that he had already been in possession as the licensee of the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from 1896. Both Courts have found that plaintiff has failed to prove that the site belonged to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 or that they had any right to sell. The findings are findings of fact and are not to be challenged in second appeal without good reasons.

The first ground upon which the decision of the Courts below is assailed is that there is a presumption that the gadhi in a village belongs to the Deshmukh. I know of no such presumption and, during many years of service in the Province from which this appeal arises, never heard of it. The second and last ground is that the lease of 28th November 1894, though inadmissible because of want of registration, has been held admissible for collateral purposes. It is executed by one Maroti in favour of Tapaji, the grandfather of defendants Nos. 4 and 5, who claim the site. The admissibility of the document for a collateral purpose is not challenged but it is stated that it is no evidence against the plaintiff. It seems to me to have been rightly admitted to show the position of landlord and tenant and would, under section 110 of the Evidence Act, tend to show ownership. What is evidence against plaintiff's sellers is evidence against the plaintiff as he claims through them and the fact that in 1894 the purchaser of defendants Nos. 4 and 5 leased the site to Maroti, and there is ample evidence to show that Maroti did occupy the site, unquestionably raises a presumption that at that time the family of defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were the owners of the site. Nothing exists to vitiate the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court upon which the decision of this appeal turns. For these reasons this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellant will pay the respondents' costs.

NUNE VENKATAPATHI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANT No. 1 AND PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENTS.

Legal representative—Wife impleaded as legal representative of deceased husband in a suit for maintenance—Subsequent suit in personal capacity.

It is not open to a person who is added as a legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor, to raise any defences personal to himself or herself.

In a suit for maintenance a charge for maintenance was declared against certain properties of the judgment-debtor. Some of these items were, however, the stridhanam properties of his wife Pending appeal, the judgment-debtor died and his wife was brought on the record as his legal representative. In a subsequent suit for enhanced maintenance:

Held, it was open to the wife or her representative-in-interest to plead that the charge in the prior suit against her properties was not binding on her and her personal estate.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Godavari, at Rajamundry, dated the 13th March 1920, in Appeal Suit No. 229 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, dated the 22nd July 1919 in Original Suit No. 49 of 1918.

Mr. T. S. Raghunatha Rao, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. Lakshmanan, A. Satyanarayana and A. Venkatayallah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court has found that items Nos. 6 to 11 of plaint A schedule were the stridhanam properties of plaintiff's mother-in-law and did not belong to her father-in-law's estate. On this finding no charge should have been given on those items for any part of the maintenance allowed. The learned District Judge apparently thinks that because the mother-in-law was made a party to the second appeal as the legal representative of her deceased husband and in that suit a charge was declared for Rs. 72 a year on properties including those properties, the same is binding on her and her estate. We are unable to concur with this view. She was only added as a legal representative in the previous litigation and it was not open to her as such to raise any defences personal to herself. It was, therefore, open to her and is now open to her representative, the 2nd defendant, to plead that the charge was not a proper charge on their properties and as on the finding of the lower Appellate Court the charge is not a proper one, effect can and should be given to it by disallowing any charge on those lands. There is no question raised about the amount of maintenance allowed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be reversed and that of the First Court restored. The first defendant will pay 2nd defendant's costs in this and the lower Appellate Court and the plaintiff will bear his own costs in both those Courts.

Vendor and purchaser—Purchase from person without title—Debt of vendor paid by purchaser—Suit by real owner for possession, purchaser whether entitled to reimbursement.

A person who purchases property from one who has no title to sell, and who, to save the property from sale in execution of a decree against the latter, pays the amount of the decree, is not entitled upon dispossession by the real owner of the property, to be reimbursed the amount of the decree paid by him.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Allahabad, dated the 1st March 1921.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are as follows:—Ode Beni owned two houses. He died leaving a widow, Ram Dei, the stepmother of his son Mata Ghulam, who survived him. After the death of Mata Ghulam, Sheo Pal, his uncle, is said to have got the property as his heir. On the 6th of July 1918 Sheo Pal sold the two houses to the plaintiff. One Amrit Lal obtained a money-decree from the Court of Small Causes against Sheo Pal and Ram Dei. The amount of this decree was recoverable from the assets of Beni. In execution of this decree he attached the houses purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff objected but his objections were disallowed on the 9th of August 1919. On the 24th of November 1919 Musammat Ram Dei sold the houses to Gaya Prasad and Sattidin who paid off the amount of the decree. On the 9th of August 1920, that is, within a year from the date of the disallowance of his objection, the plaintiff brought the present suit for possession against Gaya Prasad and Sattidin, the purchasers. The defence raised to the claim was (1) that no suit having been brought against the decree-holder within a year, the title of the plaintiff had become extinguished, and (2) that the plaintiff could not get possession without paying off the decree of Amrit Lal which had been satisfied by the defendants. The Trial Court decreed the claim for possession conditional on the plaintiffs' paying up the amount of the decree of Amrit Lal which had been satisfied by the defendants. On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has modified the decree of the Trial Court by deleting the condition regarding the payment of Amrit Lal's decree by the plaintiff and has given an unconditional decree to the plaintiff. The defendants come here in second appeal. I do not see any principle of law by which the defendants who had, according to the defence, purchased the property from a person who had no title to sell it, could expect to be recouped for the amount which they paid to clear off the decree of Amrit Lal. Because of their purchase they did not acquire any interest in the property and as such their action was that of mere volunteers. The decree of the Court below is a right decree and is not open to any objection. I confirm it and dismiss this appeal with costs including in this Court-fees on the higher scale.

Hindu Law—Widow—Surrender, constituents of.

In order that a surrender by a Hindu widow of her widow's estate, inherited from the last male owner, may be effective and valid, there must be a total surrender of that estate, and the arrangement between the widow and the reversionary heir should not be such as can be described as a device to partition the estate between the widow and the reversionary heir. [p. 626, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Asansole (Burdwan), dated the 31st March 1921.

Messrs. Bankim Chandra Mukerjee and Charuchandra Sanyal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Basak, for Mr. Hira Lal Sanyal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question involved in this appeal is, whether a lease executed by a Hindu widow, under circumstances to be mentioned hereinafter, passed any title binding against a reversionary heir. The facts of the case have been fully set out in the two judgments of the Courts below and it is unnecessary to repeat them at length. It will be sufficient if the facts are stated shortly so far as the question involved in this appeal is concerned. It appears that a lady of the name of Raj Kumari Deby, who was the widow of one Kenaram Hazra, executed a deed of release in favour of one Ram Das Mukerjee, who was a reversionary heir of her husband. In the deed of release the lady stated that after her husband's death she had been in enjoyment of all moveable and immoveable properties left by her husband. She then went on to state that she was executing the deed of release in favour of the said Ram Das in respect of all immoveable properties left by her husband. She stated that the immoveable properties were all mentioned in the schedule to the deed and that if, through mistake or omission or for any other reason, any immoveable property was left out of the schedule there would be no hindrance to the title or possession of the reversionary heir in respect of the immoveable properties left out of the schedule if such had happened. With reference to the moveable properties, she declared that she would retain the same in her possession and that, after her demise, the said Ram Das would be the owner of the same. It is argued by Mr. Bankim Chandra Mukerjee, who has conducted this appeal with much ability, that the words of the deed of release taken as a whole conveyed the entirety of the estate left by the grantor's husband and that, if that was so, the deed of release fulfilled the conditions laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case reported in Sureshwar Misser v. Maheshrani Misrain (1), and that, therefore, it should be held that the deed of release passed a title which was binding as against the reversionary heir. There is another point which has been argued, namely, that the reservation of the right of residence in the homestead did not in any way contravene the conditions laid down by the Privy Council in the case referred to above and also in other cases decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee dealing with the question of surrender by widows of their estate. So far as the last point is concerned, namely, whether the reservation of a right of residence in a family dwelling house or in a homestead can or cannot be stigmatized as a device to divide the property which belonged to the last male owner, between the lady, and the reversionary heir, need not be gone into in this case and the reason is this. Looking at the words of the deed itself, we are satisfied that the entirety of the estate, composed of moveable as well as immoveable properties, did not pass by the deed of release. No doubt, so far as the immoveable property was concerned, there was a complete surrender by the lady in favour of Ram Das. But as regards the moveable properties the words that occur in the concluding portion of the deed conclusively show that the title thereto, namely, the title of the lady in her husband's estate to the moveables, remained unaffected by the document in question and that after her demise the title as well as the possession thereof would pass to Ram Das. In our opinion, the terms of the deed of release were not sufficient to pass the entirety of the estate left by the last male owner to Ram Das and, that being so, inasmuch as there was not a total surrender by the widow of her estate which was inherited from the last male owner in favour of Ram Das it can hardly be contended that the deed passed any title binding as against the reversionary heir.

Our attention has been drawn to numerous cases decided in the Courts in India and also to the recent Privy Council decision on the question of surrender by widows of their estate. The last case, namely, the case reported in Sureshwar Misser v. Maheshrani Misrain (1), laid down two working rules, namely, (1) that there must be a total surrender by the widows of her widow's estate inherited from the last male owner, and (2) that the arrangement between the widow and the reversionary heir should not be such as can be described as a device to partition the estate, between the widow and the reversionary heir. So far as the first point is concerned, Mr. Mukerjee's client obviously fails on the terms of the deed. In this view, there is no escape from the conclusion that no title whatsoever, in the circumstances of this case, passed to the grantee sufficient to bind the reversionary heir.

The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Section 13 of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, was devised to impose restrictions on sudden freaks of impulse. It insisted upon certain formalities in the case of gifts and devises and fixed certain time limits for the performance thereof in order that the strongest proof might be available of a disposing mind of deliberate intention in case the donee or legatee happened to be a person who was not the legal heir to the estate under the special rules of succession or the ordinary law applicable to such estates or one of his younger sons. The expression "a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act" in section 13 of the Oudh Estates Act, is confined to the persons or one of the persons to whom the estate would have descended according to the provisions of the special clause of section 22 of that Act applicable to the particular case. [p. 634, col 2; p. 635, col. 1.]

The proper intrepretation of sub-section (1) of section 13 appears to be that the privilege is confined to the one person who would succeed to the taluqdar's estate under the Act; and that the words "under the ordinary law to which persons of the donor or testator's tribe and religion are subject" govern cases falling under section 22, clause 11, and section 23 of the Act. If there is a person existing, who would succeed under the special provisions of section 22 (first ten clauses) that person alone would be the privileged person. [p. 635, col. 2.]

A family settlement implies a mutual settlement by certain contending parties belonging to the same family of some disputed claims and rights. An award of arbitration is not a settlement of that character. It is a decision of a tribunal constituted by the contending parties for the settlement of their disputes, and in so far as it is a lawful and valid award, it is binding on the parties to the arbitration proceedings and their privies,

ZARIF-UN-NISA v. SHAFIQ-UZ-ZAMAN.

Whether such an award is binding on persons whose interests are analogous to those of the parties to the arbitration proceedings, is a matter which is not capable of an inflexible answer. In each case it has to be determined whether the person who agreed to the reference to arbitration was seeking to assert a right common to himself and others and had acted fairly in representing those whose interests he had undertaken to protect. [p. 641, col. 2.]

An arbitration award can be questioned by those only who were no parties to the arbitration proceedings, but not by a person who was a party to the arbitration or to the decree passed in accordance with it, or by his representatives-in-interest. [p. 643, col. 2.]

Section 11, Explanation VI, of the Civil Procedure Code, applies to a common right asserted by certain persons on behalf of themselves and others, but not to rights which are not common but several and distinct. [p. 642, col. 2.]

Under the Muhammadan Law a devise in favour of one of several heirs is inoperative without the consent of the other heirs. [p 643, col. 2.]

Any statement made by a Deputy Commissioner or the Board of Revenue in derogation of the rights of a person on whose behalf an estate is held by the Court of Wards cannot be deemed to have been made on that person's behalf or as his agent. [p. 644, col. 2.]

A Will which fails to satisfy the conditions imposed by section 13 of the Oudh Estates Act is inoperative, and, being thus void and unenforceable, the mere consent of parties would not validate it. It may create a new title to take the place of that which was inchoate, defective or imperfect. [p. 647, col. 1.]

The use of the word "ordinarily" in List No. 2 prepared under section 8 of the Oudh Estates Act implies that an occasional variation by consent or otherwise would not affect the custom of devolution. [p. 652, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—These are two connected appeals arising out of two suits brought by rival claimants to the same estate. The short pedigree given below will elucidate the connection between the principal parties to the two suits:—

The property in dispute consists of Taluqas Bhilwal and Khanpur, situated in the District of Bara Banki, and Taluqa Sikandarpur, situated in the District of Rae Bareili. These estates were settled with Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad in 1858 and sanads were afterwards granted to him. His name was entered in respect of Taluqas Bhilwal and Khanpur at No. 13 of List II and in respect of Taluqa Sikandarpur at No. 10 in List V appended to Act I of 1869.

Taluqa Bhilwal, otherwise known as Bhilwal Hasa pur, belonged to Chaudhri Lutf-ul-lah. He died in 1254 Fasli leaving a daughter, Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, who was married to Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad, and a brother, Qalandar Bakhsh. Qalandar Bakhsh held the estate for sometime but the revenue payable in respect thereof fell into arrears. The kabuliyat of the estate was then granted to certain other persons, but the latter similarly made default in the payment of the revenue, and the estate was eventually sold and purchased by Arjun Singh sometime before the Mutiny. Arjun Singh did not, however, succeed in getting possession. The confiscation of Oudh followed. Chaudhri Sarfraz Ahmad managed to secure possession of the estate and his title thereto was recognised by the British Government at the Summary Settlement and a primogeniture sanad was granted to him in 1816 (Exhibit C 46). Taluqa Khanpur belonged to Chaudhri Husain Bakhsh. It devolved on his death on his son Sarfaraz Ahmad. Taluqa Sikandarpur had been granted to Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad by the British Government.

On the 3rd May 1870 Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad deposited with the Chief Commissioner of Oudh what he described as his last Will and Testament in the presence of Raja Farzand Ali Khan, the taluqdar of Jahangirabad, and Nawab Ali Khan, the taluqdar of Salempur, both of whom attested the presentation of the Will (Exhibit 1). The Will purports to bear the signature of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad, but it bears no date and it is not clear whether the said signature was made in the presence of the Chief Commissioner and the above witnesses. Both, Raja Farzand Ali Khan and Nawab Ali Khan are dead. The genuineness of the Will is not, however, disputed by the main contending parties and may also be presumed from the circumstances established. On the 26th May 1870, i.e., within 23 days of its presentation, Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad died without taking any step to get the said Will registered in the manner required by section 13 of Act I of 1869. He left his mother, Musammat Chand Bibi; a widow, Musammat Bechan-un-nisa; a daughter, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa; a brother, Murtaza Husain; and a sister, Musammat Sughra Bibi, surviving him. By virtue of the Will the entire Taluqa Bhilwal with the villages Sharifabad and Allahpur of Taluqa Khanpur had been devised to Musammat Bechan-un-nisa for her life and after her to her daughter Musammat Zainab-un-nissa, and after her to the children of the latter, male and female, and the rest of the Taluqa Sikandarpur were to be enjoyed by Murtaza Husain and Musammat Bechan-un-nissa in equal shares, the latter holding her share for her life with remainder after her death to her daughter, Musammat Zainab-un-nissa; and after her to her children male or female. The Will enjoined on the legatees to live on the income of the property and declared that none of the heirs succeeding to the estate shall have any power of alienation. In regard to Taluqa Khanpur the Will further said that the lambardari and qaem muqami (succession) shall vest in the male issue and the daughter would have a right to maintenance. The validity and effect of the devises made by the Will form one of the subject-matter of contention in this litigation. If the Will was invalid, the person entitled to the estate of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad in preference to his widow Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, was his brother, Murtaza Husain, under section 22, clause (6), of Act I of 1869, as he had left no male issue. He had a gransdson, Rafi-uz-zaman, by his daughter, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa, who was a minor about seven months old.

On the death of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad a contest arose between Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Murtaza Husain. Musammat Bechan-un-nisa claimed to be entitled to the estate under the Will of her husband. Murtaza Husain claimed to be the joint owner of the estate along with his brother, Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad and also claimed a right to inherit the estate under section 22, clause (6), of Act I of 1869. On the 3rd August 1870 mutation of names was effected, presumably on the reports of the patwaris of the villages concerned in accordance with the allotments made by the Will (Exhibits 4 and 5); but on the 7th September 1870 Murtaza Husain applied for mutation of names in his favour, alleging that the Will was invalid and claiming to be the sole heir to the estate under Act I of 1869 (Exhibit A 54). Meanwhile, on a reference made by the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki, the Commissioner took the view that Rafi-uz-zaman had a preferential right and he directed the Deputy Commissioner accordingly to assume the superintendence of the estate on behalf of Rafi-uz-zaman (Exhibit A 52). Apprehending that his right would be thereby endangered, Murtaza Husain sought to rely on the Will to show that Rafi-uz-zaman was described by Sarfaraz Ahmad as his daughter's son and was never adopted or treated in all respects as his own son. The Financial Commissioner, however, did not agree with the Commissioner and directed that the orders passed in the mutation proceeding relating to succession should not be interfered with (Exhibit A 55).

On the 9th February 1871 the parties agreed before the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki to abide by the Will of Sarfaraz Ahmad and to refer their disputes about certain provisions of the Will to abrbitration (Exhibit 2). On the 14th February 1871 they executed an agreement of reference to arbitration appointing Chaudhri Ghulam Farid, taluqdar of Bari, Pargana Rudauli, and Raghunath Singh, taluqdar of Pali, arbitrators, to settle the dispute between Chaudhri Murtaza Husain and Chaudhrain Saheba, the widow of Sarfaraz Ahmad, in accordance with the provisions entered in the Will of Sarfaraz Ahmad and about the property not entered therein and agreeing that they shall be bound by any decision the referees may give on considering the terms of the Will and other matters (Exhibit 6). The agreement was followed by prolonged proceedings before the arbitrators in which each party set up his or her respective rights. They ultimately agreed in regard to the property covered by the Will that the arbitrators should abide by the Will and "construe and explain" its provisions about certain matters in regard to which the parties were at difference (Exhibits 8 and 9). An award followed dealing with the property covered by the Will and that not covered thereby and distributing the same in a certain manner, (Exhibit 12). Taluqa Khanpur, excluding the villages Sharifabad and Allahpur, was to be divided equally between Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Murtaza Husain; Taluqa Sikandarpur was to be similarly divided between them, and Taluqa Bhilwal, also known as Bhilwal Hasanpur, and the villages Sharifabad and Allahpur of Taluqa Khanpur were to go to Musammat Bechan-un-nissa exclusively. The villages not covered by the Will were also to be divided between Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Murtaza Husain and each party was to be the owner of such moveable property as was in his or her possession. In regard to the direction contained in the Will restricting the power of alienation, the arbitrators declared that it was only admonitory and not intended to restrict the rights of Murtaza Husain in regard to what was his ancestral property. The exact scope of the authority given to the arbitrators and the construction to be placed on the award and the legal effect thereof form other important issues in this litigation. On the 21st August 1871 Musammat Bechan-un-nisa filed an application to enforce the award (Exhibit 14) to which certain objections were taken by Murtaza Husain. A decree was ultimately passed in accordance with the award on the 20th December 1871 (Exhibit F 7), which was upheld by the Privy Council on the 13th July 1876 (Exhibit A65). A perfect partition of the estate was subsequently effected between Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Murtaza Husain by the Revenue Court. On the 30th December 1882 (see Exhibit 22 paragraph 3) the Court of Wards assumed the superintendence of the estate of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa had meanwhile given birth to another son named Shafiq-uz-zaman. In June 1891, Rafiq-uz-zaman died. On the 15th September 1893 Musammat Bechan-un-nisa executed a Will by which she gave her entire estate to Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and Shafiq-uz-zaman jointly for their lives without any power of alienation with an absolute and heritable vested remainder in favour of the latter on the death of the former (Exhibit A-97). On the 26th February 1895 Musammat Bechan-un-nisa died. Musammat Zainab-un-nisa thereupon applied for the entry of her name and that of her minor son Shafiq-uz-zaman, in the place of the deceased; and Mustafa Husain, son of Murtaza Husain, made an application to the same effect, claiming that he was the sole heir to the estate of Sarfaraz Ahmad. The Board of Revenue directed the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki, who was in charge of the estate to apply for mutation of names in favour of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa alone on the basis of the Will executed in her favour by Sarfaraz Ahmad (Exhibit 316). An application to that effect was accordingly made by the Court of Wards (Exhibit 6) which was contested by Mustafa Husain who was ultimately unsuccessful. On the 30th August 1907 Musammat Zainab-un-nisa died. The Court of Wards continued the superintendence of the estate on behalf of Shafiq-uz-zaman and got mutation of names effected in his favour without any objection having been raised by Mustafa Husain or any other person claiming to be interested in the property. The estate was then indebted to the extent of Rs. 39,000. Shafiq-uz-zaman raised a loan from the Upper India Bank, Limited, Meerut, for that amount on the joint security of himself and Hari Kishen Das and got the estate released on the 6th November 1908 (Exhibit W5).

The history of the estate thereafter is one of successive alienations and transfers by Shafiq-uz-zaman. He took various loans from time to time from different persons and eventually borrowed two lacs of rupees from the Upper India Bank, Limited, on the security of the estate for the payment of his liabilities. He transferred different portions of the property to different persons who are parties to the suit. On the 30th January 1912 he executed a deed of trust with the intention of making over the estate to the trustees for the benefit of his son, Sharif-uz-zaman, but soon after the trustees got possession, he took back possession. On the 27th January 1914 Shafiq-uz-zaman was adjudicated an insolvent on the application of one of his creditors and the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki was appointed Receiver of the estate for the benefit of his creditors.

Shafiq-uz-zaman had three sisters, Musammat Amina, Musammat Zarif-un-nisa and Musammat Manzur-un-nisa of whom Musammat Amina had died in the lifetime of her mother, Musammat Manzur-un-nisa died on the 7th June 1908, leaving as her heir her husband Nisar Ahmad Khan, and two sons Ali Haider Khan and Ishtiaq Ahmad Khan. Musammat Zarif-un-nisa and the heirs of Musammat Manzur-un-nisa claim to be the owners of half the estate by inheritance from Musammat Zainab-un-nisa. They sold a half of their interest in the estate to Raja Syed Abu Jafar of Pirpur. The first of the suits to which these appeals relate was filed by Musammat Zarif-un-nisa, the heirs of Musammat Manzur-un-nisa and the said transferee for possession of half of the estate and for mesne profits appertaining thereto, which was dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge, Mr. Mohammad Raza on the 30th November 1917. His finding was that Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and after her her daughter, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa were given successive life-estates by the Will of Sarfaraz Ahmad with a vested remainder in favour of the children of the latter, that except the devises in favour of the children of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa, the said devises were not invalid for want of registration under section 13 of Act I of 1869 and that the award did not confer an absolute estate on Musammat Bechan-un-nisa but merely confirmed the devises granted by the Will. He further held that the award was conclusive only in regard to the rights of the parties represented in the arbitration proceedings and that the devise in favour of the children of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa being invalid, the reversion vested in the heir-at-law of the testator, that is Mustafa Husain. In the alternative he held that a custom of impartibility attached to the property held by Musammat Zainab-un-nisa, and that even if she were considered to be a full proprietor by inheritance from her mother, Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, the property would go on her death to Shafiq-uz-zaman in preference to her daughters by virtue of that custom. It was also held that a family custom by which the daughters were excluded from inheritance from the pat rnal estate in the presence of sons was roved.

Encouraged by the above decision, Mustafa Husain followed with a suit for possession of the entire estate with mesne profits. It was tried by the Second Additional District Judge, Pandit Sitla Prasad Bajpai, who differed in some respects from the conclusions at which Mr. Muhammad Raza had arrived in the previous litigation. He agreed that by the Will of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad, Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa were only given successive life-estates but he held that the bequest in their favour and in favour of the children of the latter was void for want of registration. He then proceeded to consider the effect of the award and came to the conclusion that it confirmed the devises to Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and the sons of the latter and gave them collectively an absolute interest in the estate, and that, though the possession of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa was not adverse, the plaintiff was not entitled to go behind the award, which was binding on the parties to the present litigation. He further held that some of the transferees acted in good faith and after due enquiry an were protecte by section 41 of Act IV of 1882. A question was also raised before him as to whether Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad held Taluqa Bhilwal as a trustee for Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, but his finding on that point was that no trust was established. The correctness of the above findings is challenged here in these appeals.

The first question for consideration is, whether by virtue of the Will of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad anything more than a succession of life-estates was given to Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, Musammat Zainab-un-nissa and the children of the latter, and, if so, what was the nature of the estate given to each and were the devises made valid and enforceable. In the first paragraph of the Will, the testator declared that he had no son but only one daughter Musammat Zainab-un-nisa; that Musammat Zainab-un-nisa had a son, Rafiuz-zaman, and three daughters and that after him the ornaments, clothes and cash in their possession would remain in their full ownership one after another (bad ek digar). In the second paragraph he described his property, Taluqa Bhilwal Hasanpur and Khanpur, as ancestral and hereditary and Sikandarpur as a grant from the Government and asserted that he had under the Sanad full rights of transfer therein. He then proceeded to declare that after him his widow, after her, his daughter and after her, her issue, whether male or female, and his brother Murtaza Husain should obtain settlement thereof in accordance with the terms of the Will and be considered owners (malik) and his successor.

Paragraphs 3 to 7 referred to certain charges and other matters not relevant to the present dispute. In paragraph 8 the testator imposed a restriction on the right of every heir and successor of his to mortgage, sell or transfer the estate or any part thereof and enjoined every one of them to live on the profits and not to commit any waste.

In paragraph 9 he referred at the commencement to the proposed marriage of his daughter, Musammat Amina, with Fida Husain and gave directions about certain Fateha offerings. Then he gave separate directions about every taluqa and the charges of guzara and other payments imposed separately on each. As regards Hasanpur Bhilwal he said that it was the self-acquired property of his father-in-law Lutfullah and that after him its owner (malik) would be his wife Bibi Bechan; that the settlement of the revenue and of the lambardari thereof shall be made with her and after her with her only daughter Musammat Zainab-un-nissa; that after her her issue, male or female, shall be the owners and representatives, but the lambardari and representation (qaem muqami) shall be with the male issue and the daughters shall be entitled to guzara and maintenance. The direction regarding Taluqa Khanpur was "After me the settlement of revenue shall be with my wife and Murtaza Husain, my brother, Mauza Sharifabad and Allahpur with the villages appertaining to them shall be in the possession and control of my wife and after her of her issue, either male or female. The Government shall recover the fixed revenue and they shall live on the profits. It would be better if the management of the other half of the taluqa also remained with Murtaza Husain and he defrayed the door expenses and paid the parol debts appertaining thereto. Accounts may be settled every year. When my grandson, Rafi-uz-zaman, attains the age of discretion he may manage his share of the property himself. This (course) will be advisable so long as Murtaza Husain is alive. This is my advice but ultimattely it will rest with the heirs to carry it out or not."

As regards Sikandarpur the directions were: "The settlement of Taluqa Sikandarpur which is a grant from the Government shall be made half with my wife and her issue and half with Murtaza Husain my brother."

By prescribing the manner of enjoyment and restricting the right of transfer for all time to come, the testator probably intended to create an entailed or an inalienable proprietary estate consisting of holders of successive life-estates of a certain description.

Paragraphs placing a restraint on the owner of alienation over all the heirs, applied equally to remote successors after the widow and daughter. Such an entail is not permitted under the Indian Law and would fail even if the Will had been valid by complying with all the conditions laid down in section 13 of Act I of 1869. In the second paragraph the testator declared his wife to be malik (proprietor) and qaem-mukam (representative) of his, and the words used along with the name of his wife, Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, indicate how he desired the succession in entail to continue. In paragraph 9 also he described his wife as malik after his death and subsequently detailed the succession in various terms. As regards Bhilwal he mentioned in the entail her issue, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and after her the daughter's issue, male or female. With regard to Khanpur the words are, "After his wife her issue, male or female" and in connection with Sikandarpur a general term is used, "My wife and her issue." The testator knew well enough what words to use for a life-estate, because certain allowances were granted to certain people for lifetime in the Will and the words used in that connection were ta hin hayat (during the lifetime). The testator's intention clearly was to circumscribe the estate of his wife and his granddaughter as much as that of the successors to come after them. He had no power, however, to create an entailed estate. He could give a successive life-estate to certain persons, within the limits prescribed by section 12 of Act I of 1869, but the ultimate reversion must in that case be absolutely granted to a person or persons in existence on the expiry of the last life-estate and no restraint on alienation inconsistent with the grant of a full estate to the ultimate beneficiary or legatee can be recognised.

The devise must, therefore, be deemed to have comprised successive life estates to Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa with a full and unrestricted remainder on the death of latter in favour of her issue. The Will defines the issue (aulad) as either male or female but it goes on to say that if there be children both male and female the lambardari and the representation (qaem muqami) shall be vested in the male issue and daughters shall only be entitled to maintenance and support (mustahaq guzara wa nan nafqa ki hongi). The language used is somewhat unhappy and obscure, but reading it as a whole, it is obvious that the testator did not intend to exclude the female children of his daughter absolutely. His intention probably was that the property should devolve on the death of his daughter on her children, whether male or female, but if there were children both male and female, the lambardari and the succession would go only to the male children, and the female children would only be entitled to maintenance. A right to claim maintenance is much more limited in character than a right to claim accounts or a share of the profits and, except in the manner above suggested, it is not possible to arrive at any consistent intrepretation of the provisions of the Will in this particular.

ZARIF-UN-NISA v. SHAFIQ-UZ-ZAMAN.

According to Chaudhri Murtaza Husain, Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad was in the habit of studying Act I of 1869 and had always kept a copy of it in his basta, or bundle of papers, and he used to keep himself informed of the provisions of the Act by reading it and hearing it read out (Exhibit A59). He failed, however, to realize that under section 13 of Act I of 1869 the registration of his Will was necessary under certain conditions or to take legal advice about the matter. Section 13 lays down that no taluqdar or grantee has any power to give or bequeath his estate or any portion thereof or any interest therein to any person not being either a person who, under the provisions of the Act, or under the ordinary law to which persons of the donor or testator's tribe and religion are subject, would have succeeded to such estate or to a portion thereof or to an interest therein, if such taluqdar or grantee, heir or legatee had died intestate except by an instrument of a gift or Will executed and attested not less than three months before the death of the donor or testator in the manner therein provided in the case of a gift or Will, as the case may be, and registered within one month, from the date of its execution. The Will of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad was neither executed and attested three months or more before his death in the manner provided by law nor registered within a month, from the date of its execution. Possibly, he imagined that the persons who were to be the objects of his bounty were persons who would succeed to the estate under the ordinary law to which persons of his tribe and religion were subject. But the ordinary law there referred to is the law governing the succession to such estates as described by section 23 in contradistinction to the special provisions about succession contained in section 22 of the Act. As their Lordships of the Privy Council observed in Indar Kunwar v. Jalpal Kunwar (1), section 12 is a "most difficult section" and its interpretation has given rise to much trouble in the past. Under the Sanads granted to the taluqdars an unlimited power of disposition was granted to them, which but for the Sanads many of them could not perhaps have exercised under their personal law. The Chief Commissioner, Sir Charles Wingfield, apprehended that some of them in their dotage, yielding to the influence of their wives, concubines and corrupt dependents, might disinherit their legal heirs in favour of younger sons and even of illegitimate offspring and devise their property in a manner opposed to all public feelings, justice or morality. Section 13 was devised to impose restrictions on sudden freaks of impluse. It insisted upon certain formalities in the case of gifts and devises and fixed certain time limits for the performance thereof in order that the strongest possible proof might be available of disposing mind, of deliberate intention in case the donee or legatee happened to be a person who was not the legal heir to the estate under the special rules of succession or the ordinary law applicable to such estates or one of his younger sons. The words "ordinary law" occur in section 13, 22 clause (11), 23, 30 and 31 of the Act; but while sections 23, 30 and 31 deal with the question of succession to the estate where the special rules of succession laid down in section 22 are not or cease to be applicable thereto, and section 22, clause 11, deals with the rule of succession to the estate entered in the second, third and fifth of the lists on certain contingencies, section 13 deals with the rules of succession to the estate entered not only in the second, third and fifth of the lists but also with those entered in the fourth and sixth of the lists above referred to. The special provisions of the Act embodied in section 22, govern the succession to the estates mentioned in the second, third and fifth of the lists, while the ordinary law to which the persons of the donor's or testator's tribe and religion are subject govern the succession to the estates entered in the fourth and sixth lists. In the former class of estates the person who would succeed to the estates, if the taluqdar or grantee were to die intestate would be the person to whom the special provisions of section 22 would apply. In the latter class of estates the person, who would succeed to the estate, if the taluq dar or grantee died intestate, would be the person whom the ordinary law of the tribe or religion of the taluqdar or grantee would select. If the estate is one entered in Lists Nos. 2, 3, and 5 the succession to which is regulated by promogeniture or the special rules of succession laid down in section 22, the ordinary rules of the tribe and religion of the taluqdar or grantee would obviously be inapplicable, because the heir to such an estate would only be one individual, and the ordinary law may point to many. If the estate was one entered in Lists Nos. 4 and 6, the oridinary law of the tribe and religion of the testator would govern the succession to such an estate, and the person entitled to succeed to the same may be one or more, but they must be persons of equal degree. In other words, section 13 provides an exception in favour of a person who would have succeeded to the estate, if the taluqdar or grantee had died intestate under the special provisions relating to succession embodied in the Act, if the estate was one to which those special provisions relating to succession were applicable or under the ordinary law of the tribe and religion of the taluqdar or grantee, if the special provisions relating to succession, so laid down, were not applicable. The person in whose favour the exception has been made would in any case be the person who would have been the immediate heir or the heir-at-law of the taluqdar or grantee had the latter died intestate, according to the law applicable to his estate. A similar exception is made in favour of the younger son of the taluqdar or grantee if the estate was one entered in the third or the fifth of the lists mentioned in section 8, because by the rule of premogeniture or impartibility applicable to such estate, such a younger son would be out of the pale of immediate succession, and a gift or devise in his favour would not divert the estate out of the line.

The learned Subordinate Judge, who decided the first of these suits, held that the devises in favour of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa were not invalid for want of registration, because they would have succeeded to the estate under the Muhammadan Law to which Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad was subject had he died intestate. But the estate held by him was an estate governed by the provisions of section 22 of Act I of 1869 by which the operation of the Muhammadan Law was excluded. Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa could not have succeeded to the estate of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad had he died intestate because under section 22 clause (6) his heir-at-law or immediate heir was his brother, Murtaza Husain. The learned Additional District Judge, who decided the subsequent suit, rightly held that the ordinary law of the tribe and religion of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad was not applicable to the estate in question. They were estates entered in Lists Nos. 2 and 5, the succession to which was governed by the special rules of succession laid down in section 22. The devises in favour of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and the issue of the latter must, therefore, be regarded as invalid and unenforceable.

A reference has been made to a decision of this Court in Tribhuwan Dat Ram v. Shambhu Dat Ram (2) and certain observation in Itraj Kuar v. Bacha Mahadeo Kuar (3) but the value of those decisions is considerably shaken by the subsequent decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balraj Kunwar v. Jagatpal Singh (4), where, referring to the expression "would have succeeded" used in section 14, their Lordships held that those words must be confined to persons in the special line of succession that would have been applicable to the particular case if the donor or testator had died intestate, and the death had occurred at the date of the gift or in the case of a Will at the time when the succession opened. In other words, the expression 'a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act" was held to be equivalent to the persons or one of the persons to whom the estate would have descended according to the provisions of the special clause of section 22 applicable to the particular case. In the course of their examination of the other provisions of the Act their Lordships referred to section 13 and observed:—

"The learned Counsel for the respondent argued quite correctly that section 15 must be read in connection with sections 13 and 14, his contention was that Bisheshar was a person who would have succeeded, within the meaning of section 14, if Pirthipal had died without having made a transfer of the property and intestate. The real question is what is the meaning of the words 'would have succeeded' in sections 13 and 14. Of course if Bisheshar's case falls within section 14, section 15 can have no application to it.

"Their Lordships think that the learned Judges in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner have gone too far in holding as they did that any person mentioned in section 22 as a possible heir may be said to be a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act to the estate, if the testator had died intestate within the meaning of section 14. They think that the expression 'would have succeeded' must be confined to persons in the special line of succession that would have been applicable to the particular case if the transferor or testator had died intestate and the death had occurred at the date of the transfer, or in the case of a gift by Will, at the time when the succession opened. In short, they think that the expression 'a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act' is equivalent to the person or one of the persons to whom the estate would have descended according to the provisions of the special clause of section 22 applicable to the particular case. Their Lordships do not agree with the view of the learned Counsel for the respondents that clause (2) of section 13 was introduced by mistake and may be disregarded altogether. On the contrary, they think that that clause throws a good deal of light on the words in dispute. A younger son of a taluqdar named in List No. III or List No. V is, no doubt, among the possible heirs of his father, but he is not within the prescribed line of succession, if the father leaves an eldest son or a male lineal descendant of an eldest son."

In Bhalya Rabidat Singh v. Indar Kunwar (5) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the word 'intestate' in this sub-section (1) meant intestate as to the taluqdari estate, that is, the estate as that expression is defined by the Act, the taluqa or moveable property to which alone the Act is declared to extend. It would appear from the decision in that case that their Lordships held the privileged person to mean the one person in the special line of succession according to the Act. The proper interpretation of the sub-section appears to us to be that the privilege is confined to the one person who would succeed to the taluqdar's estate under the Act and that the words "under the ordinary law to which persons of the donor or testator's tribe and religion are subject" govern cases falling under section 22, clause (11) and section 23 of the Act. If there is a person existing, who would succeed under the special provisions of section 22 (first ten clauses), that person alone would be the privileged person. The word "or" distinguishes the person succeeding under the special provisions, from the person succeeding under the ordinary law, as circumscribed in the sub-section. It cannot be taken to have the significance of 'and'. If it were the desire of the Legislature to include in sub-section (1) all those persons who would be heirs under the ordinary law, it would not have been necessary to enact clause (2) in favour of a younger son of a taluqdar or grantee, whose name appears in the third or the fifth of the lists mentioned in section 8. It may be presumed from sub-section (2) that a younger son of a taluqdar whose name appears in List No. II would not be privileged under sub-section (1), so the only possible interpretation of sub-section (1) is that the privileged person is the heir under the special provisions of this Act, or the ordinary law applicable to that particular estate.

It is interesting to note that when Murtaza Husain appealed to the Privy Council against the Civil Court decree for the filing of the award made by the arbitrators their Lordships considered the disposition in Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad's Will in favour of his wife and her successor to be invalid. After reviewing the facts of the Will and the reference to arbitration their Lordships* observed:—"In this state of things the brother, whose claim to inherit the Taluqs was liable to be defeated only by proof of the recognition of the grandson as a son .....was induced to enter into a submission to arbitration, the effect of which was to make his rights and the rights of the widow determinable according to the terms of the Will of the testator, and, therefore, for the purposes at all events of that arbitration, to recognise the sufficiency of the Will" (K 3 p. 274). Obviously, it was taken for granted that the bequests to the widow and daughter under an unregistered Will were not valid or that the Will did not stand in the way of Murtaza Husain's claim to the taluqdari property under section 22 (6) of Act I of 1869.

In Ali Muhammad Khan v. Sajjadi Begam [Syed Azam Shah v. Syed Ahmad Shah] (6) a similar view was taken of section 13. In that case a Muhammadan taluqdar had executed a gift of his estate in favour of his wife Musammat Hurmuzi Begam while his sons were alive. The learned Judges decided that Musammat Hurmuzi Begam was not one of the persons who would have succeeded to the estate, had Ahmad Ali Beg died intestate, without making a transfer and that, therefore, the property held by Musammat Hurmuzi Begam was governed by the Muhammadan Law.

It is difficult to conceive that it was intended to extend the exception as much to persons, who would have been entitled to inherit under the ordinary law in case of intestacy as if Act I of 1869 had not been passed as to those who would have succeeded under sections 22 or 23 of Act I of 1869 because, in that event, the scope of the exception would be so widened as to defeat the very object of the provision itself. It is noticeable that clause (2) of section 13 excludes from its operation List No. II altogether because List No. II deals with family custom the incidents of which include tanistry or the selection of the fittest person though he may be younger or junior in the line. As their Lordships say in Balraj Kunwar v. Jagatpal Singh (4), the expression "'a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act' is equivalent to 'the person or one of the persons whom the estate would have descended according to the provisions of the special clause of section 22 applicable to the particula rcase'." They are used in antithesis to the words "under the ordinary law," the former referring to the specific provisions relating to succession contained in the Act and the latter to the ordinary law made applicable by section 23 according as the estate which is the subject of devolution falls in one or the other of the lists. To find the person who would have succeeded to the estate entered in the Lists Nos. 2, 3 and 5 by applying the ordinary law would be as analogous as to find him by applying the special provisions of the Act relating to succession to the estates entered in Lists Nos. 4 and 5. The devises made in favour of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and the issue of the latter, so far as they relate to the estates entered in Lists Nos. 2 and 5, must, therefore, be regarded as unenforceable.

The next question for consideration is whether the award of the 16th March 1871 and the decree subsequently passed in accordance therewith has had the effect of confirming the devises made by the Will and confirming successive life-estates of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and whether that decree is binding on the parties to the present litigation. To appreciate the award and the proceedings which led up to it, it will be necessary to examine the claim put forward by each of the contending parties. By virtue of the Will certain properties were awarded to Murtaza Husain who would have been entitled to the whole estate of his brother, Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad, under section 22, clause (6) of the Act had he died intestate; the devise made in his favour did not, therefore, require registration. But Murtaza Husain was afraid that he might lose the property, if Rafi-uz-zaman who was the son of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa, the daughter of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad, claimed the entire estate under section 221 clause (4), by asserting that he had been treated by Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad in all respects as his own son. On the 5th August 1870 he entered into an agreement with Imtiaz-uz-zaman, the father of Rafi-uz-zaman, to consider the Will of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad invalid and to divide the whole property with him (Exhibit A47). Meanwhile mutation of names had already been effected in favour of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa in respect of the entire Taluqa Bhilwal Hasanpur and the villages of Sharifabad and Allahpur of Taluqa Khanpur and in favour of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Murtaza Husain jointly in respect of the remaining portion of Taluqa Khanpur (Exhibits 4 and 5) but certain proceedings were pending in regard to Taluqa Sikandarpur. On the 27th September 1870 Murtaza Husain filed certain objections claiming that he was entitled to the entire estate of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad under section 22, clause (6), of Act I of 1869, and that the Will executed by the deceased was invalid and unenforceable (Exhibit A54). The Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki was inclined to favour the Will but the Commissioner disagreed and expressed his opinion that Rafi-uz-zaman was entitled to the entire estate (Exhibit A51). On the 7th November 1870 the Financial Commissioner, however, directed that the orders passed by the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki in the mutation proceedings should not be interfered with (Exhibit A55). Subsequently, Murtaza Husain wrote two letters to Imtiaz-uz-zaman, the father of Rafi-uz-zaman, expressing his chagrin at attempts being made by certain persons to put Rafi-uz-zaman forward as the daughter's son, treated as a son by Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad, and to obtain mutation of names in respect of the entire estate in his favour (Exhibits A113 and A114).

Soon after there was a conflict between Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Murtaza Husain over the management of Taluqa Khanpur (Exhibits 16 and 17) and efforts were made by the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki to get a compromise effected. On the 9th February 1871 he wrote to the Deputy Commissioner of Rae Bareli, requesting him to postpone passing final orders in the mutation proceedings relating to Taluqa Sikandarpur and stating that the parties had agreed "to abide by the provisions of the Will of the late Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad", certain passages of which had caused the disputes, and that the issue raised in respect thereof would be submitted to private arbitration (Exhibit 2). The Deputy Commissioner of Rae Bareli, however, refused to postpone the mutation proceedings and directed mutation of names to be effected in favour of Murtaza Husain (Exhibit 3). But on the 14th February 1871 Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Murtaza Husain decided to refer the matters in dispute between them to arbitration and executed an agreement (Exhibit 6), the material portion whereof ran as follows—"Whereas in the presence of Mr. William Glynn, the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki, with our consent Chaudhri Ghulam Farid, taluqdar of Bari, Pargana Rudauli, and Raghunath Singh, taluqdar of Pali, have been appointed arbitrators to settle the dispute between the executant (Murtaza Husain, and the Chaudhrain Saheba, the the widow of brother Sarfaraz Ahmad, in accordance with the provisions entered in his Will and about the property not entered in the above-mentioned Will, now we do hereby declare and execute this document according to Act XVIII of 1869 (Act VIII of 1859) that on considering the terms entered in the Will and other matters in whatever way our referees will decide and settle our disputes we shall fully accept now and hereafter, and we will raise no objection to or resile from that decision hereafter." It is obvious from the agreement that the parties accepted the terms of the Will but were disagreed as to the interpretation of its terms and the application of some of the provisions thereof. There were also certain disputes about some other properties not covered by the Will. They wanted that the assistance of the Will should be invoked for the settlement of the disputes relating to the property covered thereby and they gave the arbitrators full authority to interpret and construe the Will and enforce its provisions in such manner as they thought proper. There were various statements of claim and replication put in by the parties between the 16th and the 19th February 1871, some of which went beyond the Will and were even inconsistent with it. If these statements are read serially it will be observed that, on the one side, Murtaza Husain went on urging his claim even apart from the Will and repelling any possible claim by the daughter's son, and, on the other, the lady insisted upon bringing Murtaza Husain back to the Will, the terms of which he had accepted under the agreement to refer to arbitration. The lady's further pleas were that Bhilwal Hasanpur was really her own property, as it belonged to her father, and that Murtaza Husain should not be allowed to manage the half share of Khanpur bequeathed to her by her husband. On the 19th February 1871 the arbitrators recorded a proceeding as to the matters in issue between the parties. They narrated, first, the pleadings of the parties and then the final statement of Murtaza Husain that the decision ought to be based on the Will and that of the lady that the only things to be looked at were the provisions of the Will. They then observed that the real dispute was over the provisions of paragraph 8 of the Will, and that the other dispute was whether Murtaza Husain should remain the manager of the half share of the lady in Taluqa Khanpur, excluding Sharifabad and Allahpur. They recorded the statements of the parties on each of those matters and about certain liabilities and assets, moveable and immoveable, not covered by the Will. In the course of the proceedings, Safdar Ali, the general agent of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, stated that the case had been referred to the arbitrators to explain the meaning of the Will and Murtaza Husain agreed that the decision ought to be made on the basis of the Will (Exhibit 8). Both of them then gave up the other titles set up by them in regard to the properties covered by the Will, and on the 19th February 1871 the arbitrators recorded: "After a long discussion the parties have agreed to this that they do not further press their different causes of action, namely, the claim for a partition according to the Muhammadan Law, and the inheritance based on custom and statutory law, but are agreed that the contents of the Will, in so far as they are disputed by them, be construed and explained, that in other respects the Will be upheld, but a decision be given with regard to such properties as are not mentioned in the Will, for instance, such villages as are separate from Taluqas Bhilwal and Khanpur mentioned in the Will, as also immoveable property in the possession of Chaudhrain Saheba and specification of debts and dastgardan (oral) liabilities be made to ascertain as to how much should be paid by each party (Exhibit 9). They then framed certain issues, the first two of which are of importance,—

(1) What is the true interpretation of paragraph 9 of the Will and what was the real intention of the testator, that is, whether the shares of both the parties should be partitioned with proprietary powers (malikana) in Taluqa Khanpur with the exception of Sharifabad and Allahpur where mutation is made in favour of the widow? (Note that t is refers to paragraph 8 of the Will). Who shall bear the darwazi expenses in each case?

(2) Whether Chaudhri Murtaza Husain should remain manager of the Khanpur estate according to the Will or whether the partition of that taluqa will be to the benefit of both the parties?

The next four issues are not pertinent to the present enquiry and the last and seventh issue was by way of test as to what each party would inherit under the Muhammadan Law.

The proceedings of the arbitrators make it clear that, to their understanding, their duty in regard to the properties covered by the Will was confined to the interpretation of clauses 8 and 9 of the Will. There were further statements put in by the parties (Exhibits A57 and 10) but they do not carry the matter any further so far as the arbitrators were concerned. On the 16th March 1871 the award was made. The decree at the end of the award gives in a tabular form the properties which were assigned in proprietary possession to Murtaza Husain and Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, respectively. To Murtaza Husain were given half of Taluqa Khanpur, half of Taluqa Sikandarpur and half the villages not covered by the Will. To Musammat Bechan-un-nisa were allotted Bhilwal, half of Taluqa Khanpur, half of Taluqa Sikandarpur, Sharifabad, and Allahpur, and a half of the villages not included in the Will. The claims of both the parties to the cash and moveables were dismissed. Addressing themselves to the question whether the partition between Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Murtaza Husain should be effected with proprietary rights or without any power in the capacity of munsarim or manager, they said that the provision in clause 8 of the Will, restraining an heir or successor from effecting a transfer, was entered simply for the sake of the protection of the property in that they could not accept it, firstly, because this wording was added, simply with a view to save the property from being wasted by way of advice (nasihatan); secondly; the withholding of the power of transfer in respect of such ancestral properties as have been divided in the lifetime of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad between him and Murtaza Husain is an obvious act of oppression; thirdly, such a Will in favour of the heirs is not allowed by the Muhammadan Law for the heir himself becomes the permanent owner; and, generally, according to the Muhammadan Law, the Will in favour of the heirs cannot be enforced without the consent of all the heirs. Referring to clause 9 they said. "As regards this point that Chaudhri Murtaza Husain, as long as he is alive, may remain the munsarim and when the daughter's son will be major he himself will look after his own affairs, we are of opinion that this wording is meant only for the management of the other half of Taluqa Khanpur and not as affecting the title (haqiat) of any party. Therefore, in our opinion, it should be partitioned with proprietary rights and the expenses to be incurred at the door will be paid by each party." (Exhibit 12). There cannot be any doubt on these facts that the arbitrators gave proprietary possession to each party with a full right of alienation according to their interpretation of the Will. Chaudhri Ghulam Farid wrote the judgment and the other arbitrator, Babu Ramnath Singh, appeneded a note, emphasizing: "I would not have agreed under any circumstances to the proprietary partition of the property of the taluqa but with a view to enforce the Will and in view of the reasons given in the judgment I agree with Chaudhri Ghulam Farid."

The learned Counsel for Mustafa Husain contends that the arbitrators had no power to go outside the reference and extend the estate created by the Will and that they could have only confirmed it. But the agreement gave full power to the arbitrators to settle the matters in dispute between the parties after due consideration of the terms of the Will and in view of what the parties subsequently stated, agreeing that the contents of the Will, in so far as they were disputed by them, be construed and explained (Exhibit 9) the arbitrators must be deemed to have had full authority to put such interpretation on clauses 8 and 9 of the Will as they thought proper. It is argued that the general agent of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa had admitted that under clause 8 of the Will no heir had any right of mortgage, sale or transfer and that his client had also no such right. But Murtaza Husain was not agreeable to that interpretation and contended that he was entitled to transfer as he was an heir and not merely a successor by devise. He further contended that he was entitled to manage the entire Taluqa Khanpur and to share in the village Sharifabad and Allahpur also. The arbitrators construed clause 8 as merely containing a direction or advise for the legatees to follow and came to the conclusion that each party was entitled to the division of the estate in proprietary right. In the view they took of clause 8 they could not have held it to be mandatory with regard to one person and directory in regard to another. A decree followed in accordance with the award which was confirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council. It was not then contended that the award of proprietary right to Murtaza Husain or to Musammat Bechan-un-nisa was beyond the jurisdiction of the arbitrators and ultra vires and after a decree passed in accordance therewith, no such objection can now be entertained. In the course of their judgment confirming the award their Lordships observed.—"They are sensible, on the one hand, of the extreme impolicy of allowing parties to get out of awards upon objections which really do not affect the substantial justice of the case, and, on the other hand, they feel the necessity of not allowing arbitrators to act without jurisdiction by doing that which the terms of the submission to arbitration do not entitle them to do. Upon the whole, however, their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the objection is not fatal to the filing of the award." Chowdhry Murtaza Hossein v. Musammat Bibi Bechun-un-nissa (7). As the award gave full proprietary estate to Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and to Murtaza Husain in the properties respectively awarded to them on what the arbitrators considered to be a right interpretation of clause 8 of the Will it is not open to the plaintiff who claims to derive his title from Murtaza Husain to go behind the decree and impeach the validity of what was then granted. The decree gave Musammat Bechan-un-nisa a full title and validated what might have been but for the award an act of trespass. She remained in proprietary possession thereafter in pursuance of the decree till her death in 1895.

The subsequent conduct of Murtaza Husain through whom one of the plaintiffs, Mustafa Husain, claims to derive his title, confirms the same view. On the 11th June 1878 Murtaza Husain and Musammat Bechan-un-nisa executed a mortgage-deed for a lac of rupees in favour of the Allahabad Bank, Ltd., (Exhibit C5) out of which Rs. 20,000 were taken by Murtaza Husain to pay the decree obtained by the Bank of Bengal against him and Rs. 80,000 were taken by Musammat Bechan-un-nisa to redeem a prior mortgage of certain villages of the Bhilwal estate and to pay personal debts due by her. The property mortgaged comprised certain villages of Taluqa Khanpur belonging to Murtaza Husain and Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and certain villages of Taluqas Bhilwal and Khanpur belonging solely to Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, the latter being described as owned and possessed by her. On the 14th June 1878 an indemnity bond was executed by Musammat Bechan-un-nisa in favour of Murtaza Husain, acknowledging that she was liable for Rs. 80,000 out of the sum of one lac taken from the Allahabad Bank, Ltd., and hypothecating certain villages of Taluqa Bhilwal for the discharge of any liability which Murtaza Husain might have incurred on account of her share of the debt, (Exhibit C6). In that indemnity bond the village Sharifabad and the six villages mortgaged with the Allahabad Bank, Limited, by Musammat Bechan-un-nisa were described as her separate property. The property hypothecated in that indemnity bond consisted of six villages of Taluqa Bhilwal other than those mortgaged before with the Allahabad Bank, Limited, and among other covenants an undertaking was given to Musammat Bechan-un-nisa that she shall not alienate or incumber any of the property hypothecated therein. At the time of registration Musammat Bechan-un-nisa was identified by Murtaza Husain, one of the present rival claimants.

On the 29th May 1880 Musammat Bechan-un-nisa executed another mortgage for Rs. 1,10,000 in favour of the Allahabad Bank, Limited, for the purpose of paying the money due by her on account of the previous mortgage and hypothecated certain villages of Taluqa Bhilwal and Taluqa Khanpur, describing the same as owned and possessed by her (Exhibit C29). A similar mortgage was made by Mustafa Husain and Fida Husain, sons of Murtaza Husain, who had died meanwhile, for Rs. 35,000 to pay the money due by their father on account of the previour mortgage (see reference in Exhibit C39).

Musammat Bechan-un-nisa was identified again at the time of registration by Mustafa Husain. If Musammat Bechan un-nisa had only a life-interest under the award it is hardly likely that Murtaza Husain would have joined her in executing the mortgage-deed in favour of the Allahabad Bank, Limited, or obtained an indemnity bond from her, much less allowed her to describe herself as the owner and possessor of the villages mortgaged. Mustafa Husain, too, would have hardly attended at the time of registration to help her in getting the deeds registered.

On the 2nd October 1879 Musammat Bechan-un-nisa applied for the partition of certain villages of Taluqas Khanpur and Sikandarpur, basing her claim on the award and decree confirming the same and describing herself as holding proprietary rights therein (Exhibit A67). This application was opposed by Murtaza Husain who claimed that he was entitled to manage the same under the Will of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad until Rafi-uz-zaman attained majority, but he asserted no title of any kind in himself, vested or contingent (Exhibit A73). He, no doubt, referred to the award of the 16th March 1871 and mentioned that the arbitrators had no power to make a decision contrary to the Will, but his sole object in referring to that was to protect the interest of Rafi-uz-zaman as between whom and Musammat Bechan-un-nisa no decision, he said, had been arrived at. The objections of Murtaza Husain were disallowed by the Assistant Commissioner of Bara Banki on the 10th January 1880 (Exhibit A75) and the partition was eventually completed on the 15th February 1882 (Exhibit C4).

On the 14th September 1885 Musammat Bechan-un-nisa executed a Will by which she devised her entire estate to Rafi-uz-zaman, the son of her daughter Musammat Zainab-un-nisa, (Exhibit C27) but owing to the death of Rafi-uz-zaman on the 9th June 1891 she had to alter her disposition and appointed Musammat Zainab-un-nisa as her heir and successor on her death (Exhibit C28).

Subsequently, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa gave birth to her second son Shafiq-uz-zaman. Musammat Bechan-un-nisa then altered her disposition again. On the 15th September 1893 she executed a Will by which she devised her entire property in favour of Shafiq-uz-zaman and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa for their lives without any power of alienation with a heritable and vested remainder in favour of the latter on the death of the former (Exhibit A7). In that she referred again to the award and its confirmation by their Lordships of the Privy Council and claimed to have been in proprietary possession of the entire estate as the sole owner with full power of transfer.

Meanwhile, on the 30th December 1882, the Court of Wards assumed the superintendence of the estate of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa at her request for the purpose of paying debts due by her. During the course of their management the Court of Wards paid a guzara allowance of Rs. 50 per mensem to Musammat Manzur-un-nisa and Musammat Zarif-un-nisa each. These were continued, according to the evidence of Nisar Ahmad Khan, the husband of Musammat Manzur-un-nisa (P. W. No. 2), even after the death of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa, and there are pay bills and receipts on the record evidencing these payments (Exhibits F49, F50, F52, and F60 to F62). Some of the latter payments were made by Shafiq-uz-zaman and his trustees. If Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa possessed only a life-estate the acceptance of a guzara from the Court of Wards, which held the charge of their estate, may be conclusive, but the acceptance of the guzara from Shafiq-uz-zaman whose title is now disputed and his trustees is not without its significance.

The learned Additional Judge, who decided the subsequent suit, treated the awards as a family settlement. But a family settlement implies a mutual settlement by certain contending parties, belonging to the same family of some disputed claims and rights, and an award of arbitration is not a settlement of that character. It is the decision of a tribunal constituted by the contending parties for the settlement of their disputes and, in so far as it is a valid and lawful award, it is binding on the parties to the arbitration proceedings and their privies. Whether such an award is binding on persons whose interests are analogous to those of the parties to the arbitration proceedings is a matter which is not capable of an inflexible answer. In each case it has to be determined whether the person who agreed to the reference to arbitration was seeking to assert a right common to himself and others and had acted fairly in representing those whose interests he had undertaken to protect. Musammat Bechan-un-nisa did not seek in the present case to represent the interests of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa or Rafi-uz-zaman. There is no reference to the interest claimable by them in the agreement of reference. Musammat Bechan-un-nisa had already succeeded in getting mutation of names effected in pursuance of the Will in regard to the property allotted to her except Taluqa Sikandarpur, about which an application for mutation of names was pending. The danger of Rafi-uz-zaman getting the entire property under section 22, clause (4) of Act I of 1869 in defeasance of the Will was present and troubling Murtaza Husain. Musammat Bechan-un-nisa was setting up her rights under the Will. Murtaza Husain was deniyng the validity of the Will and claiming certain rights independently of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad and also as his heir. For the latter purpose he was also anxious to show that Rafi-uz-zaman was not an heir under section 22, clause (4) of Act I of 1869 and had no preferential right. He subsequently agreed to abide by the Will in regard to the property covered thereby and asked the arbitrators to decide the matters in difference between him and Musammat Bechan-un-nisa by construing and explaining the Will as far as it affected their rights. In regard to the property not covered by the Will the arbitrators asked themselves how the division would have to be made, if the Will had been in existence. They determined the legal shares to which Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and other heirs of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad would be entitled and decided to allot a half share to Murtaza Husain and the remainder to Musammat Bechan-un-nisa after taking into consideration what they had already received under the Will. They admitted that Musammat Zainab-un-nisa was entitled to an 8-anna share under the Muhammadan Law but they preferred to treat Taluqa Khanpur, including the village Sharifabad, as the property of Chaudhri Husain Bakhsh and Taluqa Bhilwal Hasanpur and Sikandarpur as the property of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad and they awarded Murtaza Husain a 7/20ths share out of the former and a 10/72nds share out of the latter, exclusive of the property not covered by the Will, in proprietary right. No rights were reserved in favour of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa.

Musammat Bechan-un-nisa applied to enforce the award as if she was claiming a proprietary interest in the property covered by the Will. She ignored the rights of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa under the Muhammadan Law in regard to the property not covered by the Will. Before the arbitrators she insisted on the rights conferred by the Will being considered, but when she sought to enforce the award she claimed the rights conferred on her by the award to the detriment of the rights conferred on Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and her issue, by the Will. The right to the immediate possession of the estate after the death of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad was the main question which the arbitrators had before them for consideration and by a curious medley of the provisions of the Will and the provisions of the Muhammadan Law they arrived at the conclusion that Murtaza Husain was entitled to certain properties in proprietary right. By granting a decree for partition in proprietary right, the award practically ignored the rights claimable by Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and her issue and it cannot be said that Musammat Bechan-un-nisa was representing them when she obtained a decree in enforcement of the award.

It is argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that the right awarded to Musammat Bechan-un-nisa by the award represented in a cumulative form the rights of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and the issue of the latter, but in the application made by her to enforce the award she said nothing to indicate that she was seeking to enforce rights common to her and to her daughter and her issue (Exhibit 14). Section 11, Explanation VI, of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to a common right asserted by certain persons on behalf of themselves and others but not to rights which are not common but several and distinct as in this instance. The validity of the Will might have been an issue common to the rights claimable by Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and the issue of the latter, but the rights awarded to each by the Will were separate and distinct, and any construction placed in regard to the validity of the Will or the rights conferred thereby would not bind persons who were not parties to the litigation and did not derive title through them.

The plaintiff Mustafa Husain, derives his title through his father, Murtaza Husain who would have been entitled to the estate under section 22, clause (6) of Act I of 1869, had Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad died intestate, Murtaza Husain accepted the Will and agreed before the arbitrators that his rights and those of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, the contending claimant, should be determined on the basis of the Will, and the interpretation or construction then placed on some of the provisions of the Will and the rights awarded by the arbitrators are, therefore, binding on him and the plaintiff Mustafa Husain, who derives his title from him.

By virtue of the Will Musammat Bechan-un-nisa was awarded an absolute estate. The plaintiff Mustafa Husain does not seek to claim any title through her. Musammat Zainab-un-nisa was one of her heirs and she and her heir can set up the award and the decree passed in accordance with it as a bar to the determination of any question then decided between Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Murtaza Husain. To that extent the award and the decree are binding on Mustafa Husain and the legal representatives of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa. On behalf of some of the plaintiffs reliance is placed on the decision in Badar Bee v. Habib Merican Noordin (8), Ramachandra Rao v. A. N. S. Ramachandra Rao (9) and George Henry Hook v. Administrator-General of Bengal (10). In the case first mentioned, there was a decision on the construction of the testator's Will as to the destination of the funds realised from the operation of the trust and that decision was recognised or re-affirmed by a subsequent decree which was duly served on such of the residuary legatees as were not parties to the proceedings, and it was held in those circumstances that the decision was practically a decision inter partes and cannot be re-opened. In the second case, a decision in a land acquisition dispute as to whether a certain person had an absolute estate or a life-interest was held to be a bar to a subsequent decision of the same matter between the persons whose titles were so declared or their representatives-in-interest. In the case last mentioned, the decision in an administration suit, in which the question of the destination of the income or the corpus of the fund on the happening of a certain contingency, was held to bar the subsequent determination of the same matter. Those cases bear no analogy to the present case. By virtue of the award Musammat Bechan-un-nisa was not granted a life-estate. She was granted a full proprietary title. The award could be questioned by those who were no parties to the arbitration proceedings and who denied that Musammat Bechan-un-nisa had anything more than a life-estate under the Will, but not by a person who was a party to the arbitration or to the decree passed in accordance with it or by his representatives-in-interest. The effect of the award and the decree is to bar any rights claimable by Murtaza Husain or his representatives-in-interest in excess thereof. The property in dispute must, therefore, be deemed to have been held by Musammat Bechan-un-nisa in proprietary right and it passed on her death to her heirs under the Muhammadan Law.

The devise made by Musammat Bechan-un-nisa in favour of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and Shafiq-uz-zaman by her Will of the 15th September 1893 is inoperative because under the Muhammadan Law a devise in favour of one of the heirs is inoperative without the consent of the other heirs. The heirs of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa at the time of her death were her daughter and two residuaries, Ahmad Husain and Abdul Razzaq. It is stated that they were present at the time the Will was executed, but, as the learned Subordinate Judge who decided the first of these suits points out, the evidence produced on that point is untrustworthy. Ahmad Husain and Abdul Razzaq did not at any time claim the estate. Musammat Zainab-un-nisa obtained mutation of names in her favour in respect of the entire estate and she remained in possession thereof till her death in 1907.

Her possession was adverse to the said residuaries and she will be deemed to have acquired an absolute title to the entire property partly by inheritance and partly by adverse possession for a period of more than twelve years at the time of her death.

It is argued on behalf of one of the plaintiffs that Musammat Zainab-un-nisa was content to take a life-estate in pursuance of the Will of her father Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad, and that she never set up any higher title during the period of her possession. It appears that an application was made by Musammat Zainab-un-nisa on the 22nd March 1895 on behalf of herself and her son, Shafiq-uz-zaman wherein she stated that her mother, Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, was in proprietary possession of the property in dispute as an absolute owner under the award of the 16th March 1871, and set up a claim on the basis of the Will executed by her on the 15th September 1893. The Deputy Commissioner thereupon reported the facts to the higher Authorities and asked for their instructions before taking any action. On the 1st April 1895 an application was filed by Mustafa Husain for mutation of names in his favour in respect of the same property; but it was opposed by Musammat Zainab-un-nisa on the ground mentioned in her previous application and also on the ground that she was entitled to inherit irrespective of her mother's Will (Exhibit A 99). The Board of Revenue directed the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki to have mutation of names effected in favour of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa alone on the basis of the Will of the late Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad. On the 20th June 1895 the Chief Commissioner of Oudh directed that Musammat Zainab-un-nisa was disqualified to hold the estate and that the Court of Wards should continue in possession of the same as manager on her behalf. An application for mutation of names was made accordingly by the Deputy Commissioner in charge of the estate on behalf of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa as the heir of her mother, Musammat Bechan-un-nisa. It was opposed by Mustafa Husain who contended that Musammat Bechan-un-nisa had only a life-interest and that on her death the estate devolved on him according to the custom of the family and Act I of 1869. The Assistant Collector directed mutation of names to be effected in favour of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa, holding that she was entitled to the said property by virtue of the Will effected by Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad and that executed by Musammat Bechan-un-nisa in her favour. On appeal it was held that if the Will executed by Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad granting a limited interest to Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa was invalid, the possession of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa must be deemed to have been adverse and the claim of Mustafa Husain was in any event barred by limitation. It was also held that the decree passed in accordance with the award was binding on the parties (Exhibit A102). The order directing the entry of the name of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa in the place of her deceased mother was, therefore, upheld. Musammat Zainab-un-nisa thereafter remained in possession of the estate till her death in 1907.

There is nothing in the applications for mutations of names made by Musammat Zainab-un-nisa to show that she claimed only a life-interest in the property in dispute. The letter sent by the Board of Revenue to the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki (Exhibit 316) no doubt directed that mutation of names should be obtained in favour of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa on the basis of the Will of the late Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad, but the Court of Wards was then in possession of the estate pending the decision of the question of title in the mutation proceedings, and till the lady was declared to be disqualified the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki was directed to retain superintendence of the estate on her behalf under sections 162 and 165 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1876) then in force. Any statements made either by the Deputy Commissioner or by the Board of Revenue in derogation of her rights would not be deemed to have been made by them on her behalf or as her agent. What was said by the Board of Revenue was, moreover, merely an expression of opinion by persons who had no authority to bind Musammat Zainab-un-nisa at the time.

ZARIF-UN-NISA v. SHAFIQ-UZ-ZAMAN.

In the applications made by the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki for mutation of names on her behalf she was only described as an heir of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa (Exhibit 6). The judgment of the Assistant Collector who decided the mutation proceedings indicates that Musammat Zainab-un-nisa prosecuted the litigation herself through her Counsel and claimed full proprietary title for herself and her son (Exhibit A9). The order for mutatition of names contained no reservation that she was only to have a life-estate. Musammat Zainab-un-nisa all along asserted her title under the Will of her mother and under the Muhammadan Law. She perfected her title by adverse possession against her residuary heirs, Ahmad Husain and Abdul Razzaq, who never claimed any share by remaining in possession for over twelve years. She could tack her possession to that of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa who had similarly been in possession under the award, which gave her a proprietary title since 1871.

If Musammat Bechan-un-nisa had an absolute title and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa had been in adverse possession of the disputed property since the death of her mother, Mustafa Husain would not have any right whatever. If, on the other hand, Musammat Bechan-un-nisa had only a life-estate the claim of Mustafa Husain would still be barred under Art. 141 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) as he took no steps to obtain possession after he failed in the mutation proceedings within twelve years of her death. Art. 144 has no application for as observed in Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parbatibai (11) that Article does not apply where a suit is otherwise specially provided for. Art. 141 provides for a suit by a person entitled to possession on the death of a Hindu or Muhammadan female, but, as explained in Ghisa Singh v. Gajraj Singh (12) and Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh v. Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (13), it does not apply where the Hindu or Muhammadan female has been in possession of a full estate.

A reference has been made on behalf of Mustafa Husain to the application made by Musammat Bechan-un-nisa on the 23rd October 1889 for the release of her property from the management of the Court of Wards (Exhibit 22) and to a similar application made by Musammat Zainab-un-nisa on the 12th April 1898 (Exhibit 23). In the former application it was stated on behalf of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa by her Counsel that she had presented a petition on the 14th September 1882 asking the Court of Wards to assume the management of her estate because under the Will of her husband she and her daughter Musammat Zainab-un-nisa had only a life-interest in the said property and her grandson, Rafi-uz-zaman, was a minor. In the latter application Musammat Zainab-un-nisa made a similar reference to the Will of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad and stated that the property in question had been beqeathed to Musammat Bechan-un-nisa for her life with remainder to her daughter, the petitioner, and the remainder over to such issue, male or female of the petitioner as should survive her. But any admissions of that character made by Musammat Bechan-un-nisa or Zainab-un-nisa as to the construction or the effect of the Will of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad would not estop them from claiming the full estate, if it was subsequently discovered that their interpretation of the Will was not correct or that by virtue of a subsequent award larger rights had been conceded. If Murtaza Husain could not go behind the award, his son, Mustafa Husain, could still less do so. An application was made by Shafiq-uz-zaman, during the lifetime of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa for the entry of his name in the revenue papers in the place of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa in accordance with the Will of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa of the 15th September 1893 (Exhibit 195). He suggested that he was the holder of an absolute estate under that Will and that his mother, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa, held and enjoyed the property with him during the time of her natural life, without any power of transfer. The Special Manager of the Court of Wards called on Musammat Zainab-un-nisa to enquire what she had to say about the matter. Her reply was that she would be pleased if the name of her son was entered jointly with her name in the Government and estate papers provided there was no partition of the estate as long as she was alive and that she spirit of the Will under which both she and her son inherited the property from Musammat Bechan-un-nisa was strictly maintained (Exhibit C 18). On the 30th November 1906 the Board of Revenue replied that the Will of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa was not consistent with that of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad under which Shafiq-uz-zaman was only allowed a reversionary interest and asked the Deputy Commissioner to intimate to Shafiq-uz-zaman its inability to accede to his request, (Exhibit 198). For the purpose of combating that view, Shafiq-uz-zaman took steps to obtain the opinion of the late Sir Sundar Lal, an eminent Advocate of these Provinces, in regard to his title to the estate. In that opinion the late Sir Sundar Lal, after giving a statement of the case and question submitted to him for opinion said:—"Under the recent ruling of the Privy Council in the case of Balraj Kunwar v. Jagatpal Singh (4) the Will in favour of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa was void under section 13 of Act I of 1869. Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad was a taluqdar within the meaning of that Act and on his death the estate passed to his brother. By the award made between the brother on the one side and Musammat Bechan-un-nisa on the other which was confirmed by the Privy Council, the lady got the property in dispute in absolute estate. She was not a taluqdar and the succession to her property is governed by the rules of Muhammadan Law. She could by Will dispose of this estate to the extent permitted by the Muhammadan Law. By the Will she has made, her estate is conferred on her daughter and her daughter's son jointly. The daughter has a life-estate with remainder to the son. The daughter's son has no present right in the estate under the Muhammadan Law, but as the daughter assents to the estate conferred on her by the Will, there is no difficulty" (Exhibit C31). This opinion was given on the 20th October 1907. Musammat Zainab-un-nisa died on the 30th August 1907. Shafiq-uz-zaman then got mutation of names effected in his favour and obtained a release of the estate from the Court of Wards by raising a loan from the Bank of Upper India, Limited, and paying the debt then due by the estate.

It would be necessary to refer to the opinion of the late Sir Sundar Lal hereafter in another connection. It is sufficient here to state that neither Musammat Zainab-un-nisa nor Shafiq-uz-zaman relied at any time in support of her or his title on the Will of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad. In the application for mutation of names made by Musammat Zainab-un-nisa she relied on the Will made by Musammat Bechan un-nisa and also on her right of inheritance. Shafiq-uz-zaman similarly relied on the Will of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and asserted his absolute title to the property left by her. So far as Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and Shafiq-uz-zaman were concerned, the Will of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad was, for all intents and purposes, invalid under section 13 of Act I of 1869 and he must, therefore, be deemed to have died intestate as to his estate. The effect of the award was to help the legatees to carry out what the arbitrators thought represented the wishes of the testator; or, in other words, to substitute for the title sought to be granted by the Will a title recognised and validated by the award. The arbitrators attempted to act in conformity with that Will, so far as they could interpret it, it is immaterial whether they interpreted it rightly or wrongly. They had the authority and the jurisdiction to interpret the same and they gave their award in accordance with their interpretation of it. That award was confirmed by a decree by which, if Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Murtaza Husain were awarded absolute estates, the parties who claim to derive their title from them must be deemed to be bound. It is equally immaterial what Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa thought about the construction of the Will. The title of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa rested on the award and the decree confirming it. The award gave a proprietary right which passed on the death of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa to Musammat Zainab-un-nisa, her daughter, and on the death of the latter to her lawful heir, as if no Will of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad had been in existence.

The consent of the parties cannot validate a Will, which is otherwise void or unenforceable. It may create a new title to take the place of that which was inchoate, defective or imperfect. Whether the award and the decree created such a new title or merely confirmed and validated the disposition made by the Will in favour of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and the children of the latter, the claim of Mustafa Husain must in any event fail.

We now come to a discussion of the most difficult question in the suit filed by one of the sisters and the heirs of another sister as to the persons entitled to succeed to the property on the death of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa; in other words, whether Shafiq-uz-zaman was entitled to the whole estate on the death of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa or whether the plaintiffs in the earlier of these suits were entitled to half the estate under the Muhammadan Law. It is argued on behalf of the latter that under the Will of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad the children of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa were entitled to share equally, and, that if the Will was not operative, the burden lay on the defendants to prove any custom varying the ordinary Muhammadan Law of inheritance. The Will was clearly inoperative, because of its failure to satisfy the conditions imposed by section 13 of Act I of 1869. The arbitrators passed no decree in favour of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa or her children. They divided the estate covered by the Will and that not covered by it between Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Murtaza Husain and directed each of them to pay half the debts. They refused to allow Musammat Bechan-un-nisa the dower-debt due to her which, even according to Murtaza Husain, amounted to nothing less than Rs. 30,000. They referred to the share to which Musammat Zainab-un-nisa would have been entitled under the Muhammadan Law in the property not covered by the Will but they awarded no share to her. They awarded the properties allotted respectively to Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Murtaza Husain in proprietary rights, and as the Will executed by Musammat Bechan-un-nisa was invalid, we are relegated to the method of succession to be followed in the case of a woman dying intestate in the family of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad. Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad did not hold the Bhilwal estate as a trustee for Musammat Bechan-un-nisa. After the confiscation of Oudh the settlement of the estate was made with him and a Sanad was granted recognising his absolute title to it. His name was entered in List No. II in respect of Taluqas Bhilwal and Khanpur showing that the succession to his estate was governed by the family custom of a single heir succession. By virtue of the award the estate passed to a person who would not have succeeded to if under Act I of 1869 and the incidents of succession, applicable to the estate, as laid down by the Statute, ceased to be applicable to the estate after it passed into the hands of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa. The family customs governing the possession to the estate, however, continued to be applicable. Two such customs were pleaded by the defence (1) a single heir succession and (2) exclusion of daughters by sons. The custom of the family of Latf-ullah ceased to be applicable, because the estate was no longer the estate of Lutf-ullah, and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa, who inherited it in part from Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and acquired it in part by adverse possession, was not governed by it. The family custom of impartibility governing the estate in the hands of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad could govern it in the hands of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa. In the hands of the former section 8 of Act I of 1869 raised a conclusive presumption that the estate was governed by the custom of a single heir succession. In the hands of the latter the existence of such a family custom could be deduced from the entry of the estate in List No. II, but the deduction would be rebuttable. In Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan (14) the dispute centered round certain non-taluqadari properties a share in which was claimed by a younger son and it was held by this Court and by the Privy Council that the presumption applicable to an estate entered in List No. II would also apply to an estate not so entered but in regard to the latter the presumption would not be conclusive. We think that the presumption cannot be wholly done away with on the estate being removed from the provisions of the Act so long as it remains in the family, though it may not be conclusive under section 10. From the entry in List No. II based on a specific family custom, there arises a presumption of a pre-existing custom attached to that estate, on which the inclusion of that estate in List No. II was based.

In Ali Muhammad Khan v. Sajjadi Begam [Syed Azam Shah v. Syed Ahmad Shah] (6) it was held that the effect of a transfer to a third person was to render the property partible and that the mere fact that the alienee was the wife of the alienor made no difference. In the opinion of the learned Judges, property given to a woman becomes, under the Muhammadan Law, an independent stock of descent and the character if impartibility ceases to be applicable to the estate because the custom is not one by which an alienee can be bound. In the present suit the property has come back to Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad's family and we are not discussing succession to Sarfaraz Ahmad's widow. In the case above cited, the learned Judges applied the ordinary Muhammadan Law of succession to the property held by a daughter and by a son which they received by inheritance from the widow Musammat Hurmuzi Begam. But it should be noted that there was no discussion there about the applicability of the custom of the family to properties in the hands of a daughter and a son of Jamshed Ali Khan. It does not appear to have been argued. It may also be pointed out that the judgment was delivered a year prior to the judgment of the Privy Council in Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan (the Deogaon case) (14). There is also a distinguishing feature in so far that Musammat Hurmuzi Begam was a transferee under a valid deed of gift and the provisions of section 15 of the Act applied to her, while Musammat Bechan-un-nisa was not. Musammat Bechan-un-nisa may properly be said to have acquired the property under a decree of Court, a kind of transfer to which no particular incidents are attached in the Act. The entail provisions of Act I of 1869 have repeatedly been examined by their Lordships of the Privy Council and all these decisions have been recently considered in the case of Sitla Bakhsh Singh v. Sital Singh (15). That particular case related to the property of a taluqdar in List No. III in whose case no presumption of a pe-existing custom of single heir succession arose. The rule of primogeniture in List No. III was a creature of Statute Law and when the property was freed from the limitations of the Act the rule failed to apply. As regards the property of taluqdars of List No. II, the pre-existing custom will cease to have application while it is in the possession of a person out of that particular family. While it was in the hands of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, the label attaching to it of a single heir succession was removed, because the custom of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad's family did not apply to her. "If the prescribed line of succession is broken by a transfer or bequest of the entailed estate to a person outside the prescribed line, it seems not unreasonable that the fetter of the entail, such as it is, should no longer apply to the estate" [Balraj Kunwar's case (4)]. At the same time the custom in Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad's family was not abrogated and would attach to the property when it returned to the family in the hands of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa. The property was not an estate under the Act in the hands of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa; and so, though we may not agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that there was under section 10 conclusive evidence of the existence of the custom which cannot be rebutted, [the entry of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad's name in List No. II is a fact of importance and the evidence on the record must be examined from that point of view, in the light of the presumption of the existence of the custom of a single heir succession, in his family deducible therefrom.

It should be made clear that the Sikandarpur estate entered in List No. V will not be differently treated. On the establishment of a particular custom in Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad's family that property also will devolve according to custom. When this estate went out of the limitations of the Act on the death of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad, the rule of descent by primogeniture accepted by Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad disappeared but the family custom of succession remained.

Before proceeding to consider the evidence adduced in the case it is necessary to examine briefly the history and the vicissitudes of the family to which the estate belonged. The family is descended from one Khwaja Suleman, who had three sons, of whom Muhammad and Nasir had children. The two stocks are alluded to in the evidence of witnesses as Mohammadi and Nasiri (vide the evidence of Fida Husain D. W. No. 8) Ghulam Husain, son of Khwaja Mohammad, is said to have founded the taluq. He was succeeded by his son, Ghulam Shafi, who was succeeded by his son Jamal-ud-din, It is not clear whether Ghulam Shafi and Jamal-ud-din were only sons or not. A cousin, Mohammad Qaem, killed Jamal-ud-din, took over his estate and mortgaged it by conditional sale to Farahat-ullah, his nephew. Farahat-ullah left one son, Nur Ali, whose widow was Musammat Kifayat Bibi, and six daughters one of whom was Bibi Barwan, wife of Imam Bakhsh, grandfather of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad. Mohammad Qaem had one son, Mohammad Mah, who left two widows, Musammat Bikani and Musammat Raji and one daughter, Musammat Amiran, who was married to Mansur Ali. Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad and his father Husain Bakhsh, obtained deeds from Musammat Bikani, Musammat Kifayat and Mansur Ali. These facts appear from the deeds of transfer and the Court proceedings in litigation between Husain Bakhsh and Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad, on the one side and Husain Bakhsh's half brother, Azam Ali, on the other. Husain Bakhsh was a son of Imam Bakhsh by one wife, Bibi Barwan, and Azam Ali by another wife. The deeds of gift of Musammat Kifayat in favour of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad and of Musammat Bikani and Mansur Ali in favour of Husain Bakhsh, are of 1237 (or 1825 A. D.) 1260 and 1266 Hijri respectively. The earliest litigation is of 1845 when the Royal Decree of the Nawabi times was passed. The Court held that except Sulemanpur the rest of the property was not paternal ancestral estate of the plaintiff, Azam Ali, and that Husain Bakhsh had inherited the property from his mother. The Court, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit except as regards Sulemanpur, which was ordered to be divided between the parties in accordance with the Muhammadan Law. This judgment shows that Nur Ali survived his father. In this case only the office of chaudhri and the nankar right attached to it were claimed on behalf of the defendant by right of primogeniture according to custom. The finding of the Court was that the defendant should remain in possession of the property inherited from his mother and of the office of chaudhri and the nankar right attached to it, but should partition the village of Sulemanpur, which was ancestral property. After the death of Husain Bakhsh the same dispute arose between Azam Ali and the sons of Husain Bakhsh and in 1856 the matter was referred to arbitration, who passed an award. It is mentioned in this award that the ilaqa and village of Khanpur had been scattered like the leaves of trees in autumn after the death of Mohammad Qaem and that Imam Bakhsh, father of Husain Bakhsh, got the property together under one ownership through inheritance and gift. The arbitrators held that 8 villages were held jointly by both branches of the family (Mohammadi and Sulemani) and that they should be divided between the descendants. As regards the other 34 villages they held that Husain Bakhsh was the rightful owner and the plaintiffs had no title to it. There was also a dispute about the property of Mohammad Mah between Mohammad Mah's son, Roshan Ali, and daughter's son, Haji Ahmad. The arbitrators ordered that the two shares out of the property would go to Roshan Ali and one to Haji Ahmad. No action appears to have been taken on this award and in the following year there was a second arbitration where all the surviving descendants of Mohammad and Nasir claimed their shares of the property from Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad and Murtaza Husain. The second award recites that the disputes in the neighbourhood are decided on the basis of custom and the parties to the suit are also in the habit of acting upon custom and are not acquainted with the dogmas of religion, but in this particular case they promised to abide by the decision of the arbitrators according to Muhammadan Law. In this award it was ordered that 16 villages shall be divided between the parties and that Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad and Murtaza Husain shall remain exclusive owners of the other villages. The division of the 16 villages was left to the parties who agreed by mutual consent to fix their shares. The two awards did not have effect, because the Mutiny followed soon after and the desire of the British Government was to settle the property with a single owner. Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad was in actual possession and obtained Summary Settlement in his favour in 1858. As regards Khanpur Taluqa Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad declared:—"This taluqa was in the possession of me, the deponent, since three years and I have got another brother Murtaza Husain. No other person has been in possession or joint. We are in possession of one village only named Lakhri." Whether this was a declaration of the interest of Murtaza Husain or not the settlement was made with Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad alone. In 1864 Azam Ali again tried to oust Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad, this time from one village Thalwara. The defence then put forward by Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad was that he was its owner according to the custom of the country which was for the eldest brother to possess the estate and maintain his relatives. He alleged that Thalwara was leased to Azam Ali by way of maintenance. As already observed, the Local Government was at the time desirous of conserving taluqdar property under the belief that a succession by primogeniture was the custom of the country. The Settlement Officer observed: "There can be no doubt that the custom of the country as regards the possession of the estate is as stated by the defendants. Moreover, the settlement was made with the defendant alone as taluqdar without any mention at that time of co-sharers." Azam Ali's suit was, therefore, dismissed and this decree was confirmed by the Commissioner. The Settlement Commissioner, however, did not depend on any custom of the country but was of opinion that, according to the custom of the family, the eldest so inherited the property while the younger sons obtained only maintenance and that it was not customary in the family for the estate to be divided. In 1867 Azam Ali again essayed to establish title to a share in the Khanpur Taluqa against Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad. The plaintiff based his claim by right of inheritance as one of the heirs of Imam Bakhsh. The defendant raised various pleas, and urged inter alia,—

(1) that the matter was settled by the Royal Decree referred to above,

(2) that after the British rule the defendant had obtained a settlement,

(3) that in the Settlement Court it was proved that a custom existed under which the eldest son succeeded to the estate and looked after the younger brothers,

(4) that the defendant inherited the property from the mother of his father Husain Bakhsh.

The British Indian Association's judgment reviewed the previous litigation including the orders of the Settlement Court. In that judgment is quoted a judgment of the Financial Commissioner to the effect "Whatever may be the plaintiff's proprietary rights there is no proof of their existence during the native rule and whatever may be his rights they have been destroyed for good by the Summary Settlement dated 30th May 1867." As regards the custom on which the decision of the Settlement Court was based the Association observed: "But as a matter of fact the defendant never proved this alleged custom and the Royal Decree also does not show any clear finding as to the existence of any such custom in respect of zemindari ilaqa." The Association, however, disallowed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the entire taluqa was acquired by the defendants' father by right of inheritance through his mother who was not the mother of the plaintiff Azam Ali. The only award in favour of the plaintiff was that the defendant should pay a cash allowance of Rs. 600 per annum to the plaintiff by way of maintenance or land yielding the same amount of profit. It may be noted that before the Association Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad filed the three deeds of gift as may be seen from the proceedings of the Association. The wajib-ul-arzes of Subeha, Bhilwal and Khanpur throw no light on the matter of any custom of the family. In the wajib-ul-arz of Khanpur it is stated that the village was established by Chaudhri Khan Mohammad, but no such name appears in the pedigree supplied by both parties.

On the basis of this history the appellants' learned Counsel argued that no custom of single heir succession existed and that Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad based his title on the deeds of gift obtained from various persons. On behalf of the defence it was urged that the deeds of transfer were fictitious; that the awards referred to above were in the nature of a compromise and not really decisions of arbitrators, and that when Mohammad Qaem transferred his property to Farhat-ullah, nothing could have remained with his heirs Musammat Bikani and Munsur Ali to transfer. It was also pointed out that the two deeds of gift by Musammat Bikani and Munsur Ali were subsequent to the Royal Decree which raised the presumption that they were obtained by Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad by way of precaution against attacks by possible claimants to the property. The first deed by Bibi Kifayat gives no details of property and it is significant that the Nawabi Government had settled Taluqa Khanpur with Husain Bakhsh ten years previously. The deed is of 1237 Hijri, and it is mentioned in the Royal Decree that the Khanpur Taluqa was settled with Husain Bakhsh since 1227 Hijri. It is obvious that Imam Bakhsh obtained possession of the Khanpur Taluqa with the strong hand, when no one remained in the family of his wife to compete with him to obtain the good will and favour of the Nawabi rule. As rightly commented upon by the learned Counsel for the defence, one main fact holds the attention that there was always a single owner of the taluqa. Just as Imam Bakhsh possessed himself of his father-in-law's property in Khanpur, we have seen that Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad took hold of Bhilwal, the taluqa of his father-in-law. The strongest men in the family, even though a connection only by marriage, succeeded to a taluqa in the pre-British times of unsettled Government. This was to be expected, as he would be the person most likely to pay the revenue to the Government. One thing is clear, there was always one owner and never more than one. It may be conceded that in the Royal Court, Husain Bakhsh based his claim on inheritance from his mother and not on single heir succession and that the British Indian Association gave an opinion adverse to the establishment of such a custom. These, however, are not material points. The object of a litigant is to win and Husain Bakhsh may have considered it more advisable to plead succesion to his mother's estate. It may be remembered that such a defence would save him from paying maintenance allowance to his half-brother, Azam Ali. The opinion of the British Indian Association may be taken as that of a Court, which was not pertinent because a decree was passed in favour of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad on other grounds. Against this opinion there is the opinion of the Settlement Commissioner in favour of a family custom.

Some stress has been laid on behalf of the plaintiff to the first of these suits on the instances in certain cases in which a division was decreed in accordance with the Muhammadan Law. But, as stated by Suleman Ahmad (P. W. No. 8), customs were at times disregarded during the pre-British period and the rules of the Muhammadan Law were enforced to regulate the succession. Sometimes the parties agreed to waive the custom, at other times the rules of the Muhammadan Law were forced upon them. The law did not then extend to custom the sanctity which has now been extended to it by the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876). The award of the 21st April 1865 affords an instance in which the custom appears to have been set up and waived (Exhibit 245). It says "Whereas disputes are often settled in this neighbourhood on the basis of custom and these people are also in the habit of acting upon customs and are not aware of the local dogmas, we hesitated considerably; but these people insist and promise that they will abide by the decision passed according to the Muhammadan Law, even if it apparently hurt any of them. They accordingly executed an agreement to that effect and we also agree to decide the point according to the procedure laid down in the laws of Islam." In fact a reference was made in that case under an agreement that the dispute was to be settled in accordance with the Muhammadan Law regardless of the custom. If a division was accordingly directed in that and certain other instances in accordance with the Muhammadan Law by mutual consent, it is sufficient to establish either that no custom was in existence or that the custom had fallen into desuetude too. As their Lordships of the Privy Council say in Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan (14), the use of the word 'ordinarily' implies that an occasional variation by consent or otherwise would not affect the custom of devolution The family of Husain Bakhsh belonged to a family of Chaudhris, the eldest of whom held that office and used to obtain a kabuliyat for the payment of Government revenue in his name. The office was practically hereditary, except where superior force intervened and used to devolve on the eldest son with the rights appertaining thereto. The Royal Decree of 1256 Hijri (Exhibit 256) recognised the claim of Azam Ali to a share of the zemindari and malguazari villages including the kabuliyat of Chaudhri Husain Bakhsh, who had succeeded, his father, Imam Bakhsh, in the office of the chaudhri of pargana Subeha on his death in 1226 Fasli. The orders passed in the Settlement proceedings referred to the existence of a custom of primogeniture and the reference made to it by the entry of the estate in List No. II appended to Act I of 1869 amply confirms it.

Coming to the oral evidence we find it overwhelming in favour of the defence. The present head of the family Mustafa Husain, son of Murtaza Husain (D. W. No. 33), his younger brother Fida Husain (D. W. No. 9), his son Wajid Husain (D. W. No. 29) and Ehsan Husain, son of Fida Husain (D. W. No. 35) have all deposed in favour of single heir succession. On behalf of the plaintiff's sisters, no one of that standing in the family was produced. Even a witness of the plaintiffs, Abdul Rahman, deposes that in the family of the parties the rule of primogeniture had always prevailed (P. W. 3). The conduct of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and Musammat Zainab-un-nisa also indicates the existence of such a custom in the family. By the Will of 1885 Musammat Bechan-un-nisa made a bequest of her property in favour of Rafi-uz-zaman and after the death of that boy she made a Will in favour of Musamma Zainab-un-nisa and her son, Shafiq-uz-zaman, in 1893. In 1889 she applied to the Court of Wards to release her property and make it over to Rafi-uz-zaman. After the death of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa, Musammat Zainab-un-nisa desired mutation of names both in her own name and in favour of her son, Shafiq-uz-zaman, When in 1906 during the lifetime of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa, Shafiq-uz-zaman applied to the Court of Wards for the release of the property in his favour Musammat Zainab-un-nisa consented to the arrangement in so far that Shafiq-uz-zaman's name also may be entered along with herself in the village records. The silence of the sisters for nearly seven years between the death of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and the institution of their suit is another indication of a belief in the family of a single heir succession. When in 1912, Shafiq-uz-zaman executed a deed of trust in favour of his son, Mati-uz-zaman, husband of one of the plaintiffs, Musammat Zarif-un-nisa, was appointed one of the trustees and accepted the position. These acts of the members of the family do not operate by way of estoppel against the suit of the sisters but are relevant to find out the belief of the members of the family in the existence of the custom under discussion. After the death of Murtaza Husain, the names of his eldest son, Mustafa Husain, and the second son, Fida Husain were both entered in the village records, and this fact was put forward on behalf of the appellants to negative the custom. Mustafa Husain, however, subsequently sued for the recovery of half of the property and under a compromise it was settled that he should be the owner of 2-3rds and Fida Husain of ⅓rd of their father's property. The Will of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad in favour of his brother was, as already pointed out, valid under section 13 of Act I of 1869, as the brother was heir-at-law under section 22 (6) of the Act and as the provisions of section 22 would apply to the succession to the property of Murtaza Husain, no question of custom could arise in that case. A private arrangement between the two brothers raises no presumption either in favour of the non-existence of such a custom or the abrogation thereof. It is true that, with regard to small areas of property and under-proprietary rights, there has not been a single heir succession, but in the nature of things, the same custom may not govern the devolution to taluqdari properties and to small areas of land or under-proprietary tenures, alike. We have formed the opinion that the custom of single heir succession was a custom observed in the family of Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad, that it governed the devolution of the property of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa and that, therefore, Shafiq-uz-zaman was the only heir to that property.

It only remains to consider how far the claim of some of the defendants is barred by section 41 of the Act IV of 1882. The Bank of Upper India, Limited, acted on the faith of the representations made by Shafiq-uz-zaman supported by the opinion of the late Sir Sundar Lal, the copies of certain khewats and a copy of the judgment of the Privy Council affirming the award, and as a business concern it could not have come to a conclusion different from that at which it arrived. Mr. Goodall, the Manager of the Lucknow Branch, states that he had satisfied himself by enquiry that Shafiq-uz-zaman had a good title and that though he was aware that he had sisters in existence, he had come to know that they were receiving allowances by way of maintenance from him. Raj Kishore, an employee of the Bank, similarly states that Mr. Nasim, an eminent Advocate of Lucknow, had gone with Shafiq-uz-zaman two or three times to get loans advanced to him and had recommended the grant of those loans. The sisters of Shafiq-uz-zaman since the death of their mother took no steps to get their names entered in the revenue papers or to enforce a payment of their share of the profits against Shafiq-uz-zaman. They accepted the guzara allowance fixed by the Court of Wards and the husband of one of them agreed to act as a trustee when a deed of trust was executed by Shafiq-uz-zaman for the administration of his estate and the discharge of his liabilities.

The defendant, Raja Bhagwan Bakhsh Singh, purchased certain villages in pursuance of a public advertisement issued by Shafiq-uz-zaman. He had attested the Will of Musammat Bechan-un-nisa and heard of the award and accepted the title of Shafiq-uz-zaman as shown by those papers and the entries in the khewats without any warning having been issued or steps taken by the sisters of Shafiq-uz-zaman to assert their title either at the time of the death of Musammat Zainab-un-nisa or afterwards since 1907. The defendant Mohammad Nasim, similarly, acted on the faith of the title of Shafiq-uz-zaman, as shown by the khewats and his possession of the disputed property supported by what some Pleaders had advised about the alleged title of Mustafa Husain.

The defendants, Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh, Musammat Ashraf-un-nisa and the late Bunyad Husain, similarly acted in good faith and with due care on the basis of the ostensible title and possession of Shafiq-uz-zaman to the exclusion of his sisters who had been accepting guzara allowance from him as if they had no independent title of their own. They are transferees for valuable consideration and, having regard to the circumstances above set forth, they are equally protected against the belated claim now put forward on behalf of the sisters of Shafiq-uz-zaman.

It is hardly necessary to refer to the various alternative pleas, which have been set up by the Counsel on either side in support of their various claims. It is sufficient to say that neither of the plaintiffs have proved their title to the estate. House No. 21 of List B stands in Subeha, Taluqa Khanpur. Chaudhri Sarfaraz Ahmad used to dwell in it and it must be deemed to be a part of the Khanpur estate.

No documents had been improperly rejected. The other pleas taken in the Memorandum of Appeal have not been pressed.

The appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Appeal to Privy Council—Suit regarding nature of tenancy—Subject-matter, value of.

Where the subject-matter of a suit is solely the nature of a tenancy, the value of which was Rs. 2,000; the fact that the tenancy affected property worth over Rs. 10,000 would not give a right of appeal to the Privy Council.

Application, under sections 109 and 110 of the Civil Procedure Code, for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, against the judgment of the High Court in Civil Appeal No. 924 of 1918, dated the 17th March 1922.

Mr. Sardha Ram, for the Petitioners.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This is an application for the grant of a certificate for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against a judgment and decree of this Court passed on the 17th March 1922.*

The suit was for the ejectment of the present applicants from the site, on which certain buildings stood, valued at Rs. 300, and for the recovery of Rs. 1,700, being the rent due for 17 months at Rs. 100 per mensem. The defence set up was that the present applicants were permanent tenants of the site. The decision of this Court now sought to be appealed against was that the applicants were tenants-at-will, and, therefore, liable to eviction. The value of the buildings had been estimated in the course of the trial to be Rs. 23,479-5-0. As the plaintiff expressed his willingness to pay for the buildings if the present applicants did not wish to remove them, the applicants were given a period of three months within which to decide whether they would remove the buildings or accept the sum of Rs. 23,400 as their value. The suit throughout has been valued, for purposes of jurisdiction and Court-fees, at Rs. 2,000. Mr. Sardha Ram on behalf of the applicants contended that, inasmuch as the buildings standing on the site had been found to be of the value of over Rs. 10,000, his clients were entitled to the certificate asked for. He cited Karm Singh v. Khem Singh (1), Ghulam Rasul Khan v. Secretary of State (2), Surendra Nath Roy v. Dwarka Nath (3), Maung Bya v. Maung Kyi Nyo (4), Srinath Pal v. Girindra Chandra Pal (5) and Sibt Husain v. Munwarulnissa (6), and contended that these authorities laid down that, for the purpose of an appeal to the Privy Council, the value of the subject-matter of the suit meant the value of the property in dispute. With this contention we are in accord. At the same time, we are unable to see that the subject-matter of the suit in the present instance was other than that involved in the decision of the question whether the applicants were permanent tenants of the site, or mere tenants-at-will. Nor are we able to see that the decree of this Court involved directly or indirectly any claim or question to or respecting property of the value of

Rs. 10,000 or upwards. The plaintiff in this case laid no claim whatever to the buildings on the site. Indeed, his prayer was that the said buildings should be removed. The matter in dispute between the parties was solely the nature of the tenancy of the site. In Appala Raja v. Rangappa Naicker (7) it was held that paragraph (2) of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, was intended to extend the privilege given by the first paragraph only to cases where a claim regarding rights of Rs. 10,000 or upwards in value were involved indirectly though not directly. The second paragraph meant that the suit must, to satisfy its conditions, involve rights and claims to property which rights and claims were worth Rs. 10,000 or upwards, not that the rights affected properties whose value was Rs. 10,000 or more. Similarly, in Manilal Jugaldar v. Banubai Framji (8) it was held by the Bombay High Court that where the subject-matter of a suit was an easement the value of which was less than Rs. 10,000, there was no right of appeal to the Privy Council, although the easement affected property worth over Rs. 10,000.

It seems to us, therefore, that in the present case the value of the buildings cannot be considered inasmuch as the decree sought to be appealed against did not involve any claim relating to the buildings. We, therefore, dismiss this application with costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, Azamgarh, dated the 27th March 1920.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit brought by a zemindar for recovery of possession of four mango trees which had been purchased by the defendant in execution of a mortgage-decree against the widow of Dubri Koeri, a tenant. The plaintiff's case was that his tenant had no transferable right in this grove-land. The main plea on behalf of the defendant was that his mortgagor had the rights of a grove-holder in this plot and that the trees were saleable. Both the Courts below have decreed the suit.

It appears that at the time of the Settlement in 1869, the ancestor of Dubri Koeri was recorded as an occupancy tenant of plot No. 293 which was shown as a culturable area. A portion of this plot seems to have been reserved for cultivation but on another portion some mango trees were planted. About the year 1899 this plot was divided into sub-divisions, namely, plot No. 293-1 and 293-2 and at the recent Settlement 293-1 was recorded as occupancy holding and 293-2 was described as a grove. Subsequently, this Sub-Division 293-2 came to be recorded as Parti Qadim (old waste land). At the time of the Settlement there were only four mango trees on this plot. It is really a misnomer to call plot No. 140 a grove. On the findings recorded by the lower Appellate Court, these trees were planted presumably with the consent of the zemindar on the occupancy holding by the tenant. The tenant can, therefore, acquire no transferable right in the trees standing on the occupancy tenancy. This view is supported by the case of Daya Kishen v. Mohammad Wazir Ahmad (1). The learned Vakil for the appellant relies on a string of cases reported as Muhammad Ismail Khan v. Mithu Lal (2), Habibullah

(1) 30 Ind. Cas. 565; 13 A. L. J. 833.
(2) 17 Ind. Cas. 656; 11 A. L. J. 649.

v. Kalyan Das (3) and Muhammad Yasin v. Ilahi Bakhsh (4), but in all those cases land had been expressly granted by a zemindar to a tenant for the purpose of planting a grove. In those cases trees had not been planted on an occupancy land. They are, therefore, clearly distinguishable from the present case, which is really governed by the case first mentioned. The lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiff zemindar himself has been in actual possession of these trees and also of the culturable area of the land for some time past. The mortgagee took the mortgage with his eyes open and he has himself to thank for the consequences. The result is, that this appeal fails and is hereby dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, r. 4—Review, order granting, without notice to opposite party—Prejudice—Opportunity given to object—Legality of order.

An order granting an application for review of an order dismissing a suit in default is not illegal merely because notice of the application was not given to the opposite party, if that party had been given every opportunity to raise any objection that he could raise, and was, therefore, in no way prejudiced by non-issue of notice to him.

Revision against a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 22nd February 1922.

Diwan Mehar Chand, for the Petitioners.
Mr. Madan Gopal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner before me filed a suit for the recovery of Rs. 273 due on bahi account. The 10th of July 1920 was fixed for hearing. The hearing was adjourned to another date, fixing the 20th of July 1920, for this purpose. The plaintiff was directed to pay fresh process-fee. On the date fixed the defendant did not appear and it was discovered that his non-appearance was due to the non-payment of the process-fee on the part of the plaintiff. The suit was accordingly dismissed under O. IX, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code by Lala Sawan Mal, Munsif, Hafizabad, District Gujranwala. On the 10th of August 1920, an application for the restoration of the suit was disallowed. On the 27th October 1920, an application for review of the order of the 10th of August 1920 was presented to Lala Sawan Mal. The ground for review stated in the petition was that the process-fee had been paid by him to the Munshi of the Pleader and that it was not due to his fault that the defendant had not been served. Lala Sawan Mal made no order on the application He did not even issue notice to the opposite party. He was succeeded on his transfer by Lala Hans Raj who on the 7th February 1921 made the following order:

"Following Janaki Nath v. Prabhasini Dasi (1), I hold that under the circumstances of the case I can review the order of my predecessor rejecting the application for restoration without notice being given to the opposite party by my predecessor under O. XLVII, r. 2. I, therefore, order the applicant to adduce evidence in support of his allegation in the review application."

On the 21st of February 1921, two witnesses were examined on behalf of the petitioner namely, Sham Das and Brij Lal. The latter witness is the Pleader's agent. He admitted that the plaintiff had handed over the process-fee to him and that it was due to his negligence that the process-fee was not paid into the office. Sham Das, the other witness, appears in no way to be connected with the parties but he had been present on the occasion when the process-fee was handed over by the plaintiff to the Pleader's agent. Upon this Lala Hans Raj was satisfied that a good case had been made out for a review. Accordingly, in the interests of justice, he granted the review by an order, dated the 2nd of March 1921. The case was restored to its original number when notice was sent to the defendant to appear. The defendant filed pleas in defence of the suit and he raised the question of the illegality of the order granting review, the main ground for the objection being that the order had been passed behind his back and that the Court had acted illegally in making the order without issuing notice required by O. XLVII, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code. The Munsiff overruled the objection, proceeded to decide the case on the merits and granted a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

Against the decree an appeal was preferred by the defendant to the lower Appellate Court. In the memorandum of appeal the objection as to the illegality of the order of review was again raised. The learned Judge of the Court below has given effect to that objection and has set aside the decree passed by the Trial Court upon this ground alone.

The plaintiff-petitioner has come up to this Court in revision and Mr. Mehai Chand on his behalf has contended that no notice was necessary in this case because the order dismissing the suit had been made in the absence of the defendant. He has relied in support of his contention on a Calcutta ruling in the case of Janaki Nath v. Prabhasini Dasi (1). It is not necessary for me to express any opinion as to the view expressed by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in that case, for the case may be decided upon another ground on which the case of Taj Muhammad v. Kanshi Mal (2) was decided.

Now, in this case, the defendant did not appeal against the order granting review, but he was allowed to raise the question in the trial of the suit for the very reason that he had had no opportunity of raising the question. The learned Judges who decided the case reported as Taj Muhammad v. Kanshi Mal (2) made the following observation:—

"Lala Sangam Lal, for respondent, urges that the application for review should not have been accepted without notice to his client under O. XLVII, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code. This appears to be correct, and I have, therefore, to consider the order of 11th May 1910, as one merely admitting the application for review subject to any objections that might be urged."

The defendant was given every opportunity to raise any objection that he could raise. He is in no way, therefore, prejudiced by reason of the fact that no notice was issued to him. The learned Judge of the Court below ought to have taken into consideration this circumstance and ought not to have set aside the decree passed by the Trial Court merely on the ground that no notice had been issued to the defendant before granting review of the judgment.

I accordingly accept this petition for revision, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, with the direction that the appeal be reinstated on its original number in the register of pending appeals and be disposed of according to law. Costs will abide the result.

parties who themselves are not present in Court, but are nevertheless interested by virtue of belonging to the same community.

In second appeal the Court should consider, whether the evidence that is brought forward to prove a custom is not only legally admissible, but where the sum total of that evidence regarded from the point of quantum is of sufficient weight to justify the Court coming to the conclusion that the custom has been proved.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Walsh, dated the 5th July 1921.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion, that this appeal should be allowed. The point that was taken in the case was that, in the particular community in question to which the parties belong, the daughter of a Hindu did not inherit any part of the family property. There was a Record of Rights put forward in defence, which contained the following sentence: "Musalman haq dukhtari dete hain; Hindu nahin dete. (The Muhammadans give to their daughters the rights due to them, but Hindus do not)." Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai has said very fairly that that document is his sheet anchor. Besides that document, four witnesses went into the witness-box and deposed to what they said was a recognised custom, to the effect that a Hindu daughter had no right of inheritance. That custom, if it exists, is, of course, in contravention of the prevailing rule of Hindu Law. A custom is, in our opinion, a matter which has to be proved with more thoroughness and with greater precision than a case which merely affects the parties who are on the record and does not adversely affect parties who themselves are not present in Court, but are nevertheless interested by virtue of belonging to the same community. There is no doubt whatever that the view which has been taken by this Court is that, in second appeal, the Court may, and indeed should, consider whether the evidence, that is brought forward to prove a custom is not only legally admissible evidence, but whether the sum total of that evidence, regarded from the point of quantum, is of sufficient weight to justify the Court coming to a conclusion that the custom has been proved. Now, there is no doubt whatever that if the custom, as set out in the Record of Rights, does prevail amongst this community, there could have been a very much better quality of evidence and a very much greater body of evidence forthcoming and it behoves every person who is alleging a custom, and who is seeking for the first time a judicial decision on that alleged custom, to leave no stone unturned to prove the fact of that custom most definitely, most clearly, and most fully. That has not been done in this case There has been, as we have said, the Wajib-ul-arz and there has also been the evidence of four witnesses; and though every thing that those four witnesses said was admissible in evidence we have come to the conclusion that, though admissible, it was not of that weight that is necessary in order to prove a custom which will disturb and upset the ordinary presumption of Hindu Law, We do not say that a custom of this kind does not exist amongst this community: what we are saying is, that in this particular case there has not been such clear, full and cogent evidence as to make it proper for us to dismiss this appeal. We, therefore, are of opinion that, notwithstanding that the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the alleged custom had been proved and that a Judge of this Court of long experience as a Practitioner of the Bar thought that he ought to affirm the decision of the Subordinate Judge, we feel that it is important from a public point of view that it should be generally recognised that these cases of custom have to be proved with care and thoroughness. For these reasons we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Judge of this Court and of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs throughout.

BAZA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Custom—Will—Awans of Kot Sarang, Tahsil Tallagang, District Attock.

A sonless Awan of Kot Sarang in the Talagang Tahsil of the Attock District has no power to dispose of his ancestral property by Will. (Case-law examined and discussed.)

The power to gift inter vivos does not necessarily include a power of testation. [p. 660, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Attock, at Campbellpur, dated the 22nd February 1922.

Mr. Badruddin Kureshi, for Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Baza, son of Gaman, an Awan of Kot Sarang, in the Talagang Tahsil of the Attock District, sued Musammat Rakhi, wife of Azim, for possession of certain lands, on the allegation that he, as the nearest collateral of Zaman, the father of Musammat Rakhi, was entitled to the same.

It was averred that the land was ancestral and that on Zaman's death without male issue, his collaterals and not his daughter succeeded.

The defence was, that Zaman had left a Will devising the property to his daughter as khana damad and that the Will was valid. The ancestral nature of the property was also contested. The Trial Court found that the property was ancestral but that the defendant had proved the execution as well as the validity of the Will propounded by her. The plaintiffs' suit was accordingly dismissed and he preferred an appeal to the District Court.

The learned District Judge agreed with the Trial Court in holding that the property was ancestral and that the Will propounded was genuine and had been duly executed by Zaman. He, however, held that Zaman "had not free powers of testation" and, accepting the appeal, decreed the plaintiff's suit. Musammat Rakhi has come up to this Court in second appeal having obtained a certificate under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act. The custom, the validity of which is now in question, is stated in the certificate to be as follows:—Whether a sonless Awan of Kot Sarang, Tahsil Talagang, has a free power to dispose of his ancestral property by Will. There is practically no evidence on the record to support the contention put forward by Musammat Rakhi. She only produced three witnesses, none of whom gives any instances, while one of them, Sadu, states that no male in this tribe has died sonless.

Mr. Kureshi, who appeared for the appellant, was constrained to admit that the evidence on the record was insufficient, but he contended that as Awans in this part of the Punjab had large powers of alienation and gift they should be assumed to have the power to devise their ancestral property by Will and in support he cited certain authorities which I proceed to consider.

Bano v. Fateh Khan (1). Here it was held that under Punjab Customary Law the distinction between the power to gift inter vivos and the powers of testation was a matter of degree and form only, and when the power of gift is shown to exist an initial presumption arises that there is a co-extensive power of testation. It will be seen that Clark, C. J., dissented from this proposition, and the danger of extending custom by logical processes, such as analogy, was pointed out in Bhambul Devi v. Narain Singh (2).

In Amir Ali v. Baggo (3) a custom was found proved by which a sonless proprietor could make a bequest of ancestral property in favour of his daughter. This was a case relating to Awans of the Rawalpindi Tahsil and was considered in Yakub Khan v. Fateh Khan (4), (which dealt with Awans of the Attock Tahsil), and found to be of no assistance in cases arising in other parts of the Province.

In Ali Muhammad v. Dulla (5) the custom now set up was found to exist among Awans of the Shahpur District. It is, however, well known that Awans in that District have very wide powers of alienation.

CHANNULAL v. PUNA.

In Nura v. Tora (6), it was found that by custom a childless male proprietor could make a gift accompanied by possession in favour of his wife's sister's son. This was a case of Awans of the Talagang Tahsil and, having regard to the decision of the majority in Bano v. Fateh Khan (1), would give rise to an initial presumption in favour of the appellant.

Nur Ahmad v. Ghulam Husain (7) was a case among Awans of the Rawalpindi Tahsil, and related to the powers of sonless proprietor to alienate his ancestral property.

In Khudayar v. Fatteh (8) it was found that, among Awans of the Talagang Tahsil, a sonless male proprietor could make a gift of his ancestral property in favour of his daughter's son for services rendered. Having regard to Bano v. Fateh Khan (1) his, too, is in point.

In Nur Khan v. Sarfraz (9), another case of Awans from the Talagang Tahsil, an alienation of ancestral property by a sonless male proprietor in favour of a near collateral was found valid by custom.

Khuda Bakhsh v. Waham Ali (10) relates to Awans of Talagang Tahsil and lays down that a male proprietor can alienate his ancestral property in the presence of a son.

In Sher Muhammad v. Ali Muhammad (11) Kensington, J., was obviously not quite convinced as to the custom applicable to the case, but it may be treated as authority for the proposition that Awans of the Talagang Tahsil have wide powers of alienation.

It seems to me that authorities relating to other parts of the Province can afford little assistance in the present case.

Assuming, on the authority of Bano v. Fateh Khan (1), read with Nura v. Tora (6) and Khudayar v. Fatteh (8), that an initial presumption arises in favour of the appellant, that presumption is rebutted by the Riwaj-i-am of this Tahsil where the right to make a Will is clearly negatived so far as ancestral property is concerned. See answer to Question 8 at page 53 of Talbot's Tribal Customs in the Jhelum District. A custom to be valid must be ancient, and at page 7 Mr. Talbot points out that Wills were almost unknown and, as far as known, were almost entirely a recent development.

Nor do I think that the power to gift inter vivos would necessarily include a power of testation. By a gift the sonless proprietor deprives himself of the subject-matter of the gift, while by a testamentary disposition he is depriving his reversioners. As a result, I hold that the appellant has failed to prove a custom by which her father could validly devise his ancestral property to her in the presence of the plaintiff-respondent, and I accordingly dismiss this appeal. The respondent did not put in any appearance and I make no order as to costs.

Will—Execution—Delay of twenty years in applying for Probate—Delay unexplained, effect of—Evidence Act (I of 187), s. 90, applicability of.

An application was made for Probate of a Will some twenty years after the Will was alleged to have been executed, and the witnesses who purported to have attested the execution of the Will were dead; no explanation was forthcoming as to the delay in bringing the Will into Court for purposes of Probate, nor any evidence as to the custody of the Will before it was produced in Court, and the only evidence of execution offered was, that of persons who professed to identify the signatures on the Will:

Held, that the execution of the Will had not been satisfactorily proved, and that the provisions of section 90 of the Evidence Act could not be applied to the case.

Miscellaneous appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Jubbulpore, dated 16th June 1921.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. C. Hatvalne, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Channulal and Motilal, father and son, who describe themselves as the Sarbarakars of the idol of Shri Gaurishankerji Pelipathai of Kamania Phatak, Jubbulpore, applied for the grant of Probate or Letters of Administration to the estate of one Bachcha Halwai who is said to have died on the 1st August 1899. Bachcha is alleged to have executed the Will (Exhibit 1-A-1) on Aghan Badi 11, Sambat 1945 corresponding to the 11th November, 1887. The Will dedicates three houses in favour of the temple of Gaurishankerji subject to the condition that the testator's wife is to enjoy the rent during her lifetime. After her death the testator's five daughters are to get the rent of one room during their lives. After giving some directions, which need not be particularised, the Will recites that the possession of the property and worship of the idol should always remain with testator's kutumb (family) and khandan (house). The applicants allege that they are members of Bachcha's family and sole Sarbarakars of the temple and executors by implication and are entitled to Probate. In any case, they say they have a right to get Letters of Administration. They allege that the non-applicant Puna, the daughter of the deceased, is in possession of the property and is wasting it. Binia, another daughter, admits the applicants' claim. Mulchand, a son of Bachcha's brother Nadele, is said to be colluding with Puna. The property which is likely to come into the petitioner's hands is described in the application as two houses and two bagichas. The application was contested by Musammat Puna. One of her pleas was that the Will was not genuine. The application has been dismissed on the ground that the execution of the Will by Bachcha has not been satisfactorily proved.

The body of the Will purports to be written by Mithulal Tiwari. The attesting witnesses are Nathu Halwai, Mohanlal Brahmin and Darbarilal. All these persons are now dead. Fakirchand (A. W. No. 1), the son of Mohanlal, is examined to prove his father's signature as an attesting witness. He states that he has no papers with his father's signature on them. He identifies the signatures on Exhibits 1-A-2, 1-A-3 and 1-A-4 as his father's. The last two Exhibits are bonds in favour of A. W. No. 2. A. W. No. 2 is an illiterate person. He says, that they were scribed by Mohanlal. A. W. No. 3, a milk-seller, aged 27 years, professes to identify the handwriting of Mithulal, the scribe of the Will. A. W. No. 8 professes to identify Darbarilal's signature on the Will; A. W. No. 5 is the son-in-law of Bachcha. He deposes that Bachcha executed a Will of houses and other property 30 or 35 years ago in his presence in Jubbulpore at his house and gave his houses to the temple on the Gaori Ghat Road. He identifies Bachcha's singnature on the Will. He admits he is not fully literate and cannot read Bachcha's signature letter by letter. The evidence of this witness is the only direct evidence as to the execution of the Will by Bachcha. The lower Court has discounted it on account of the witness's admission that he visited Bachcha in Jubbulpore eight or ten years before his death and till his death did not meet him again. We see no reason to differ from the lower Court's opinion about the weight of this witness's evidence. A. W. No. 6 is the son of Bachcha's daughter. He professes to identify Bachcha's signature on the Will; He is the grandfather (apparently maternal) of the applicant Motilal. He says that Bachcha used to write letters to his father. A. W. No. 7 states that Bachcha was a bit of a physician and wrote prescriptions for him. He identifies Bachcha's singnature on the Will, but produces no prescription or other writing of Bachcha.

The Will purports to be executed in 1887. It was brought to light for the first time in 1907 when it was produced in a Court of Law. In 1910 an application for Probate in respect of it was made by Chokhelal, a brother of the applicant Channulal, but the application was ultimately withdrawn. At that time the attesting witness Mohanlal alone is said to have been alive. Yet no further attempt was made to bring the Will into Court till some ten years later when even that witness was dead. The lower Court is of opinion that the application was delayed deliberately with a view to take advantage of the provision of section 90 of the Evidence Act. We see no reason to hold that this opinion is not justified. There is no reasonable explanation about the delay after 1910 in making the application for Probate. There is no evidence as to the custody of the Will before 1907. We fully agree with the lower Court in refusing to apply the provisions of section 90 in this case. We also agree with the lower Court in holding that the evidence as to the handwriting of the scribe and the attesting witness is not convincing and falls short of the standard which should be required in the circumstances of the present case. Even if the handwriting of the scribe and attesting witnesses is proved, the execution of the Will by Bachcha is not proved thereby. The evidence of A. W. No. 5 is not worth anything. That of A. Ws. Nos. 6 and 7 who profess to identify Bachcha's signature on the Will is not convincing. We note one point, it is that, whereas at the date of the Will, according to the witnesses for both parties, (vide N. A. W. No. 1, N. A. W. No. 2 A. Ws. No. 4 and A. W. No. 6), Bachcha had only four daughters living, the Will refers to five daughters. We have been offered no reasonable explanation of this discrepancy. There is reason to believe that Bachcha desired to make a bequest in favour of the temple but this fact does not help us to conclude that this particular Will was executed by Bachcha. On the whole we agree with the lower Court in holding that the execution of the Will by Bachcha has not been satisfactorily proved. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 5.

Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918), s. 44—"Case," meaning of.

The word "case" in section 44 of the Punjab Courts Act does not necessarily mean the whole case, but it at least means a particular branch of a case for which an independent remedy or different procedure is provided by the Civil Procedure Code. Consequently, where, after framing a preliminary issue, the Court decides that a suit can be brought in the form in which it was presented, that does not amount to the decision of a case within the meaning of the section.

Petition, under section 44 of Punjab Act VI of 1918, for revision of an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Delhi, dated the 31st March 1922.

Mr. Moti Sagar, for the Petitioner.

Kunwar Dalip Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Court has decided after framing a preliminary issue, that the suit can be brought in its present form, i.e., as a suit for administration and rendition of accounts. A preliminary objection is raised that the order is not one which is open to revision, and I am of opinion that this objection must be upheld. It cannot be said that any case has been decided which would give this Court power to call for the record under section 44 of the Punjab Courts Act. The word "case," as was held in Pandit Ram Kant v. Pandit Rajdeo (1), does not necessarily mean the whole case, but it must at least mean a particular branch of a case for which an independent remedy or different procedure is provided by the Code.

In Mahtab Rai v. Kaman Lal (2) the same meaning was assigned to the word "case" and it was there held that an order overruling an objection as to jurisdiction was, even if erroneous, not one calling for interference by way of revision.

These authorities were followed in Sawan Mal v. Kanhaya Lal-Gopal Das (3), where it was held that no revision lay from a decision of a Court that it had jurisdiction to entertain a suit.

(1) 10 P. R. 1897 (F. B.).
(2) 51 P. R. 1899.
(3) 59 Ind. Cas. 680; 40 P. W. R. 1921.

In the present case, the Court has merely overruled an objection by the defendant as to the frame of the suit. It cannot be said that a "case" has been decided, and, even if the decision be erroneous, I do not think that the revisional powers of this Court should be exercised. I accordingly dismiss the petition with costs.

A suit under section 160 of the Agra Tenancy Act by a person who is recorded in the Revenue Papers a mortgagee is not maintainable, and an Appellate Court is not competent to go behind such an entry and to find that, although the plaintiffs' name is so recorded, he is not actually in possession.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Farukhabad, dated the 1st November 1920

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of arrears of revenue under section 160 of the Tenancy Act. The plaintiff was a usufructuary mortgagee of the defendant's share under two mortgages of the 14th June 1913 and the 12th December 1913 respectively. The defendant made a simple mortgage of his property in the year 1324 and the simple mortgagee paid up the usufructuary mortgage of the plaintiff dated the 12th of December 1913. The mortgage of the 14th of June 1913 was not redeemed. The plaintiff's name continued to be recorded as mortgagee notwithstanding the fact that one of the mortgages had been redeemed. He had to pay the Government revenue for the years 1324 and 1325 Fasli. He now sues for recovery of the proportionate amount of the money which he had to pay on account of that share of the defendant which had already been redeemed, the defence was that the plaintiff was in possession of the whole of the mortgaged property and the suit, therefore, did not lie. The first Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's name continued to be recorded as mortgagee and, further, that the plaintiff was in possession and dismissed the plaintiff's claim. The learned Judge of the Appellate Court does admit that the plaintiff's name is still recorded as mortgagee notwithstanding the fact that one of his mortgages had been redeemed and then assumes that the plaintiff was not in possession of the property redeemed and gives him a decree for the Government revenue which he had paid on account of that share of the defendant which had been redeemed. It is contended before me, on the strength of the case of Durga Parshad v. Hajari Singh (1), that the name of the plaintiff being recorded in the revenue papers as mortgagee, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was not competent to go behind this entry and to find that, although the name of the plaintiff was so recorded he was not actually the mortgagee in possession. This argument seems to have considerable force. This view of mine is supported by the case of Ahmad Said Khan v. Masi Ullah Khan (2), where this Court held that, where a person's name was entered as a lessee the Revenue Court was not competent to go behind the entry and to find that he was not a lessee. In my opinion, the decree of the first Court was right and should not have been disturbed. I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Ap-

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 358 OF 1922.
August 14, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Baker, A. J. C.

IBRAHIM—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Musammat SUGRABAI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 71, 73, 77—Denial of execution—Refusal of registration—Remedy—Application under section 73, not filed—Suit to compel registration, maintainability of—Appeal to Registrar, when can be treated as application under s. 73—Application, otherwise maintainable—Section wrongly mentioned—Duty of Court—Dismissal, whether legal—Suit under s. 77, scope of.

In a suit to compel registration under the Registration Act, the Court has simply to determine the fact of execution and if a prima facie case of execution is made out and the requirements of the law complied with, to order the registration of the document. [p. 664, col. 2.]

Raj Lakhi Ghose v. Debendra Chundra Mojumdar, 24 C. 668; 1 C. W. N. 444; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1114 and Balambal Ammal v. Arunachala Chetti, 18 M. 255; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 527, relied upon.

If a Sub-Registrar refuses to register a document on the ground of the denial of execution by the executant, the person seeking registration is bound, under the Registration Act, to make an application to the Registrar under section 73 of the Act in order to establish his right to have the document registered. [p. 665, col. 1.]

Such an application must be in writing and must be accompanied by a copy of the reasons recorded under section 71 and the statements in the application should be verified by the applicant in the manner required by law for the verification of plaints. [p. 665, col. 1.]

Such an application is necessary prior to a suit being brought under section 77 of the Registration Act, and if this is not complied with the suit is liable to be dismissed. [p. 665, col. 1.]

Udit Upadhia v. Imam Bandi, 24 A. 402; A. W. N. (1902) 99, followed.

An appeal to the Registrar, if it conforms to all the requirements of section 73 of the Registration Act, may be treated as an application under the Act and it may suffice to save the suit from being dismissed for non-compliance with the provisions of section 73 of the Registration Act. [p. 665, col. 2.]

A Court in the administration of justice should not refuse an application, which on the merits it ought to grant and in law can grant, simply because the applicant asks the Court to exercise its admitted powers under a wrong section. Regard should be had to the susbtance rather than to the form of the proceedings. [p. 665, cols. 1 & 2.]

Bechun Sahu v. Syed Ali Rasul, 16 Ind. Cas. 614, relied upon.

The scope of a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act depends upon the proved or admitted facts and circumstances, and not upon the erroneous mention of a section of a Statute in an application to the Registrar. [p. 665, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 22nd November 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 180 of 1921.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought a suit against the deceased defendant under section 77 of the Registration Act for a decree directing the registration of a sale-deed. The Trial Court (First Munsif, Burhanpur) passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour, but on appeal the District Judge, Nimar, reversed the decision on the ground that the agreement between the parties made registration conditional upon the payment of Rs. 700. The plaintiff makes this second appeal.

The Courts below do not appear to have considered the law on the point, and it is necessary to set it out in some detail. It is settled law that in a suit to compel registration under the Registration Act the Court has simply to determine the fact of execution and, if a prima facie case of execution is made out and the requirements of the law complied with, to order registration of the document. It cannot go into other considerations. A number of cases will be found quoted in Desai Narotam's Indian Registration Act, 6th Edition, page 202. I need only refer to Raj Lakhi Ghose v. Debendra Chundra Mojumdar (1) and Balambal Ammal v. Arunachala Chetti (2). The Trial Court found correctly on this point in issue No. 6 and then proceeded to go into a number of other considerations.

In the present case the defendant in his written statement had admitted the execution of the document and therefore a decree for registration would follow as a matter of course provided the suit will lie. The contention of the respondent is that the suit will not lie because the plaintiff has misconceived his remedy. Registration was refused by the Sub-Registrar on the ground of denial of execution under section 71 of the Registration Act. That this is so is shown by the endorsement of the Sub-Registrar which shows that the refusal was made under section 37 (j) of the Registration Rules which refers to the denial of execution. We are not concerned to enquire whether this order is right or wrong. It is the nature of the order that determines the relief to be sought against it. Consequently, the plaintiff was bound, under the Registration Act, to make an application to the Registrar under section 73 of the Act in order to establish his right to have the document registered. Such an application must be in writing and must be accompanied by a copy of the reasons recorded under section 71, and the statements in the application should be verified by the applicant in the manner required by law for the verification of plaints. That such an application is necessary prior to a suit being brought under section 77, Registration Act, has been held in Udit Upadhia v. Imam Bandi (3). In the present case what the plaintiff did was to make an appeal under section 72, whereas no such appeal lay, registration having been refused on the ground of denial of execution. It has been contended that the appeal under section 72 should be treated as an application under section 73. In Bechun Sahu v. Syed Ali Rasul (4), when registration was refused by the Sub-Registrar, the person in whose favour the document was executed moved the Registrar under section 72 of the Registration Act, although the application was, as a matter of fact, one under section 73, and was accompanied by a copy of the reasons recorded by the Sub-Registrar for refusing to register and was verified as required by section 73. It was held that the suit was maintainable. A Court in the administration of justice should not refuse an application, which, on the merits, it ought to grant and in law can grant, simply because the applicant asks the Court to exercise its admitted powers under a wrong section. Regard should be had to the substance rather than to the form of proceedings. The scope of the suit under section 77 of the Registration Act depends upon the proved or admitted facts and circumstances and not upon the erroneous mention of a section of a Statute in an application to the Registrar.

It will be observed that in that case the application conformed to all the requirements of section 73, being accompanied by a copy of the reasons recorded by the Sub-Registrar, and verified as required by that section. There is no evidence in the present case on this point. The application made by the plaintiff to the Sub-Registrar is not on record. In Ganga Din v. Mata Din (5), which is very similar to the present case, the Sub-Registrar refused to register because the defendant denied execution. The plaintiff appealed from the order of the Sub-Registrar to the District Registrar, but his appeal was dismissed on the ground that no appeal lay. On his bringing a suit under section 77 it was held that the suit would not lie. It was held in Edun v. Mahomed Siddik (6) that a person omitting to make an application to the Registrar, as provided by section 73, cannot be said to have complied with the conditions precedent to a suit under section 77. In that case the application was barred by limitation.

The question of limitation does not arise in this case. In the case quoted above, Udit Upadhia v. Imam Bandi (3), it was held that the right of suit given by section 77 of the Registration Act arises only when the Registrar on an application complying with the provisions of the second paragraph of section 73 of the Act having been presented to him has upheld the orders of the Sub-Registrar and has refused to direct the document to be registered. It will be seen, therefore, that, before a suit under section 77 can lie, there must be compl ince with the provisions of section 73.

I do not think that the fact that the appeal purported to be under sect'on 72 would deprive the plaint.ff of his remedy if the conditions of section 73 were complied with. But there is nothing on the record to show that this is so. In these circumstances, I think the case must be remanded for the pu po-e of enabling the plaint ff to produce a copy of his application to the Registrar in order that it may be seen whether the provisions of sect'on 73 were complied with. If they were, the fact that the application was described as an appeal would be a mere technical defect which would not affect the merits of the case. But if the provisions of section 73 were not complied with, the present appeal would not lie. The case is accordingly remanded for that purpose; finding to be returned within two months. Costs will abide the result.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 164—Suit by dispossessed mortgagee against mortgagor for profits, whether maintainable.

A suit under section 164 of the Agra Tenancy Act by a dispossessed mortgagee against his mortgagor for profits is not maintainable.

Hanuman Din v. Ram Bisal, 14 Ind. Cas. 260, reli d on.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 18th December 1920.

Mr. Kumuda Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Upadhiya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for profits for the years 1323, 1324 and 1325 Fasli. It appears that the defendant-appellant owns an 8-annas share in the village and is also a Lambardar. In the year 1314 Fasli he executed a mortgage of a 3-annas 1-pie out of the 8-annas share in favour of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs giving them a lease for 7 years of the mortgaged property. The period of lease expired in 1322 Fasli but the defendant continued to make collections and now prevents the plaintiffs from making collections from the tenants. The mortgage has not yet been admittedly redeemed. The plaintiffs brought the present suit under section 164 of the Tenancy Act as a suit for recovery of profits. One of the pleas raised in defence was, that such a suit did not lie. The learned Assistant Coll ctor fixed Issue No. 3 on this point and came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs being co-sharers, such a suit was maintainable. This decree was confirmed on appeal after certain fin ings had been obtained on issues remitted by the lower Appellate Court. The defendant comes here in second appeal, and the first point taken before me in appeal is, that such a suit does not lie at all and reliance is placed on the case of Hanuman Din v. Ram Bisal (1) decided by Mr. Justice Banerji. In that suit his Lordship came to the conclusion that a suit like this by a dispossessed mortgagee did not lie against his mortgagor. That decision is on all fours with the present one and I see no reason to differ from the conclusion arrived at by Mr. Justice Banerji in that case. Mr. Uma Shanker Bajpai on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents contended that in that case it was alleged by the defendants that the mortgage had ceased to exist because of the want of possession of the mortgagee for more than 12 years but I do not see how this distinction will help the plaintiffs. Mr. Justice Banerji remarks in that case as follows:—

"The Courts below have dismissed the suit on the ground that this is not a suit for profits by a recorded co-sharer against a Lambardar but is in reality a suit by the mortgagees against their mortgagor who dispossessed them. No doubt, the names of the plaintiffs are recorded in the Revenue papers. But the defendant fills two capacities. He is the mortgagor as well as the Lambardar; by withholding profits he as mortgagor has dispossessed the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs' remedy is to sue to recover possession and possibly mesne profits. As such mortgagees they cannot, in the guise of a suit for profits, recover possession from their mortgagor in the Revenue Court." With these remarks I am in full accord. It has, however, been urged by Mr. Bajpai, the learned Vakil for the respondents, that this is really a plea of want of jurisdiction of the Revenue Court and not having been taken in the Court of first instance should not be heard now, and reference is made to section 196 of the Tenancy Act. This contention is not right. There is no plea that the Revenue Court was not competent to decide the present suit, but that a suit like the present one did not lie at all either in the Revenue Court or in the Civil Court. It is not necessary to enter into the other pleas taken in appeal. I, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs in all Courts.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1348 OF 1922.
January 10, 1923.
Present:—Mr. Justice Campbell.
RAMJI LAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
SHIBBA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (v)—Redemption of mortgage—Appeal for reduction of amount payable on redemption—Court-fee payable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 149—Omission to pay requisite Court-fee deliberate—Extension of time, whether should be granted—Mortgage—Post diem interest—Interest on repairs.

The Court-fee payable on a Memorandum of Appeal in a suit to redeem a mortgage in which the appellant seeks for a reduction of the amount payable for redemption, is an ad valorem fee calculated on the difference between the amount claimed to be payable and the amount decreed as the price of redemption.

Where insufficient Court-fees have been paid, and there is no bona fide mistake, but the non-payment of the full amount is deliberate, the party in default is not entitled to any grant of time, under section 149 of the Civil Procedure Code, to make up the deficiency.

The ordinary rule as regards the payment of interest on a mortgage is, that the mortgagee is entitled to post diem damage at the rate of interest stipulated in the instrument of mortgage and for the whole period during which the principal sum has remained unpaid.

The question whether a mortgagee is entitled to interest on the cost of repairs must be determined with reference to the terms of the particular contract under consideration.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 19th January 1922.

Mr. Rama Nand, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Pandit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal is the result of a suit for redemption of the mortgage of a house effected in 1877 for Rs. 450 by a registered deed.

The plaintiff is the assignee of the original mortgagor.

The period fixed in the mortgage-deed for redemption was five years, on the expiry of which the house was to become the property of the mortgagees. Interest was fixed at Rs. 2-8-0 per mensem, and the deed provided that interest and principal together should be payable at redemption and also the cost of any repairs which the mortgagees might have been obliged to undertake by reason of their not being carried out by the mortgagor. The mortgagees claimed full interest up to the date of redemption and also interest on the cost of repairs. The First Court decreed redemption on payment of Rs. 450 principal, Rs. 250 cost of repairs, Rs. 540 interest on cost of repairs and Rs. 330 post diem interest for eleven years, total Rs. 1,570. The lower Appellate Court, on appeal by the mortgagees, increased this sum to Rs. 2,028 disallowing interest on the cost of repairs but allowing full interest on the principal mortgage charge for 44 years and 3½ months.

RAMJI LAL v. SHIBBA.

The plaintiff has appealed claiming to redeem for Rs. 450 only. His Memorandum of Appeal bears a stamp on that amount only. The preliminary objection is made that Court-fee is payable on the difference of Rs. 450 and the amount decreed by the Court below as the price of redemption.

This objection must be upheld. The case is exactly similar to Civil Appeal No. 3433 of 1915, reported as Lekh Ram v. Ramji Das (1). That judgment cites the authorities for the applicability of Art. 1, Schedule I of the Court-Fees Act to cases such as this and, for the reasons given in it, I refuse to grant the appellant time to make up the deficiency under section 149, Civil Procedure Code. The appellant's attention was drawn by the Court office to the fact that his Memorandum of Appeal was insufficiently stamped at the time when it was presented. His Counsel refused to pay any additional Court-fee, asserted that Chuni Lal v. Beli Ram (2) quoted by the office was distinguishable and incorrect, and quoted in rejoinder a Bombay ruling, Umarkhan v. Mahomedkhan (3), which does not apply to the facts of the present case and another ruling Pirbhu Narain Singh v. Sita Ram (4), which has been disapproved in a subsequent judgment of the same Court. The learned Counsel for the appellant is quite unable to explain to me how Chuni Lal v. Beli Ram (2) is distinguishable, and in his search for rulings to justify his position he must have come across another Punjab ruling Banwari Das v. Nathu Shah (5) and also Nepal Rai v. Debi Prasad (6) which differed from Pirbhu Narain Singh v. Sita Ram (4). There was, in my opinion, no bona fide mistake about the Court-fee and the omission to pay the full amount was deliberate.

In these circumstances, the appeal can only be taken as one for reduction of Rs. 450 from the sum decreed by the lower Appellate Court as payable for redemption.

The first contention in appeal is, that Rs. 250 were improperly decreed as the cost of repairs. The finding, however, is one of fact that repairs of this value were effected and the decree provides for the cost of such repairs to be recovered at redemption.

The second objection is against the decree for payment of interest for 44 years. This point is covered by what has been laid down in the recent Full Bench decision Motan Mal v. Muhammad Bakhsh (7).

I have read the mortgage-deed and I agree with the lower Appellate Court that its terms indicate an intention by the parties that, should there be no foreclosure by sale, interest would continue to be paid up to the date of redemption. Even if this were not so, there is nothing about the case to take it out of what is laid down in Motan Mal v. Muhammad Bakhsh (7), as the ordinary rule that a mortgagee is entitled to post diem damage at the rate of interest stipulate in the instrument of mortgage and for the whole period during which the principal sum has remained unpaid.

Cross-objections are filed against the refusal of the lower Appellate Court to allow interest on the cost of repairs. There is no provision for such interest in the mortgage-deed and I see no reason why it should be given. Counsel for the respondent has quoted Radha Kishen v. Muhamdu (8), but this question has to be decided with reference to the terms of the particular contract under consideration.

I dismiss both the appeal and the cross-objections. The appellant will pay the respondent's costs.

Limitation—Suit for compensation for loss of goods consigned by Railway—Limitation terminus a quo.

Second appeal against a decree of the Deputy Commissioner, Naini Tal, dated the 14th July 1922.

Mr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Mr. Durga Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are a firm of drapers, carrying on business at Naini Tal. On the 7th of August 1918 a consignment of cloth, weighing 26 seers, was sent by the firm of Chandu Lal-Munna Lal from Meerut to Naini Tal. The parcel arrived at Naini Tal on the 10th of August 1918; but the plaintiffs found that it weighed only 10 seers. On the 16th August 1918 they wrote to the defendant Railway Company to give them open delivery as early as practicable. The Station Master states that he told the consignee to write to his head office, as he was not authorised to give open delivery. About wo or three weeks later Mr. Vaughan, the Manager of Messrs. Smith, Rodwell & Co., came to the Railway premises and, according to the Station Master, the parcel was opened in his presence and was found to contain two pieces of cloth. The consignee said that there ought to have been three pieces and wrote on the Railway Receipt that out of three pieces one piece was wanting, but Mr. Vaughan, who was acting for the defendant Railway Company, refused to deliver the parcel until a note was made to the effect that the package was in good condition. The consignee refused to make that note and the parcel remained undelivered. Subsequently, the parcel was sent by the Railway Authorities to the Lost Property Office at Bareilly. On the 3rd February 1919 the Traffic Superintendent of the defendant Railway wrote to the plaintiffs, asking them when they proposed to call at the Lost Property Office to take delivery of the parcel, suggesting at the same time that the parcel would be sent to Naini Tal, if they were willing to pay the freight. The parcel was sent thereafter to Izzatnagar. On the 20th May 1919 the Traffic Superintendent of the Rohilkand and Kumaun Railway again wrote to the plaintiffs, reminding them that they had not called at the Lost Property Office at Izzatnagar to take delivery, as arranged, nor intimated that they were willing to pay the freight charges for the despatch of the parcel to Naini Tal for delivery, and asking them to send the original sender's beejuk in a registered cover to enable them to check the contents prior to the despatch of the same to Naini Tal at their expense. The plaintiff states that they sent the original beejuk thereafter to the defendant Railway Company and that, when the latter took no action in the matter, the present suit was filed for the recovery of the price of the goods consigned with damages.

The Courts below have dismissed the claim, holding that it was barred by limitation. There can be no question that the consignment weighed 26 seers, when originally consigned, for that is the weight given in the original Railway Receipt. The plaintiffs were willing to take delivery of the consignment after making a note on the Railway Receipt that they had received two pieces and that one piece, worth Rs. 35, was missing. In fact, a note to that effect exists on the Railway Receipt, which appears to have been presented on the 26th August 1918; but the Station Master, or the Agent of Messrs. Smith, Rodwell & Co., who was in charge of the Parcel Office, refused to deliver the same unless a clear receipt was granted stating that the parcel was not in a damaged condition. This is practically admitted in paragraph 2 of the written statement. After the parcel had been opened and its contents checked, there was no reason for the Railway Company to have refused delivery till the grant of a clear receipt as to its condition. The beejuk filed shows that the consignment contained three pieces of Kashmira cloth and two dozen Jharans; but when the parcel was opened on the 26th August 1918 it was found to contain only two pieces of tweed and one dozen Jharans. One piece of Kashmira and one dozen Jharans were evidently found missing.

The question for consideration is, whether limitation should be computed in these circumstances from the 26th August 1918 when the plaintiff ascertained the loss and the delivery was not made, or from the 10th August 1918 when the parcel first arrived. The parcel was short in weight when it came; but the right to claim compensation for the loss of the goods accrued when, on the parcel being opened, it was found that certain articles were wanting. The occurrence of the loss could not have been definitely ascertained or brought home before the 26th of August 1918 and the claim of the plaintiff was, therefore, within time. As the suit was decided by the Courts below on a preliminary point, the appeal is allowed and the suit remanded to the Court of first instance with directions to reinstate it under its original number and to dispose of it after determining the other points involved in the manner provided by law. The costs here and hitherto will abide the result, Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 32, 105, 109—Suit for abatement of rent—Plaintiff, what must prove—Question of determination of area, whether can be gone into in civil suit.

In order to succeed in a suit for abatement of rent, brought under section 32 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the plaintiff must show that there has been a diminution of area in the land held by him at the date of the suit. [p. 671, col. 1.]

In order to assess a fair rent upon a holding it is necessary for the Settlement Officer to ascertain what is the area held, and for this purpose he may either accept the area entered in the Record of Rights, or alter it after taking evidence. It is not necessary that a direct issue should be raised as to the area of the holding. [p. 671, col. 2.]

As the question of the determination of the area held forms the subject of proceedings taken before the Settlement Officer, under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the question of area cannot be again raised in a Civil suit. [p. 671, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Das in Second Appeal No. 911 of 1920, dated the 10th July 1922, published as 67 Ind. Cas. 710.

Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha, for the Appellant,

Mr. Siva Nandan Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—The plaintiff alleges that he took settlement of 3 bighas 3 kathas and 16 dhurs of land from Government at a rent of Rs. 5 per bigha and that he has acquired occupancy rights therein. The proprietary rights in the land were subsequently sold by Government to the defendant, the Maharaja of Dumraon, who is now the plaintiff's landlord.

At the last Cadastral Survey the area of the holding was entered in the Record of Rights as 2 bighas 3 kathas and 4 dhurs. Thereafter, an application was made under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by the landlord for the settlement of fair and equitable rents in the mouza with the result that the Settlement Officer raised the plaintiff's rent as recorded in the Record of Rights from Rs. 15-15-0 to Rs. 17-13-9.

The present suit is brought under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for abatement of rent on the ground that there has been a diminution of area from 3 bighas 3 kathas 16 dhurs to 2 bighas 3 kathas

4 dhurs. The Munsif decreed the suit and allowed an abatement of Rs. 5-12-4 per annum. That decision was affirmed by the District Judge in appeal and also by a learned Judge of this Court in second appeal. The present Letters Patent Appeal is preferred by the landlord.

The learned Judge of this Court, finding that the District Judge had committed an error of procedure in relying only upon the pleadings for the purpose of coming to a decision on the question whether the original settlement made with the plaintiff was for a consolidated rental of Rs. 15-15-0 irrespective of the area held or at a rental of Rs. 5 per bigha on the area actually held, heard the second appeal before him as a first appeal and examined the evidence himself, and he came to the conclusion that the land was settled with the plaintiff at the rate of Rs. 5 per bigha.

In my opinion it is not necessary for our present purposes to follow the procedure of the learned Judge and to examine the correctness of the learned Judge's finding, for the plaintiff must fail upon a question of law.

In order to succeed in his suit the plaintiff must show that he was paying a rent of Rs. 17-13-9 upon 3 bighas 3 kathas 16 dhurs and that the land now in his possession according to the same standard of measurement is 2 bighas 3 kathas and 4 dhurs. Now there is no finding that there has been any diminution of area since the Settlement Officer settled a fair rent for the holding. The learned District Judge does find that the standard of measurement at the inception of the tenancy was the same as that in the Cadastral Survey, but this is directly in conflict with the finding of the Assistant Settlement Officer who finds that the standard was a pole of 5½ cubits in the Cadastral Survey and 5 cubits at the inception of the tenancy. The Record of Rights shows 2 bighas 3 kathas 4 dhurs as the area of the holding and from the Assistant Settlement Officer's judgment it would seem that, in his opinion, there had been no change in the quantity of land held by the plaintiff and that the difference was due to a difference in the two standards of measurement. It does not appear that in the Courts below regard has been paid to the necessity for finding what was the area in respect of which the Settlement Officer made his assessment.

The next point is, that section 109 is a bar to the present suit. Section 105 requires the Revenue Officer to assess a fair rent upon the area actually held by the tenant, and section 105 (A) empowers him, either at the instance of the parties or of his own motion, to raise certain issues regarding the area and other matters. In order to assess a fair rent upon a holding it is necessary for the Settlement Officer to ascertain what is the area held and for this purpose he may either accept the area entered in the Record of Rights or alter it after taking evidence. In the present case the Settlement Officer did not disturb the entry in the Record of Rights as to the area, and the question is, whether the determination of the area is a matter which has already been the subject of an application made in the suit instituted or proceedings taken before the Settlement Officer under section 105. In my opinion the answer is in the affirmative. It is not necessary that a direct issue should have been raised as to the area of the holding. If it was impossible for the Settlement Officer to assess a fair rent in respect of the land held by the tenant without ascertaining the quantity, then the question of area was one of the matters which was the subject of the proceedings under section 105. In my opinion, therefore, the question of area cannot be again raised in the present civil suit.

It is contended that there can be no application of the rule of res judicata by analogy and the reliance is placed upon Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Ahmad Hussain (1) and Apurba Krishna Roy v. Syama Charan Pramanik (2). In my opinion these cases have no applicaion to the facts before us. There is no question at all of applying the rules of res judicata by analogy. The sole point is, whether section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which is couched in very wide language covers the present case. It is contended by the respondent that in the present case the Assistant Settlement Officer never applied his mind to the question of area and that he was only considering whether any enhancement could be allowed on the ground of a rise in prices upon the rental entered in the Record of Rights, viz., Rs. 15-15-0. It is urged that a decision on a point which was never raised is not res judicata merely because it might have been raised. It is difficult to see how the landlord could have raised the point as his case was that there had been no change in the area. The tenant certainly would not have raised it if he thought that his area has diminished from 3 bighas 3 kathas 16 dhurs to 2 bighas 3 kathas 4 dhurs. But whether the tenant or the landlord raised it or not, it was the duty of the Assistant Settlement Officer to raise it in order to assess the rent. The contention that the Assistant Settlement Officer merely considered how many annas per rupee were to be allowed as enhancement on the ground of rise in prices and that he did not consider the question of area at all implies that the Assistant Settlement Officer neglected to perform his duty, and it cannot be accepted without proof. It may be that every entry in a Record of Rights need not be the subject of a proceeding under section 105, and that in respect of some matters a subsequent suit either under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act before a Revenue Officer or an ordinary title suit before a Civil Court would not be barred. It is not necessary for our purposes to examine that question. It is sufficient to say that in the present case it has not been shown that there has been any diminuation in the area on which rent was last assessed, and that no suit for abatement can lie. The appeal is, therefore, decreed with costs to the appellant in all Courts.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for possession of a house situated in the town of Bijnor of which the plaintiff is zemindar. The plaintiff's case was that the house was occupied by the defendant's father as tenant.

The defendant's case was that his father occupied it adversely.

The lower Appellate Court finds that the defendant's father occupied the house adversely more than twelve years before the suit. This finding is fatal to the appeal. The ruling in Jai Chand v. Girwar Singh (1) which has been referred to, does not apply to the facts of this case. The appeal fails and we accordingly dismiss it. We make no order as to costs as the respondent is not represented.

Held, that claims for damages for breach of contract were not excluded under the clause.

A suit for damages for alleged breach of contract can be stayed by a Court in a proper case pending reference to arbitration.

But it is open to the Court to decline to stay the action either by reason of the fact that there are charges of fraud, or by reason of the Court coming to the conclusion that in arbitration complete justice cannot be obtained between the parties, or for some other proper cause that the matter should be kept in Court rather than be referred to arbitration.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—In this case the dispute arises under a contract as to whether the vendors had broken the contract by failing to deliver at the proper time, and whether the purchasers were entitled to sue in respect of the alleged breach and, if so, whether they are entitled to any and what damages

From the correspondence it would appear that there might be a counter-claim also on the ground that the vendors allege that the purchasers failed to take and pay for the goods as they were bound to do under the contract. The contract contains an arbitration clause, Art. 12, in the following terms: "Should any dispute arise as to the interpretation of this contract or any matter in connection therewith or with the carrying out thereof, the same shall be submitted to arbitration," and it gives the merchants an option as to the form of arbitration. An application was made to stay the suit pending reference to arbitration under Art. 12 of the contract. The learned Judge stayed the action and this is an appeal from that order.

It is argued before us that the learned Judge had no power to stay the action, because the claim made, as appears from the plaint, was for damages for breach of the contract, and it was argued that, under such an arbitration clause, claims for damages for breach of the contract are excluded. I asked, in the course of the argument, if such claims were excluded, and I received no answer. Authority for the proposition there is none. Reference to arbitration under similar clauses in respect of breaches of contract is of daily occurrence in England and, as far as my experience goes, no one ever ventured to suggest to the Court there that there was no power to refer in matters of breach of contract, the real reason being that it is only in respect of breaches of contract that references arise. There may be questions of interpretation of contract not involving a breach which would also be covered, but these must be very rare. The ordinary scope of such a clause is that the ordinary commercial disputes which almost always involve an alleged breach, on one side or the other should be referred to a Tribunal chosen by the parties, namely, arbitration, instead of going to Court. The learned Judge puts the test in this way: "The test is whether the claim is made in respect of a contract which parties declare binding on them or in respect of a matter arising de hors the contract in a cause of action based on its invalidity." I do not know where those words come from, but I think they are quoted from some leading authorit and, at any rate, in my judgment, correctly state the position in law. If the case is on a matter arising out of the contract, the most usual instance of that being a case of breach of contract like the present, there is no doubt whatever that there is power in the Court to refer to arbitration. It is true that in certain cases the Court will not exercise that power. Those are cases where, either by reason of the fact that there are charges of fraud, or by reason of the Court coming to the conclusion that in arbitration complete justice cannot be obtained between the parties, or for some other proper cause that the matter should be kept in Court than be referred to arbitration, the Court can decline to stay the action. There is nothing of that sort in this case, and, in my judgment, the learned Judge was perfectl correct in staying this action. This appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Ramesam, J.—I agree. Wallis v. Hirsch, (1) is a case in which a question of fraud was raised and the learned Judges refused to exercise their discretion in referring the case to arbitration and staying all proceedings Nobel Brothers Petroleum Production Co. v. P. Stewart & Co. (2) does not help the appellant, as the facts are rather peculiar. But, apart from this, the case seems to be one of doubtful authority and very near the line. The decision in Piercy v. Young (3) states the principle correctly and it is clear that the appellant has no case.

Recitals in deeds cannot by themselves be relied upon for the purpose of proving the assertions of fact which they contain, but when a long time has elapsed between an alienation and the suit challenging it, and when all those who could have given evidence on the relevant points have grown old or have passed away, a recital in the deed of transfer, consistent with the probabilities and circumstances of the case, assumes greater importance and cannot lightly be set aside.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 28th April 1922, modifying that of the Junior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 23rd December 1921.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Appellants.

Malak Mukammad Tofail, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 27th of April 1898, Musammat Khanam Ji, widow of one Fateh Shah, sold 62 kanals, 5 marlas of land in Mauza Dheri Shahan in Fateh Jang Tahsil of the Campbellpore District to one Shankar Das for Rs. 800. On the 28th of April 1899 she sold another plot of 8 kanals of land in the same village to Bhagwan Das and others for Rs. 96. In June 1920 the plaintiffs brought this suit for possession alleging that they were the reversioners of Fateh Shah, the husband of Musammat Khanam Ji; that the land was ancestral, and that the alienation was without consideration and legal necessity. The defendants repudiated these allegations and contended, that the land was the self-acquired property of the deceased; that the alienation was for consideration and necessity, and that in the presence of daughters the plaintiffs had no right to maintain the suit. The Trial Court found in favour of the defendants-vendees on all points and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. On appeal the learned District Judge upheld the finding of the Trial Court in so far as the first deed of 1898 was concerned but came to a contrary finding on the question of the plaintiffs' locus standi to maintain the suit and also with regard to the nature of the property which he found to be ancestral. He further held that no necessity and consideration had been established for the second sale-deed of 1899, and he accordingly passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for possession of the land covered by that sale deed.

Against this decision a second appeal has been preferred to this Court by the defendant-vendee, and it has been contended on his behalf that the finding of the learned District Judge as to the second sale-deed not being for necessity and consideration is not very clear and definite and that it should be set aside. A preliminary objection is raised on behalf of the respondents that the finding is one of fact and cannot be impugned in second appeal. In my opinion there is no force in the respondents' objection, and it must be overruled. The consideration, as recited in the sale-deed, was made up of the following three items:—

(1)	Due on account of a decree for arrears of rent ...	71	13	0
(2)	Paid cash for registration	8	0	0
(3)	Due on account of the price of corn by the vendor	16	3	0

The learned District Judge does not definitely find that there was no decree in existence on account of which Rs. 71-13-0 were paid by the vendor. His finding only amounts to this that the recital in the sale-deed has not been sufficiently corroborated by other evidence on the record. But it should be remembered that the sale-deed was effected in 1899 and that the original vendee is now dead. It has been held by the Judicial Committee in Nanda Lal v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya (1) that recitals in deeds cannot by themselves be relied upon for the purpose of proving the assertions of fact which they contain, but that, when a long period has elapsed between the alienation and the suit to set it aside, and when all those who could have given evidence on the relevant points have grown old or have passed away, a recital consistent with the probabilities and circumstances of the case assumes greater importance and cannot lightly be set aside. This authority is exactly in point and I do not think that in this case the recitals in the sale-deed, which are clear evidence of the representations that must have been made to the vendee, can be disregarded after such a length of time. The learned District Judge admits in his judgment that the mortgage-deeds (D. 15 and D. 17), dated the 9th of January 1880, executed by Nigah Ali Shah, the father of Fateh Shah, in favour of Prabh Dial, the father of Tara Chand, and of Bhagwan Das, vendee, show that there must have been dealings between Nigah Ali Shah's family and the family of the vendee. This circumstance, coupled with the recitals in the sale-deed, is quite sufficient to support necessity for the deed, and I do not see any sufficient reason why the alienation in question should be set aside.

I accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 118 —Suit for declaration that adoption invalid—Limitation, terminus a quo

The period of limitation for a suit for a declaration that an adoption by a Hindu widow is invalid and for a further declaration that the plaintiff is a reversioner of the husband of the widow, commences to run, under Art. 118 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, from the date of the knowledge of the alleged adoption.

First appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gazipur, dated the 11th December 1920.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for a declaration that the adoption of Bisbunath Rai, defendant No. 2, by Musammat Murta Kuer, the widow of Basudeo Rai, on the 24th of January 1908, under a registered-deed was null and invalid for reasons given in the plaint and for a further declaration that he, the plaintiff-appellant, was a reversioner of Basudeo Rai. A similar suit, it seems, was brought by the plaintiff-appellant in 1912 which he withdrew with leave to bring a fresh one, if so advised. One of the objections taken to the present suit was that the claim was barred under Art. 118 of the Indian Limitation Act.

The learned Subordinate Judge in whose Court the suit was filed on the 8th of December 1919 allowed the plea of limitation and dismissed the claim. In appeal before us it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the view of law taken by the Court below is not sound. It is argued that, if the adoption is void ab initio, Art. 118 would not apply. We are unable to accede to this contention. The language of Art. 118 of the Indian Limitation Act is quite clear. Time begins to run from the date of the knowledge of the alleged adoption. Had the plaintiff been suing for possession on the ground that he was the reversioner of Basudeo Rai, and had he further alleged that the adoption of Basudeo Rai was invalid under the Hindu Law, Article 118 would not have been applicable and the plaintiff would have had twelve years within which to sue. The present suit is merely for declaratory relief and Art. 118 is clearly applicable.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 170 (2) —Decree for arrears of rent, sale held in execution of—Application to set aside sale, after holding knocked down to auction-purchaser, competency of —Order refusing to set aside sale—Second appeal, whether lies.

Section 170 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act operates as a bar to an application by the holder of a decree for arrears of rent to set aside a sale held in execution of that decree on the ground that the decree has been satisfied out of Court, when such application is made after the tenure or holding has been knocked down to the auction-purchaser.

An order refusing to set aside a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent is not open to second appeal.

Messrs. Rai T. N. Sahay and Anand Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. N. Singh and Rai Bepin Behari Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These second appeals arise out of sales held in execution of rent-decrees obtained by the decree-holders-appellants. The sales were held on the 9th of August 1920. The case of the decree-holders is that, before the sales were held, their Pleader told the Nazir not to hold the sales inasmuch as petitions of satisfaction of the decree were going to be filed and the Nazir assured him that the sales would not be held. At that time, it is said, the Presiding Officer was in his Chamber and consequently the applications were filed, after he came out of his Chamber. The Nazir was examined in this case and he stated that no doubt the Pleader of the decree-holders told him not to hold the sales, but at that time the sales had already taken place.

We find in the order-sheet two orders of the 9th of August, namely, Nos. 3 and 4. In Order No. 3 the Court recorded the following order:

"Sale held and the property purchased by Jagdip Singh, other than the decree-holder, for Rs. 21. Earnest-money deposited. The balance of the purchase-money to be deposited within 15 days. Put up on 26th August 1920 for further orders."

Order No. 4 runs as follows:

"Afterwards the decree-holders filed a petition certifying full satisfaction of the decretal money. Put up in the presence of the Pleaders."

On the 10th August the auction-purchaser filed a petition opposing the petition of satisfaction filed by the decree-holders. This also was ordered to be put up in the presence of the Pleaders concerned.

On the 11th August the decree-holders filed a petition stating that the sales were held after a petition of satisfaction had been filed and prayed that the sales may not be accepted. In view of the difference between the parties as to when the petition of satisfaction was filed by the decree-holders and as to whether there was a real bona fide petition of satisfaction, the Court took evidence on behalf of both the parties in support of their respective cases.

On the 7th September the Munsif held that the petitions of satisfaction were not bona fide, and that the decrees were, as a matter of fact, not satisfied. In his view it did not matter whether the petitions of satisfaction were filed before or after the sales had taken place, inasmuch as the intimation to the Nazir not to hold the sales was not valid under O. XXI, r. 69, which requires that a sale held within the precincts of the Court-house shall not be adjourned without the leave of the Court, and the Nazir who was conducting the sales had no right to adjourn the sales.

On appeal by the decree-holders the learned Subordinate Judge differed from the view of the Munsif that the petition of the decree-holders was not fit to be entertained inasmuch as the petitions of satisfactions were not bona fide. He was of opinion that it was not the business of the Court to make any enquiry as to whether the payments had actually been made to the decree-holders or not, or whether the petitions of satisfaction filed by the decree-holders were mala fide or bogus. According to him, after a petition of satisfaction is filed by the decree-holder, whether bona fide or mala fide, the sale could not take place. In his view he is supported by the case cited by him in Nawab Haider Mirza v. Pandit Kailash Narain Dar (1). The learned Subordinate Judge is also supported in his view by section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act though he does not expressly refer to it. This section seems to have been lost sight of by the Munsif for he does not refer to it in his judgment. Clause (2) of that section clearly provides for a decree-holder to make an application for a release of the tenure or holding on the ground that the decree has been satisfied out of Court. Upon such an application the tenure or holding shall be released from attachment provided the application is made before the tenure or holding is knocked down to the purchaser. Under that section no enquiry is needed as to whether the application is bona fide or not. The only condition laid down is that the application should have been made before the tenure or holding is knocked down to the auction-purchaser. The evidence of the Nazir was that the decree-holder's Pleader asked him not to hold the sales after the sales had taken place. The Orders Nos. 3 and 4 in the order-sheet of the Munsif referred to above clearly show that the decree-holder's petition certifying full satisfaction of the decretal money was made after the sales were held and the property was purchased by the auction-purchaser and earnest-money was deposited. In Order No. 3 the Court, therefore, had already accepted the sale.

(1) 47 Ind. Cas. 177; 21 O. C. 161; 5 O. L. J. 482.

The petition filed by the decree-holders was, therefore, a little too late. None of the Courts has come to a definite finding as to whether the verbal intimation to the Nazir was made before or after the sales had actually taken place. The parties were at variance on this point. If it were held that the intimation was given to the Nazir of full satisfaction of the decrees and, therefore, not to hold the sales, perhaps the Nazir would not have been justified to persist in knocking down the holdings in question, for section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not require either a written application or that an application for release of the tenure or holding, on the ground that the decree has already been satisfied out of Court, should be made to the Court and not to the Officer conducting the sale. I do not agree with the view of the Courts below that O. XXI, r. 69 had any application to the present case if in fact the intimation of satisfaction of the decree was given to the Nazir before the sales had taken place, regard being had to the fact that the Presiding Officer of the Court was in Chamber and it was almost physically impossible to make the application to the Court, though, as the Munsif says, there was nothing to prevent the decree-holders' Pleader coming into his Chamber; but that would have been an unusual thing and the decree-holders' Pleader might or might not have liked to go into the Chamber. Had the matter rested there, I would have considered it to be a case of illegal sale in contravention of section 170, clause (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act; but it appears from the orders referred to above that the application by the decree-holder certifying full satisfaction of the decrees was made to the Court after the Court had accepted the sales. Presumably, the order accepting the sales was signed when the Presiding Officer came out of his Chamber and sat on his Ijlas, in the absence of any proof that Order No. 3 was signed by the Presiding Officer in his Chamber. In this view, the application of the decree-holder was made after the sales had taken place and the bid was accepted by the Court (not only by the Nazir), and, therefore, the sales cannot be set aside on account of the application made by the decree-holders for the release of the tenure or holding on the ground that the decrees were satisfied out of Court.

When the case was first argued before us there was a talk of compromise, and the Vakil on behalf of the decree-holders offered to pay 5 per cent. of the purchase-money as compensation to the purchaser. The compromise, however, ultimately failed and the case had, therefore, to be heard again. Considering that the case was a hard one, I was myself inclined to think that this was a fit case to be compromised. At that time my attention was not drawn to section 170, Bengal Tenancy Act, and in fact neither the Courts below nor the learned Vakils appearing on behalf of the parties in this case drew my attention to that section. On a fuller consideration of the case I hold that section 170, Bengal Tenancy Act, bars the application of the decree-holders to have the sales set aside. In fact, no proper application for having the sales set aside was made under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sales. The application of the 9th of August was an application for satisfaction of the decree. The application of the 11th August was an application asking the Court not to accept the sales. Obviously, the decree-holders treated the sales as being wholly without jurisdiction.

It appears to me that second appeals in this case from the order of the Court below are incompetent. The learned Vakil on behalf of the appellants asked me to convert the appeals into applications for revision. Even if his request is acceded to, it has already been shown that there is no want of jurisdiction or any illegality or irregularity in the order of the Court below and consequently this Court will not have power to revise the order of the Court below.

The result is, that the appeals are dismissed. In view of the circumstances of the case, I would make no order as to costs.

Landlord and tenant—Tenant's house falling down—Test for determining whether site reverts to landlord—Abandonment, what is.

The test for determining whether, when the house of a tenant falls down, the site reverts to the landlord, is whether the tenant has abandoned the premises. The mere fact that he has not repaired the premises for a considerable time is no proof of abandonment.

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Banda, dated the 22nd December 1920.

Mr. N. Upadhiya, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. N. Katju and H. K. Kaul, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit out of which this appeal arises are these:—

Ram Bharose and Chakkoo were the owners of a house and chaupal in the village of Marka in the Banda District. Some 8 or 9 years ago the house fell down. The land was not cleared and the dilapidated house remained in possession of the plaintiffs. The defendant opened a door in his house which adjoins, facing on the dilapidated house in a manner which would interfere with the privacy of the occupants of the house when the house was re-built and again became occupied. The plaintiff's case is that in 1920 they commenced to repair the dilapidated house. The defendant interfered with their possession of the house and chaupal; hence the suit for possession of the dilapidated house and chaupal and for the closing of the door. The Munsif found that as the house had fallen down, the plaintiffs had lost all title therein, the ruin and the site having escheated to the zemindar; and he, therefore, dismissed the suit in respect of possession of the dilapidated house and the closing of the door, but as he found that the plaintiffs had good title to the chaupal, he decreed the suit for possession of the chaupal.

The Additional Subordinate Judge found that the dilapidated house was still a house; that the plaintiffs had title to it which they had never lost; that the defendant had interfered with their possession both over the house and the chaupal, and that the opening of the door was prejudicial to the plaintiffs' title. He, therefore, decreed the claim in full. The defendant comes here in second appeal.

The main point taken by his learned Counsel is that, when a tenant's house falls down the site reverts to the zemindar. I cannot accept this conclusion. If it were accepted, the consequences would be somewhat surprising, for there is not a year in this Province when a large number of tenants' houses do not fall down. In a year such as the present, in which the rains have been very intense for a short period, in many villages the greater part of the tenants' houses have practically melted away, and if it were decided that this circumstance involved the escheating of the site to the zemindar, a large number of agricultural tenants would be homeless at the present moment. There is no authority for the view propounded. The real test is this Has the tenant abandoned the house? A tenant is not expected to keep his house up to any particular standard of repair. If he lets the roof fall in and chooses to reside in a roofless building he cannot be ejected for the reason that he has allowed the disrepair to get beyond a certain point. The question is, have the premises been abandoned? And on the learned Subordinate Judge's finding it is quite clear that these premises were never abandoned. The plaintiffs have certainly taken a considerable time for repairing them but they are at liberty to repair them now. It is to be noted that no claim has been asserted by the zemindar in the matter. I, therefore, find that the learned Subordinate Judge was right. The plaintiffs have good title to the dilapidated premises as well as to the chaupal. They have every right to repair those premises. The opening of the door interferes with their user. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 19th January 1922.

Mr. Mehr Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. N. Kapur, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.— On the 11th September 1905, one Ali Bakhsh sold certain land to Fateh Khan for Rs. 1,200. Mutation was effected on the 7th July 1907. On the 21st June 1920, Wali Muhammad, son of Ali Bakhsh, instituted a suit for possession of the land sold alleging that it was ancestral and that the sale had been effected without consideration and necessity. The vendee contested the suit pleading both consideration and necessity, and also that the plaintiff was a major at the date of the sale and by word and act had waived his right to contest the transaction, and the suit was barred by time. The Trial Court held that the plaintiff was a minor at the date of the sale and that the land was ancestral. The sale was then found to have been effected for consideration and necessity and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed without any discussion or decision of the remaining issues. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the District Judge attacking the finding of the Munsif on the question of necessity. The consideration was made up of the following items:—

(a) Due to the vendee on a previous mortgage, Rs. 200. (b) Due to Jemal Khan, previous mortgagee, Rs. 300. (c) To be taken in Jeth Sambat 1963, Rs. 400. (d) Registration and other expenses, Rs. 24. (e) Paid before the Sub-Registrar, Rs. 276.

The learned District Judge has treated the case in what he terms "a spirit of common sense," and has found that it was difficult for the vendee to show after this lapse of time what the actual necessity for the alienation was. He has not discussed the items of Rs. 200 and Rs. 300, but apparently the arguments before him centered round the items of Rs. 400 and Rs. 276. There appears to be no evidence whatever relating to the necessity for this sum of Rs. 400 which was to be paid (and was apparently paid) on the 20th May 1906. It has been laid down in Khazan Singh v. Suhel Singh (1) that a male proprietor is not entitled to anticipate necessities. The mere lapse of time does not remove the need for proving necessity although it may render the quantum of proof comparatively small. Qua these Rs. 400 the authority cited above appears to me to be conclusive. Qua the item of Rs. 276 there is no evidence on the record from which necessity can be gathered. It certainly cannot be presumed— vide Miran Bakhsh v. Goude Ram (2). These circumstances appear to me to prove that the decision of the lower Appellate Court on the question of necessity is erroneous. Mr. B. N. Kapur for the respondent wished to go into the question of limitation but this point was specifically left undecided by the Trial Court and I am unable to see that there is any material on the record to enable me to come to any definite conclusion as to it.

I, therefore, accept this appeal and return the case to the Court of first instance for disposal of the remaining issues in the case. Costs in this Court will follow the event.

Mr. Reyasut Hussain, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This application is directed against the order of the learned Registrar, dated the 16th of February 1923, declining to print certain papers in the paper-book. The petition upon which the application was made admitted that the "papers were not formally exhibited though the Court was requested to do so." It sets out the fact that, though these papers were not exhibited, the Court treated the papers as part of the record and has even mentioned those papers in its judgment. On these facts it was quite impossible for the learned Registrar to accede to the application of the applicant. But it now appears that the papers, which the petitioners want to be printed in the paper-book are, first, the decree passed by the Court and, secondly, the agreement between the parties upon which the decree was passed and which forms part of the decree. The appeal is from an order of the learned Subordinate Judge refusing to execute the decree. It is obvious that the decree is part of the record and it was not necessary for the applicant to tender the decree formally in evidence. The whole question in appeal will be whether the decree is capable of execution. That is the question which the learned Subordinate Judge has decided and the appellant will contend in appeal that the decree is in fact capable of execution.

These facts were not placed before the learned Registrar and the result was that the learned Registrar refused the application of the applicant.

We direct that the decree be printed in the paper-book. As regards the other papers, if they form part of the decree, then they will be printed; if not, then they will not be printed.

HEMANGINI DASSI v. BHAGWATI SUNDARI DASSI.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit out of which this appeal arises are as follows: A certain lady, called Aswameah Kuer, had what appears to have been a Hindu widow's estate in a certain village. She gave perpetual lease of certain plots to one Gopal. Under this perpetual lease Gopal had power to transfer his rights. The plots were agricultural land. After the lady's death Gopal transferred these plots to Kandhaiya and Gawal, defendants-appellants. The lady was succeeded by the present plaintiff-respondent, Musammat Raj Rup Kunwar.

The defendants-appellants constructed a house upon these plots and planted trees. The plaintiff-respondent sued to eject them under sections 57, 63 (b). The Assistant Collector permitted the ejectment subject to a proviso that if the defendants paid Rs. 50 compensation and removed the house and trees they should be pemitted to retain possession. The learned District Judge in appeal set aside the latter portion of the order and decreed unconditional ejectment. The defendants appeal here.

The plea taken on their behalf must, I think, succeed. The suit, as brought, was premature. There is nothing to show that the lady who granted the permanent lease had an estate other than a Hindu widow's estate in the property in question. It appears to have been found by the learned District Judge that she had such widow's estate. Now that estate is not a life-estate, and it is not an estate held in trust for reversioners. She represented the estate and had power to make alienations subject to the right of the reversioners to have those alienations set saside if they were found to be either not for legal necessity or not for the benefit of the estate, but until such alienations are set aside they do not cease to be operative. The defendants-appellants are in the same position as Gopal and it was necessary for the plaintiff-respondent to set aside the alienation which the lady had made in favour of Gopal as precedent to instituting a suit for the ejectment of the defendants-appellants through the Revenue Courts. I, therefore, allow this appeal and direct that the suit of the plaintiff-respondent be dismissed. The plaintiff-respondent will pay his own costs and those of the defendants-appellants in all Courts. These costs will include in this Court fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which have given rise to this appeal and to the connected Rules, shortly stated, are as follows:—One Monmohan Das, who was possessed of considerable properties both moveable and immoveable died on the 2nd March 1908 leaving him surviving his two widows, Hemangini Dassi and Bhagbatti Sundari Dassi, and a son, alleged to be of unsound mind, named Gobind Chand Dass by the said Srimati Bhagbati

Sundari Dassi, a deceased daughter's son and two unmarrie daug ters named Nanibala and Khudibala by the said Bhagbati Sundari and Hemangini respectively. The said Khudibala died unmarried sometime in 1320 B. S. Gobind Chand Dass died on the 10th April 1908 without any issue leaving him surviving his widow Srimati Bundeswari Dassi. Manmohan Das left a Will by which he appointed six executors and the Will directed that, in the event of there being difference of opinion between the executors in respect of any matter relating to the estate of the testator, the opinion of the majority should prevail. Application having been made by the said six executors for Probate of the said Will, the said two widows intervened and applied to be appointed as executrixes on the ground that they had been appointed impliedly so under the said Will. On the 18th January 1909, Probate of the said Will was granted by the District Judge of Rajshahi to the said six executors and to the said two widows. Sometime in 1912—13 two out of the said six executors died and thereafter the estate was administered by the surviving executors and by the two widows. In 1319 Nanibala was married to one Lalit Mohan Podder and a dispute subsequently arose between the two widows regarding the adoption of a boy named Shyamapada Das as a son to the testator. This dispute was compromised some time in Ashar 1325, when it was settled between the parties that the accumulations of the income of the estate amounting to Rs. 77,000 should be divided between the two widows, Nanibala and the grandson (Sachindra) of the testator in certain proportions and that Hemangini Dassi should execute an ekrar in favour of her co-widow acknowledging the validity of the adoption by her of the said Shyamapada Das. In Kartick 1325 the adopted son Shyamapada Das died. In 1919 Hemangini Dassi who had not been paid her portion of the said accumulations instituted a suit being Suit No. 361 of 1919, for construction of the said Will and for administration of the estate of the said testator. The defendants in that suit were no less than fourteen in number, i.e., the four surviving original executors and certain other parties, the relationship between whom appears from the following geneological table:—

On the 16th September 1920, the plaintiff, Hemangini, filed a petition prayng that the suit may be disposed of in accordance with certain terms of compromise arrived at between her of the one part and three of the executors, namely, defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 5 of the other part. One of the terms of the said compromise was that a sum of Rs. 24,500 should be paid out of the estate of the said testator to Hemangini in accordance with the terms of Settlement of Ashar 1325. Along with this petition of compromise, an affidavit by one Rakhal Chandra Das was filed in which it was pointed out that although the proposed compromise was beneficial to the infant defendant No. 14 the defendant No. 1 as the guardian ad litem of the said infant had refused to give her consent to the said settlement and that in the circumstances it was necessary that defendant No. 1 should be removed and another person, namely, one Girish Chandra Das, the natural father of the infant, should be appointed guardian ad litem in place of the defendant No. 1 Srimati Bhagbati Dassi. The defendant No. 14, it may be noted here, was adopted as a son by Srimati Bhagbati after the death of Shyamapada Das who has been referred to above. On the 18th September 1920 the said Girish Chandra Das filed a petition praying that he may be appointed guardian ad litem of the minor defendant No. 14 in place of Srimati Bhagbati. By the terms of the proposed compromise the junior widow, i.e., the plaintiff, relinquished all claims to the estate of the said testator and admitted the validity of the second adoption recognising the minor adopted son of the senior widow namely, the defendant No. 14, as the sole heir to the said estate; but these admissions and the withdrawal were made conditional on the payment to the plaintiff of the said sum of Rs. 24,500. The applications referred to above were vigorously contested by the other widow Sreemati Bhagbati and the dissenting executor Madan Mohan Das before the Subordinate Judge before whom the administration suit was pending; but, meanwhile, a separate application had been brought by the plaintiff before the District Judge for permission to compromise the said suit in terms of the draft petition of the compromise filed before the Subordinate Judge and for sanction to the payment of Rs. 24,500 out of the said estate to the plaintiff. The District Judge called for a report from the Subordinate Judge. The latter reported on the 7th October 1920, that the petition of compromise should be approved of by the Court; but in disposing of the application filed by the plaintiff he recorded the following order on the 7th October 1920 in the order-sheet of the said Suit No. 361 of 1919:—" An application has been made before the District Judge for permission to compromise this suit according to the draft Solenama filed before me and for sanction for the payment of Rs. 24,500 to the plaintiff. The District Judge has called for my report which will be submitted to-morrow. It is not desirable and proper that final orders should be passed by this Court in the matter until the application pending before the District Judge is disposed of. It is necessary that the matter should be re-considered in the light of the order passed by the District Judge. Plaintiff is directed to file a certified copy of the District Judge's order. Put up on the 29th November 1920 for further hearing."

It appears that the learned District Judge, after perusing the report of the learned Subordinate Judge, expressed himself in the following manner on the 8th October 1920 against the acceptance of the compromise:—"Circumspection is very necessary owing to the charges of maladministration urged by the junior widow herself as plaintiff. I also do not feel safe in expressing approval of the terms—the payment of Rs. 24,500 for which a somewhat dictatorial demand is made, such that it looks as if this were the raison d'etre of the Solenama. The questionably advisable payment of Rs. 24,500 will not save the estate from litigation, and the safest course is to seek for a surer basis in the determination of the administration suit in regular course." Thereafter, a fresh application to compromise the suit on the terms which had already been mentioned to the Court was filed before the learned Subordinate Judge on the 4th December 1920, on behalf of the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 5, containing, among others, the following prayers:—" That an order may be passed that the defendant No. 1 may be removed from the guradianship of the minor defendant No. 14 in connection with this suit for the reason of her offering opposition to the amicable settlement against the interest of the said minor defendant No. 14, and that the aforenamed Girish Chandra Das, the natural father of the minor defendant No. 14, may be appointed his guardian ad litem."

On the 15th December 1920, the Subordinate Judge, by his order of that date, held that there were not sufficient grounds for the removal of defendant No. 1 and for the appointment of Girish Chandra Das as guardian ad litem of defendant No. 14 in place of defendant No. 1. He further held that, inasmuch as a second suit for administration of the said estate had already been commenced by the defendant No. 1 on behalf of herself and as next freind of her adopted son and by the dissenting executor, the proposed compromise even if given effect to, would not end the litigation relating to the estate and he accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's application. Against this last mentioned order, the present appeal from Original Order has been preferred by the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 5. The Civil Rule No.

49 of 1921 is directed against the order of the District Judge, dated the 9th October 1920, refusing permission to make over War Bonds of the value of Rs. 15,000 to the plaintiff in part satisfaction of her claim for Rs. 24,500. The Civil Rule No. 140 of 1921 which was obtained by defendant No. 10, who is the husband of the said Nanibala, is directed against Order No. 178 in the order-sheet dated the 15th December 1920 by which the names of defendants Nos. 10 and 12 were expunged from the record of Suit No. 361 of 1919. Lastly, the Civil Rule No. 593 M of 1922 was obtained by the defendant No. 1 Sreemati Bhagbati Dassi calling upon the plaintiff and the said defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 5 to show cause why a Receiver should not be appointed of the estate of the said testator pending the hearing of the said appeal from the Original Order No. 9 of 1921.

On behalf of the plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 5, who are the appellants before us, it has been contended, in the first place, that the findings of the Court below are inconsistent with its own findings contained in the report submitted to the District Judge on the 7th October 1920, and, in the second place that the Court below ought to have held on the facts on the record that the defendant No. 1 was acting fraudulently in opposing the said compromise and that accordingly the Court below should have removed the defendant No. 1 from the guradianship of the infant defendant and should have appointed Girish Chandra Das or some other person as guardian ad litem of the infant defendant in place of the defendant No. 1.

As regards the first contention, we do not think that the learned Subordinate Judge was precluded from re-considering the matter by reason of what he had said in his report to the learned District Judge on the 7th October 1920. There may, perhaps, be room for criticism as regards the terms of the order made by the District Judge on the 8th October 1920; but it must be remembered that that order was invited by the applicants themselves on their application made to the District Judge. There may also, perhaps, be room for criticism of the terms in which the order of the 7th October 1920 was expressed by the learned Subordinate Judge; but, after all said and done, what was there on the record which tied down the learned Subordinate Judge to the opinion which he had expressed in his report to the learned District Judge? It was, no doubt, irritating to the appellants when they found that in his final order, dated the 15th December 1920, the learned Subordinate Judge had expressed an opinion contrary to that contained in his report to the learned District Judge, but, in law and on the facts of this case, the learned Subordinate Judge was free to change his opinion as often as he liked until he had definitely made a final order, which, as will be seen from the above, was not made till the 15th December 1920. There is, therefore, no substance in the appellant's first contention and it accordingy fails.

As regards the second contention, it is settled law that, although the Court can and must approve of a compromise on behalf of infants, it cannot and will not force one upon them against the opinion of their next freind or guardian ad litem in the action. In the case of In re Birchall, Wilson v. Birchall (1) (where Jessel, M. R., stated the practice adopted by himself and his predecessor Lord Romilly, M. R.) it was definitely ruled that no compromise can be enforced upon infants against the opinion of their guardian or next friend. No doubt, if the Court found that a guardian or next freind was acting improperly and against the infant's interest in refusing to assent to an arrangement which appeared clearly beneficial to them, steps might be taken to remove him and substitute some other person. These being the principles to be borne in mind, can it be said in this case that the action of the learned Subordinate Judge in refusing to remove the defendant No. 1 and in refusing to appoint Girish Chandra Das in place of the defendant No. 1 is unsustainable? We have anxiously considered the whole of the record and we have come to the conclusion that it is impossible for us to say, at this stage of the litigation, that the terms of the proposed compromise are so entirely for the benefit of the minor that no further enquiry should be made into the validity of the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 24,500 and that she should straight away get a decree for Rs. 24,500 to be paid out of the estate of the testator. Further, as has been pointed out by the lower Court, this compromise, even if given effect to, will not end the litigation relating to the estate of the said testator, for important questions, of construction of the Will of the said testator have been raised and, whether in this suit or in the suit started by the defendant No. 1, they will have to be determined by the Court. It is said, however, that the second suit for administration at the instance of the defendant No. 1 is a mala fide suit and has been instituted only with a view to prevent the compromise, referred to above, being sanctioned by the Court. It is sufficient for us to observe that allegation is not proof and that on the materials on the record at this stage it is difficult to express an opinion on the merits of this accusation. We have not seen the Will of the testator, nor have we heard any argument before us as regards the rights of the various parties in this case in and to the estate of the said testator: the matters alleged by the plaintiff in paragraphs 9 to 13 of her plaint clearly call for investigation: we have no materials before us which enable us to say that an enquiry into these matters should now be burked and the disputes adjusted in the manner proposed by the plaintiff. For these reasons; in our opinion, the second contention is equally untenable. The appeal from Original Order No. 9 must, therefore, be dismissed. With it must also fail Civil Rule No. 49 of 1921. As regards Civil Rule No. 593-M of 1922 no orders are now necessary. As regards Civil Rule No. 140 of 1921 the order complained of was one under O. I, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, and, in our opinion, it does not come within the purview of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The result, therefore, is that appeal from Original Order is dismissed with costs which we assess at five gold mohurs. There will be no order for costs as regards Civil Rule No. 49 of 1921 and Civil Rule No. 593-M of 1922. The Civil Rule No. 140 of 1921 is discharged with costs which we assess at two gold mohurs.

The expression "construction", as applied to a document, includes, first, the meaning of the words used in the document; and, secondly, their legal effect, or the effect which is to be given to them. The former is, in all cases, a question of fact, while the latter is a question of law.

Chatenay v. Brazilian Submarine Telegraph Co., (1891) 1 Q. B. 79 at p. 85; 60 L. J. Q. B. 295; 63 L. T. 739; 39 W. R. 65, relied on.

A decision, therefore, as to the meaning of words, and apart from their legal effect, used in a mortgage-deed describing the property transferred cannot be challenged in second appeal.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Moradabad, dated the 6th July 1920.

Mr. Durga Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. L. Banerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration brought by a vendee of property at a sale in execution of a decree that the property in question was not covered by a certain mortgage. The Courts below have found that the mortgage in question did not affect that property and that the property could not be and has not been transferred by a sale in execution of a decree obtained upon that mortgage. The appeal questions that decision. It appears to me that such a point cannot be raised in second appeal, for the plea challenges a question of fact. It challenges the decision as to the meaning of the words used in the mortgage describing the property transferred. It does not challenge the legal effect of the words. I need only refer to the decision of Lindley, L. J., in Chatenay v. Brazilian Submarine Telegraph Co. (1): "The expression 'construction,' as applied to a document, at all events as used by English lawyers, includes two things: first, the meaning of the words; and; secondly, their legal effect, or the effect which is to be given to them. The meaning of the words I take to be a question of fact in all cases, whether we are dealing with a poem or a legal document. The effect of the words is a question of law."

I, therefore, consider that, on the findings of the Courts below, the appeal must fail. I dismiss it with costs, which include fees on the higher scale.

Construction of document—Will or gift.

A document which was throughout called a Will began by reciting that the executor's death was drawing near and he was too weak to go to the Office of the Sub-Registrar and that, therefore, he executed the Will in presence of the Panches. It also recited: "While I am alive out of the entire lands mentioned in this Will I have given forthwith half to my younger brother:" Held, that the words "While I am alive" and "forthwith" did not imply a gift in praesenti and that the document was a Will. Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 43 of 1921.

Mr. R. R. Jawant, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. C. D. Chaudhury and M. R. Dixit, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's claim is based on the allegation that his brother Tukaram, who died on the 31st August 1917, had given to him the property in suit which consists of a joint half share in some fields and a house by a deed of gift on the 24th August 1917, and that when he went to take possession in April 1918 the defendants obstructed him and did not deliver possession to him. The plaintiff claims joint possession. The defendants are the widow of Tukaram and her lessees. Defendant No. 1, the widow, pleaded that Tukaram was lying unconscious for 15 days before his death; that he did not execute the alleged deed of gift; that the deed itself states that it is a Will and that it is not properly registered and is, therefore, void. The document purports to be endorsed by the widow and, in view of this fact, she pleaded that her thumb-mark was forcibly taken by the plaintiff on a piece of paper a few days before Tukaram's death and the Will is probably written on that paper. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who are lessees for a year only, adopted the defence of defendant No. 1. In reply, the plaintiff pleaded on the 10th September 1919 that the document was validly registered and was a gift as possession was immediately to be taken and given. On the 23rd March 1920 the plaintiff pleaded that the transaction was intended by Tukaram and understood by the plaintiff to be a Will but that, when the document was presented to the Sub-Registrar, he construed it as a gift and charged stamp-duty and penalty. Therefore, the defendants pleaded that it was a gift-deed. It was admitted that it was the intention of Tukaram to give possession and this is what was expressed in the document by the words miyajala lagalich dili (I have given him forthwith) it was pleaded that some of the fields which were in possession of Bataidars could not be given into the plaintiff's possession physically and that Tukaram neither told the plaintiff to take possession immediately nor to recover crops and rent from the lessees nor were the tenants sent for. Further on, the plaintiff pleaded that two or three days after the deed was executed Tukaram told the plaintiff to take rent and crops and possession and that both Tukaram and plaintiff thought at the time of the execution of the deed that the direction about the immediate delivery of possession would not change a Will into a gift. The defendant then admitted that the deed was a gift-deed as it transferred immediate ownership to the plaintiff. They also admitted that the property was in possession of lessees as alleged by the plaintiff and that another field No. 25 was also in possession of a lessee.

The Trial Court found that Tukaram executed the document in favour of the plaintiff Maroti while in his senses, and that defendant No. 1's thumb-mark was not taken forcibly on a blank paper but that she attested the document with full knowledge of its contents. It held that as the document was registered after Tukaram's death in the absence of his legal representative Zuglai, defendant No. 1, and on a false representation by the plaintiff that he was himself Tukaram's representative and on his admission of the execution by Tukaram the registration was invalid and the deed void as a gift-deed. It also held that the gift, if any, not being completed by delivery of such possession as was possible under the circumstances was void. However, the Trial Court held that the document was really a Will and did not require registration and decreed the plaintiff's claim. The lower Appellate Court held that the document was a Will duly executed by Tukaram while in his proper senses. It further held that, even if the document was a gift-deed, the registration was valid since the plaintiff as the assignee of Tukaram was the proper person to admit execution of the document. It confirmed the Trial Court's decree. Defendant No. 1 appeals.

The only point argued in appeal is, that the document is a gift-deed and is invalid for want of proper registration.

There can be no doubt that the document is badly worded and the pleadings on behalf of the plaintiff have furnished ground for arguing that it is a gift. The plaintiff has explained how he came to call the document a gift. He himself was uncertain as to whether it will be construed as a Will in his favour and has made apparently disingenuous pleas which might support a gift in case it was held that the document was a gift-deed. I am not prepared to lay much stress on this fact. On the whole, it appears that the document was meant to be a Will and not a gift-deed. It is throughout called a Will. It begins by reciting that the executant's death is drawing near and that he has grown very weak and is unable to go to the office of the Sub-Registrar, and that, therefore, he executes the Will in presence of the Panchas. These recitals indicate that the testator was thinking of how his property was to be disposed of after his death and of the way in which it could be disposed validly without having to go to the Sub-Registrar. Stress is laid on the passage translated "While I am alive out of the entire land mentioned in this Will I have given forthwith (lagalich dilt) half to my younger brother Maroti." I do not think that the use of the words "While I am alive" (mi jiwant asta) and "forthwith" (lagalich) imply a gift in præsenti. Reading the document as a whole, the words seem to be used not to imply that the transfer was made at the very time but to show that by the very document that was being executed the property was to go to the plaintiff. Agreeing with the lower Courts that the document is a Will, I dismiss this appeal, but in view of the unsatisfactory way in which the plaintiff made his pleas I direct that the parties pay their costs throughout as incurred.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 300, 304—Culpable homicide, when murder.

Culpable homicide is not murder unless the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention stated in one or more of the clauses of section 300. Where the question is, whether the injuries caused are sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the nature of the weapon used and of the injuries caused must be taken into consideration. [p. 690, col. 1.]

Accused assaulted the deceased and inflicted no less than fifty injuries, but no blow was inflicted on any vital part with sufficient violence to cause serious damage, such as fracture of the skull:

Held, that the case fell under the second clause of section 304 of the Penal Code. [p. 691, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated the 31st July 1922.

Mr. Niaz Muhammad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhny, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The two brothers, Daraz, appellant, and Buta, were charged under section 302, Indian Penal Code, with the murder of their third brother Niaz, and on trial in the Court of Session at Rawalpindi, the former was convicted and sentenced to transportation for life, while the latter was acquitted of murder but convicted of simple hurt under section 323, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months. He has not appealed.

That the appellant attacked Niaz and caused injuries to him is not denied before us, nor is there any contest with regard to the main facts as they appear in the account of the assault given by the prosecution witnesses. It is, therefore, not necessary to state these facts at great length and we summarise them as below,—

Some three years before the event, the two convicts, Buta and Daraz, purchased 48 kanals of land for Rs. 2,500 and had it mutated in their names. Niaz was at that time in service out of the village, but claimed to have remitted to his brothers his quota of the purchase-money. He left service and came back to his village and had been cultivating the land for about one year jointly with his brother Buta when Daraz, who had for the whole of this year been absent in Rawalpindi, came back at the harvest time, only eight days before the fateful day. On that day, which was the 8th May last, the three brothers with their wives, mother and farm labourer Raushan, were at their threshing floor in the land in question, at 11 A. M. Wheat had already been threshed and was lying there. Daraz claimed his share and wanted to have it divided there and then. Niaz demurred to it saying that it should be carried home and divided there and not before his name was entered in the revenue papers as a co-owner of the land. This led to an altercation and assault upon Niaz by Daraz and Buta. Niaz was felled to the ground and given a prolonged beating by Daraz with a mungli or cudgel. His mother and the farm labourer Raushan and Fazal Ilahi Mochi, who had come up, endeavoured to rescue him but in vain. Then his wife, Musammat Fatto, fled towards the village for help. On the way she met the Patwari and told him that her husband was being beaten by his brothers. On reaching the village she gave information to Misri Khan, lambardar, who at once rode to the spot where he found Niaz and his mother both lying injured. The eye-witnesses were Musammat Fatto, widow of the deceased, Musammat Karam Bibi, the mother of the three brothers, Raushan, their farm labourer, and Fazal Ilahi Mochi (P.Ws. Nos. 3 to 6) who deposed to the facts stated above. Further, there was the evidence of the Patwari who proceeded to the spot immediately and on arrival there found Niaz lying on the ground. He called to him and enquired what had happened to him. It was with difficulty that he replied that he had been beaten by his brothers. They, too, were still there with their wives and mothers.

As there could be no more trustworthy and reliable witness than the mother of the appellant who deposes that Niaz was killed by him and as the appellant himself stated that the fight took place between him and the deceased and that Buta did not take part in it, the learned Counsel did not think it proper to contest the fact that Niaz was killed by Daraz and confined his arguments to showing that the offence committed was not murder and that the sentence was excessive.

The learned Sessions Judge found that "the assault was absolutely unpremeditated, that there was a sudden quarrel and that the deceased was attacked and beaten in the heat of passion and that there was no intention to cause death," but convicted the appellant of murder, arguing that "any person who beats another so mercilessly and with such utter disregard for the consequences must be deemed to have had the knowledge that death was likely to result from the effects of the injuries caused by him, and to have inflicted them with the intention set out in clauses secondly and thirdly of section 300, Indian Penal Code." But even if, as held by the learned Sessions Judge, the appellant had the knowledge that death was likely to result from the effects of the injuries caused by him, he was guilty not of murder but of culpable homicide only. According to clause (2) of section 299, Indian Penal Code, "whoever causes death by doing an act with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death commits the offence of culpable homicide, and culpable homicide is not murder unless the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention stated in one or more of the four clauses of section 300. These four clauses are to be interpreted in the light of the four illustrations appended to it—one for each clause. Now, if clause (2) be read with illustration (b) it becomes clear that it does not apply unless the offender knows "that the particular person injured is likely either from peculiarity of constitution or immature age or other special circumstances to be killed by an injury which would not ordinarily cause death." Clause (3) does not apply unless the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, and illustration (c) shows what sort of injury is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, "a sword-cut or club-wound sufficient to cause the death of a man in the ordinary course of nature." Therefore, the question is whether the injuries caused in this case were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. To answer this, we have to take into consideration the nature of (1) the weapon used and (2) the injuries caused. Unfortunately, the weight of the weapon was not ascertained and proved as it ought to have been, and we are, therefore, unable to judge exactly the effect with which it would be used, though we know the effect that it actually produced. If it was so light that even if used with sufficient violence, no lethal blow could be inflicted with it, it would follow that it was used to give a thrashing and not to inflict fatal or dangerous injuries. In this connection, we may invite the attention of the learned Sessions Judge to the Rules and Order of the Chief Court, Volume II, page 162, paragraph 33, according to which the weight of the weapon ought to have been proved.

As regards the injuries, they were numerous according to the evidence of the medical witness who made the post mortem examination, but were all simple with the exception of three which were fracture of (1) the right eighth rib, (2) right ulna bone and (3) fourth metacarpal bone. "The cause of death was shock from multiple injuries on various parts of the body." These injuries were described under 27 heads. Among the simple hurts there were three contused wounds, one on the head and one on the right shin, a tooth bite and two punctures. The rest were all contusions but some were so large as to indicate that each was the result of several blows, for instance the following:—

No. 16 a broad contusion on the right buttock 6" by 3½".

No. 19 a contusion 8" by 5" on the back of the right upper arm.

No. 27 a broad contusion on the back 12" by 9".

These injuries show that the number of blows given were not less than 50, but no blow was inflicted on any vital part with sufficient violence to cause serious damage such as fracture of the skull. It cannot be said that the injuries which the appellant intended to inflict were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. All that can be inferred from his act of prolonged beating is that he knew that the injuries that he was inflicting might cause death.

Where the prisoner assaulted a thief so severely that 141 marks of separate blows were found on his body and several of his ribs were broken, and he died, Queen v. Man (1) where the husband and the father of a woman, who had been enticed away, laid in wait for the offender and fell upon him when he came up, beat him unmercifully with sticks and broke several of his ribs causing injury to his lungs, and he died from the effects of the injuries [Faqir Muhammad v. Empress (2)] and where a man killed his wife by a single blow, it was held that they had committed culpable homicide and that their offence fell under the latter part of section 304. Similarly, in Reg. v. Govinda (3), in which the prisoner knocked his wife down, put one knee on her chest, and struck her two or three violent blows on the face with the closed fist, producing extravasation of blood on the brain, and she died in consequence, it was held that there being no intention to cause death, and the bodily injury not being sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the offence committed was not murder but culpable homicide.

In the present case the cudgel used by the prisoner does not appear from the sketch of it which is on the record to be a formidable weapon, and though a few blows were inflicted on the head, they were not dealt with any great violence because they caused simple hurts only. Therefore, we are of opinion, that the case falls under clause (2) of section 304, Indian Penal Code, and accordingly we accept the appeal so far as to alter the conviction to that under section 304, Part II, and reduce the punishment to rigorous imprisonment for ten years.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE NO. 954 OF 1922.
(CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION NO. 794 OF 1922).

August 17, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Krishnan.

In re K. V. S. RAMA CHANDRA RAO—ACCUSED—PETITIONER.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), s. 249, Sch. V, cl. (q)—"Likely to be dangerous to human life, health or property," Interpretation of—Machinery—Presumption of danger—Conversion of paddy into rice, whether industrial purpose.

The expression "which is likely to be dangerous to human life or health or property" occurring in Schedule V, clause (q), of the Madras District Municipalities Act must be read as qualifying not only the last clause "any industrial purpose" but has to be read with each one of the preceding clauses. [p. 692, col. 1.]

Ordinarily, any large machinery is dangerous to human life, but this cannot be presumed with reference to any particular machinery, such as a rice mill for converting paddy into raw rice. [p. 692, col. 1.]

The conversion of paddy into rice is an industrial purpose within the meaning of clause (q) of Schedule V in Madras Act V of 1920. [p. 692, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment, dated the 27th July 1922, of the Court of the Joint Magistrate, Rajamundry, in Criminal Appeal No. 12 of 1922, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Second Class Bench Magistrate, Rajamundry, in Bench Case No. 254 of 1921.

Mr. P. Venkataramana Rao, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—This case raises the question of the construction of section 249 of Madras District Municipalities Act, V of 1920, taken with clause (q) of Schedule V. The accused keeps a rice mill for converting paddy into raw rice, within three miles of the Municipal limits of Rajamundry. A Notification was issued under section 249 of that Act and as the result of that the parties doing anything for one or more of the purposes specified in Schedule V were obliged to take out licenses from the Chairman. The accused has been convicted for not taking out a license accordingly for this rice mill within the time allowed.

It is argued before me that the conviction is wrong, as accused's mill was not used for any of the purposes mentioned in Schedule V. The point turns on how clause (q) of Schedule V, is to be construed, particularly whether the last words of it "which is likely to be dangerous to human life or health or property" are to be read as qualifying the last clause "any industrial proces" or are to be read with each of the clauses preceding it beginning with "storing any explosive or combustible material." Some clue to the construction of this clause "q" is given in the proviso to it wherein the words "for private use" have to be clearly read with each one of the preceding words as otherwise it will be a direct contradiction of clause (n) above. It seems to me reasonable to read "likely to be dangerous to human life, health or property" as qualifying each one of the previous clauses in "q" and not merely the last. The object seems to me to bring under Municipal control by the method of issuing licenses the keeping or using of things which are dangerous to human life, health or property. To hold otherwise will be to give undue extension to the clauses dealing with the using of fuel or machinery for industrial purposes. The purely grammatical construction of the language of clause "q" would seem also to suggest that the last clause qualifies all the previous clauses.

In the view taken by the lower Courts the question whether the machinery used by the accused was dangerous to human life, health or property has not been considered. Ordinarily, any large machinery is dangerous to human life, but we cannot presume it with reference to any particular machinery. The case must, therefore, go back to the Trial Court to be re-tried in the light of the above observations.

It may be stated in conclusion that I do not accept the argument that the conversion of paddy into rice is not an industrial purpose. It is clearly one.

The conviction is set aside and the case remanded to the Bench Magistrate for a fresh trial and disposal. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 514—Security to keep the peace—Conviction for rioting—No order as to security—Proceeding, separate, for confiscation of security, validity of.

If a Criminal Court, knowing that a person charged before it is under security to keep the peace or to be of good behaviour, in sentencing that person in the case before it makes no reference to the confiscation of that security and takes no steps towards its confiscation, it is not competent for that Court or any other Court in a subsequent and separate proceeding to take such steps.

Emperor v. Mawaz, 18 Ind. Cas. 403; 13 P. R. 1913 Cr.; 7 P. W. R. 1913 Cr.; 14 Cr. L. J. 67; 39 P. L. R. 1913 (F. B.), followed.

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the District Magistrate, Ludhiana, dated the 8th January 1923, affirming that of the Honorary Magistrate, First Class, Rai Kot, District Ludhiana.

Mr. R. C. Soni, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—On the 1st of October 1918, the petitioner Munshi was bound down to be of good behaviour for one year in the sum of Rs. 500 with one surety under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Before the term of the bond had expired, he was convicted of rioting and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50 under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code. On appeal to the learned Sessions Judge the conviction was maintained, but the sentence was reduced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 30 only. An application for revision was made to the High Court, and the order as to fine was set aside. With regard to the sentence of imprisonment it was observed by the learned Judge that there was no clear ground for interference in revision inasmuch as the sentence of imprisonment had already expired. Subsequently, proceedings were taken against the petitioner and the surety for the forefeiture of their bonds under section 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code,

On the 21st of December 1922 the petitioner's bond was forfeited and an order passed to the effect that Ram Kishen, who had stood surety for him, should forfeit his security to the extent of Rs. 300. An appeal against this order was preferred to the District Magistrate but dismissed on the 8th of January 1923.

The petitioners have now come up in revision to this Court, and it has been contended on their behalf that the order passed by the Courts below with regard to the forfeiture of the bond and the security is illegal and should be set aside. It is pointed out that the District Magistrate, who convicted the accused of rioting under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code, knew that he was under security and yet did not take any steps towards its confiscation. My attention has been drawn to the statement of Gopal Das, a witness for the defence, who deposed to the effect that he and Munshi had both been bound down together, and reliance is placed on Emperor v. Mawaz (1) in which it has been laid down that if a Criminal Court knowing that the person charged before it is under security to be of good behaviour, in sentencing that person in the case before it makes no reference to any confiscation of that security and takes no steps towards its confiscation it is not competent for that Court or any other Court in a subsequent and separate proceeding to take such steps.

This ruling, in my opinion, is exactly in point and applies fully to the facts of the present case The order passed by the learned Magistrate in taking action for the forfeiture of the bond and the security is clearly illegal and must be set aside. I accept the revision and order accordingly.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 17th August 1922.

Mr. Niaz Muhammad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhny, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by Gulab from the order of the Sessions Judge of Rawalpindi convicting him of the murder of Fazal Haq on or about the 9th March 1922, and sentencing him to transportation for life.

We have already passed orders accepting the appeal, acquitting Gulab, and directing his release, and we now proceed to record our reasons.

The facts are fully stated in the judgment of the Court below and need not be repeated at length. The motive for the murder is said to be that the deceased had intimacy with one Musammat Bhari, who is the wife of a relation of Gulab, and that Gulab also had intimacy with her. The evidence as to motive is extremely slender but it is unnecessary for us to refer to it in detail as we consider that the evidence connecting the accused with the murder is insufficient to support the conviction. Fazal Haq's wife had disappeared from home some time before the occurrence and Fazal Haq had been in the habit of leaving his house to search for her. He left his house on the early morning of the 19th March, and as he had not returned by the 27th Alaf, the brother of the appellant, and others reported his disappearance at the Police Station. The Police went to the spot, and on the 2nd April, the appellant is said to have given information which led to the discovery of the dead body of Fazal Haq which was buried some 10 feet below the surface of the ground under the bank of a field belonging to the appellant himself and not very far from the village. On the same day the Head Constable sent a rukka (Exhibit P. C.) to the Thana, which has been treated as the First Information Report in the case and which contains the confession of Gulab made to the Police. This confession, having regard to section 25 of the Indian Evidence Act, cannot be proved as against Gulab. On the 8th April, Gulab's confession was recorded by a First Class Magistrate. On the 30th April, an application was made by a Pleader on behalf of the appellant to the effect that he had made the confession in consequence of a promise that he would be examined as an approver in the case. The conviction is thus based upon a retracted confession together with the evidence that the appellant pointed out the place where the dead body of Fazal Haq was buried. Bostan Khan, Patwari, (P. W. No. 6) was the person who persuaded Gulab to make his confession to the Police. He had admitted that he held out some inducement to Gulab and the learned Sessions Judge remarks that it is plain that the promise made by the Patwari referred to the charge against the accused person, and that it was sufficient to make it appear to him that by making it, i.e., the confession, he would gain some advantage or avoid some evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him. The learned Sessions Judge, however, was of opinion, that this only applied to the confession made to the Police on the 2nd April, and that the influence brought to bear upon Gulab by the Patwari was no longer effectual at the time when he made a confession to the First Class Magistrate on the 8th April. It is strongly urged on behalf of the appellant that after he made the confession on the 2nd April, under the influence of some inducement it is not at all likely that this influence had ceased to affect him on the 8th April. In our opinion, there is a good deal of force in this argument and we doubt whether it would be safe to hold, under the circumstances, that the confession of the 8th April was a voluntary one. The main argument, however, urged against it was that it differs materially from that made to the Police on the 2nd April. The Public Prosecutor who appeared for the Crown objected to any use whatsoever being made of the confession to the Police. He referred to section 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code which lays down that no statement made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure shall, if taken down in writing, be signed by the person making it, nor shall such writing be used as evidence. Now, this argument has no force, because at the time when the appellant made his confession to the Police there was no investigation being held into any offence under Chapter XIV of the Code. At that time the Police were merely investigating the alleged disappearance of Fazal Haq and there was no evidence that any offence had been committed. The Public Prosecutor also referred to section 25 of the Indian Evidence Act which requires that no confession made to a Police Officer shall be proved as against a person accused of any offence. Now, all that this section lays down is that such a confession shall not be used as against a person making it. It does not lay down that such a confession shall be inadmissible for all purposes and in Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Law of Evidence, 7th Edition, at page 267, the learned commentators point this out and say that the confession may be proved for other purposes. We have no doubt at all that the confession may be used for the purpose of arriving at a conclusion as to whether the subsequent judicial confession of the 8th April should be believed or not. Now, in the confession made to the Police Gulab mentioned Fazal Karim, the husband of Musammat Bhari aforesaid, Qaim Din and Sardar as his accomplices, whereas in the judicial confession he mentioned Alaf, his brother and one Muhammad, a stranger, as his accomplices. In the Police confession he said that he was holding the legs of Fazal Haq at the time of the murder whilst Qaim

Din sat on his chest, whereas in the judicial confession he says that he himself sat on Fazal Haq's chest and did not say that any one held his legs. In the Police confession he states that after the murder Fazal Karim and Qaim Din carried the corpse whilst he himself carried a kassi, whereas in the judicial confession he said that he and Alaf Din carried the corpse. In the Police confession, in which he named Qaim Din, a stranger, as his accomplice, he says that after the burial of the corpse all his companions went straight off to their own houses. In the judicial confession he said that Muhammad who was a stranger came back with him and stayed in his house till the morning. These discrepancies show, at all events, that one of the two confesssions is certainly not a true confession. Under these circumstances, we think that it would be extremely unsafe to put much reliance on the confession of the 8th April.

There is what appears to be fairly reliable evidence that Gulab gave the information which led to the discovery of the dead body. There is, however, considreable force in Counsel's argument that certain independent witnesses who are said to have been present at the time have not been produced in Court. It is stated that Muhammad Hussain (P. W. No. 4), Yusuf (P. W. No. 7) and Muhammad Ilahi (P. W. No. 11) dug up the earth at the place of burial after that place had been pointed out by Gulab. These persons, however, have all unanimously deposed that it was not Gulab but the Police who pointed out the place to them.

Their evidence tends to throw some doubt upon the story of Gulab pointing out the place of burial, but even if we hold it to be satisfactorily proved that Gulab did give the information which led to the recovery of the dead body, that fact alone would not be sufficient to connect him with the murder, because a person may very well know where the body of a murdered man has been buried without himself having joined in committing the murder.

As we are unable to rely upon the retracted confession of Gulab there is no sufficient evidence in support of his conviction. His appeal is, therefore, accepted and he is acquitted.

REFERRED TRIAL No. 175 OF 1922.
CRIMINAL APPEALS Nos. 1848 AND 1849 OF 1922.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 154, 157, 162, 342, 540—Local inspection by Magistrate, when permissible—Results, whether can be embodied in the testimony of witnesses.

It is competent to a Magistrate to make a local inspection for the purpose of enabling him to understand better the evidence which is laid before him and to use the evidence of his own eyes to test the truth of what the witnesses have deposed to, and it is immaterial that the result of such inspection is not at once put on record and laid open to the scrutiny of parties; nor is it necessary that the accused or their representatives should invariably be present at a local inspection. [p. 697, col. 1.]

Where, after a local inspection, the Magistrate re calls the prosecution witnesses under section 540, Criminal Procedure Code, and really embodies the results of his inspection in the examination of such witnesses on re-call and the accused are afforded a full opportunity of cross-examining them with reference to the facts then elicited, the procedure adopted is not illegal nor prejudicial to the accused. Section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not make it legally incumbent on a Magistrate to further question the accused with reference to the evidence elicited from the prosecution witnesses after the framing of the charge when they are re-called by the Magistrate under section 540, Criminal Procedure Code, though it is highly desirable that he should so question the accused if the evidence contains any new matter of importance. [p. 697, col. 2.]

Referred Trial 160 of 1922, followed.

A Deputy Superintendent of Police is an officer legally competent to investigate the facts of offences of murder and dacoity within the meaning of section 157, Indian Evidence Act, and a statement of a witness recorded by such an officer is not inadmissible merely because it was not recorded as required by section 154, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 698, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Ayling, J.—The three accused in this case have been convicted of dacoiting the house of one Krishnan Nair of Olavatoor and murdering him by beating him to death. The offence was committed on the night of 24th October 1921 in the course of the Moplah Rebellion. The prosecution evidence tends to show that about nightfall a band of some 25 armed rebels attacked a small hamlet consisting of about five houses of which, Krishnan Nair's was one. All were looted; the inmates of these houses escaped but Krishnan Nair was caught and beaten twice, the second time with fatal results and his body thrown into a well. The well is said to have subsequently been filled up and the body has not been found, but in the light of the evidence in this case we see no reason whatever to doubt that Krishnan Nair was killed that night in the course of the dacoity. We have the evidence of four of the inhabitants of the hamlet who depose to this occurrence and to having seen the three appellants who were well known to them, beat Krishnan Nair and throw his body in the morning into the well.

Before discussing the merits of the case, I shall deal with two preliminary objections taken to the procedure of the Special Judge. It appears that when the first accused was examined under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, he asked that a plan should be prepared of the scene of the offence. This was not done; but the Special Judge personally visited the scene of offence, 18 miles from his headquarters, with the prosecution witnesses, and observed for himself the relative positions of the huts and the places from which the witnesses claim to have seen the acts deposed to by them. After this, acting under the powers vested in him by section 540, Criminal Procedure Code, he re-called these prosecution witnesses, or rather three of them, and examined them in such a way as to put on record the most important points which he had observed at his personal inspection. The witnesses were then cross-examined by the defence. It is argued that the Special Judge's procedure has been illegal in two particulars and that on that ground the conviction should be set aside. It is contended first that he was not entitled to use the results of his personal inspection to test the truth of the prosecution witnesses' story, and, next, it is contended that it was his duty to again question the accused under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, with reference to the evidence which the prosecution witnesses gave, when re called as stated above. As regards the first point we have been referred to several rulings by the learned Counsel for the first accused, the most important of which is Queen-Empress v. Manikam (1). In that case, as I understand it, two learned Judges of this Court laid it down that the accused are entitled to have nothing stated against them in the judgment which was not stated on oath in their presence and which they have had no opportunity of testing by cross-examination and of rebutting. At the same time they say that a Magistrate may make a local inspection for the purpose of enabling him to understand better the evidence which is laid before him; but for no other purpose. The distinction seems to be between enabling a Magistrate to undestand such matters as the description of the locality which may be confusing or obscure, and enabling him to test the truth of the witness's statement of a physical fact by the Magistrate's own ocular observation. I think this distinction is also brought out in a Calcutta case Babbon Shaikh v. Emperor (2) but two of the learned judges who dealt with that case, Woodroffe and Chatterjee JJ., seem to have held that it was open to the Court to use its local inspection also to test the sworn testimony on record by the light of its own observation. This is also the effect of the judgment of Sir John Edge, C. J. in In the matter of the petition of Laljl (3) a very high authority. The learned Public Prosecutor has referred us to a case reported as In re Davaraja Nayagar (4) in which Sir Arnold White, C. J. of this Court, declined to follow the 19 Madras ruling [Queen-Emperess v. Manikam (1)] on the ground that it was no longer applicable after the amendment of the Code affected in 1898. Speaking for myself, I should be inclined to agree with the judgment above quoted and to hold that it is open to a Magistrate to use the evidence of his own eyes to test the truth of what the witnesses have deposed to and that in the present case the Special Judge has made no improper use of his local inspection.

But it is objected that he has failed to observe two precautions which two of the learned Judges in Babbon Shaikh v. Emperor (2) have held to be necessary. One is that the result of the inspection must at once be put on record and laid open to the scrutiny of the parties. Chatterjee, J. says:—"To spring such opinions or inferences upon the accused at the time of pronouncing judgment is an error of procedure that may have materially prejudiced the accused, and they are quite justified in complaining that they have not had a proper trial." It was further stated by the judgment in Queen-Empress v. Manikam (1) that when any inspecton is made, the Magistrate should invariably be accompanied by both parties or their representatives. It is stated that this was not done and that the accused were not represented at the inspection in the present case. Sir John Edge in the 19 Allahabad case [In the matter of the petition of Laljl (3)] on the other hand, is at pains to point out that it is not necessary that the accused or their representatives should invariably be present at a local inspection and he says nothing whatever about the necessity of making a note of record at once of what the Magistrate has seen.

In the present case, as I have already stated, the Magistrate has really embodied the results of his inspection in the examination of the prosecution witnesses on re-call and the accused have had a full opportunity of cross-examining them with reference to the facts then elicited.

The fact more pressed by the argument that the accused persons were not afforded an opportunity of being represented at the local inspection and before deciding as to the effect of such an omission we deemed it best to call for a special report from the Special Judge as to his procedure. From this it appears that the argument is based on no foundation. Previous intimation of the inspection had been given to both the defence Vakils; and one of them, Mr. T. M. Krishnaswamy Nedungadi, was actually present on behalf of all three appellants. On the whole, I do not think that the Special Judge in this case has used his local inspection illlegally or in such a way as to prejudice the accused.

As regards the point based on section 342 it has been held in a recent case, Referred Trial No. 160 of 1922, in which I was one of the Judges, that section 342 does not make it legally incumbent on the Magistrate to further question the accused with reference to the evidence elicited from the prosecution witnesses after the framing of the charge when they are re-called by the Magistrate under section 540, Criminal Procedure Code. It may be highly desirable that he should so question the accused if the evidence contains a new matter of importance, but after carefully scrutinizing the evidence in this case elicited on re-call I do not think it can be classed in that category. The learned Counsel for the appellant has referred us to three passages in the re-call evidence of the most important witness P. W. No. 1. One is "As there were thicker jungles on Krishnan Nair's side of the paddy field, I went there. The jungles on Krishnan Nair's side of the paddy field are thicker than those on my side. The second is "The place where P. W. No. 5 hid was only 10--15 feet from where I was, but I never saw him at the time." The third is, "I say that the well of the deceased's house is visible from my house. I could also see persons drawing water from that well from my yard." None of these passages appear to me to contain such a new and important matter that it could be said that the accused were prejudiced because they were not asked what they had to say with respect to them, especially if it is remembered that they were defended in the lower Court. As regards the latter two points the Special Judge in paragraphs Nos. 17 and 18 of his judgment has recorded that he thinks that P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 5 must have seen each other although they say they did not, and he feels very doubtful whether P. W. N. 1 could have witnessed from his house next morning the dragging of the deceased to the well. As regards the thickness of the jungle all he says is: "There is a thick jungle to the south and west of the house. At night time it would be safe enough to hide where the witnesses say they did, and to watch what was happening." I do not think that any of these points are points on which it was imperatively necessary to further question the accused. I would dismiss both these legal objections for the trial as untenable.

Passing to the merits of the case, I may observe that the important question is whether the statements of P. Ws. Nos. 1, 3, 5 and 7 that they observed the three appellants either among the dacoits or taking part in the actual murder of Krishnan Nair and disposing of his body can be accepted. One of the witnesses, P. W. No. 1, is said to have made a statement to the Deputy Superinendent of Police at Calicut five days after the offence, in which he gave an account of what occurred and named six persons including the three appellants as among the Moplahs who looted the houses and murdered Krishnan Nair. It has been objected that this statement, Exhibit A, is not admissible in evidence. The Deputy Superintendent of Police is an officer legally competent to investigate the facts of the murder and dacoity within the meaning of section 157 of the Indian Evidence Act—vide section 551, Criminal Procedure Code. The requirements of section 157 are, therefore, complied with, and I cannot accept the contention that Exhibit A which records the statement taken down by the officer is inadmissible because it was not recorded as required by section 154, Criminal Procedure Code. At the time when it was made the Rebellion was in full progress, and it was impossible to fulfill the requirements of section 154. The statement in question was undoubtedly the First Information given to the Police of the commission of this crime and it is not affected by any such provision of law as is contained in section 162, Criminal Procedure Code, which renders statements of witnesses to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation inadmissible in evidence. It is admitted that it would have been open to the Deputy Superintendent to give oral evidence of what P. W. No. 1 told him and even to refresh his memory by a reference to Exhibit A, and, in the absence of a specific legal prohibition, I am prepared to hold that it was open to the Court to take in evidence his written record of what P. W. No. 1 actually said to him. The inclusion of the names of these appellants in a statement made so early after the crime (having regard to the conditions of the country) seems to be an important piece of corroboration of the identification of the appellants by witnesses in the Special Court.

I feel, however, considerable doubt as to whether we can accept the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 5 and 7 as to the second beating of Krishnan Nair by the appellant which is said to have caused his death. The Special Judge himself seems to entertain some doubts as to whether the witnesses have not to some extent added to what they saw, and it is curious that all the four witnesses with one accord ascribe to these three appellants before us all the actions leading up to or connected with the death of Krishnan Nair. It is these three men and one other absent man, named Aidruman, who are said to have beaten him when they first came to his house, to have dragged him out at midnight and beaten him again and caused his death and lastly to have dragged his body to the well in the morning. It would seem as if none of the other 22 rebels took any part in any of this. I doubt very much whether the midnight beating was watched by any of the neighbours and I cannot agree with the Special Judge that it is likely that P. W. No. 7 would have ventured to come down out of the jungle and penetrate into the compound of Krishnan Nair to see the final act of the murder. The preliminary beating clearly did not cause the man's death, and it cannot be said that, because the appellants dragged the body to the well in the morning it must be taken that it was they who beat him to death at midnight especially in view of the number of the gang. Nor do I think it can be said that the murder of Krishnan Nair is shown to be part of the common intention of the dacoits so that all the members of the dacoit gang could be convicted of the murder.

I think that the conviction for murder must be set aside. As regards the conviction for dacoity, I see no reason whatever for doubting that these appellants took part in the dacoity and were recognised by the witnesses. The allegation of enmity and the alibi evidence adduced for the defence have been dealt with by the Special Judge. I would set aside the convictions for murder, confirming those for dacoity, and in place of the sentence of death, sentence each of the three appellants to transportation for life.

Odgers, J.—In this case two preliminary points have been taken on behalf of the accused, either of which, it is said, amount to an illegality and would, therefore, vitiate the trial. The first is that the Special Judge made an inspection of the locality where the crime is said to have been committed and, further, that he tested the statements of certain of the prosecution witnesses by his personal observation of the spot. The second point is that he failed to examine the accused under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code.

To deal with the first point, the trial of the case began on the 9th of September 1922. The inspection by the Special Judge is said to have taken place during the trial. Section 556, Criminal Procedure Code, Explanation, lays down that a Judge or Magistrate shall not be deemed to be a party or personally interested, within the meaning of the section "by reason only that he has viewed the place in which an offence is said to have been committed * * * * and made an enquiry in connection with the case." There are certain authorities which have been cited to us in support of the contention taken for the accused. The most important, from our point of view, is that contianed in Queen-Empress v. Manickam (1) where it was held that a Magistrate's view of the locus in quo was what influenced him in finding that the complaint of actual damage being caused was true and that the defence that no damage was caused was false. The learned Judges there say: "We are satisfied that such inspection should only be made for the purpose of enabling the Magistrate to understand the better the evidence which is laid before him, and it must be strictly confined to that. To this we would add that where any inspection is made with the object stated, the Magistrate should invariably be accompanied by both parties or their representatives." This view finds support in Sudhama Upadhya v. Queen-Empress (5) where the investigations of the Police preliminary to a trial had been directed to a considerable degree by a Magistrate. That was held to disqualify the Magistrate from trying the case. Babbon Shaikh v. Emperor (2) where the two learned Judges who originally heard the the petition differed, Stephen, J., was of opinion that the Magistrate may visit the scene of an alleged offence in order to test the evidence he has heard on a question of fact. Woodroffe, J., on the other hand, held that, as it was a matter of speculation how far the Magistrate was influenced by what he saw, as distinguished from what was deposed to, the trial was vitiated. The third Judge Chatterjee, J., agreed with Woodroffe, J., on the ground that the Magistrate had done more than merely view the place for the purpose of following and understanding the evidence and testing it. The Magistrate had imported into his judgment matters of opinion and that was an error or procedure, that might have prejudicially affected the accused. In Alla Rai v. Jhingur Tewari (6) where the question was somewhat different, namely, the effect of the failure of the Judge to place on record the results of a local investigation, the learned Judges held that a Magistrate may view the place of occurrence in order to follow or understand the evidence. On the contrary, there is the opinion of an Ex-Chief Justice of this Court, Sir Arnold White, in In re Davaraja Nayagar (4) where he was of opinion that the amendment to the Explanation of section 556, Criminal Procedure Code, was apparently made to meet the decision in Queen-Empress v. Manikam (1) and that the judgment of a Magistrate is not vitiated by the fact that he inspected the locus in quo and stated in his judgment what he saw there.

Sitting as a Single Judge, Sir John Edge, C. J., in In the matter of the petition of Lalji (3) said: 'It is highly convenient that a Magistrate should go and see the locality for himself if the evidence is conflicting or if the guilt or innocence of the party depends upon local peculiarities of situation which cannot be understood except by the Magistrate seeing the place himself." The judgment is illustrated with special reference to a dacoity, which is also the subject of the present case before us. There seem to me strong grounds for the opinion that the amendment of the Explanation to section 556, Criminal Procedure Code, was devised mainly to overcome the rulings referred to above in Queen-Empress v. Manikam (1) and Sudhama Upadhya v. Queen-Empress (5) and that, if this is so, the authority of Queen-Empress v. Manikam (1) must be taken to have been shaken. Holding then, as I do, that the learned Judge did not disqualify himself from trying the case by reason of his having held an inspection of the spot, the question arises whether any material prejudice has arisen sufficient to say that a failure of justice has occurred.

We have called for a report from the Special Judge as to whether or not the Vakils for the defence were present at his local enquiry and the answer is in the affirmative and the Special Judge also reports that he gave previous notice to the Vakils for the defence of his intention to inspect the locus in quo. Again the learned Judge did not "spring any opinion of his own" nor any facts observed by him in his local investigation upon the accused, who, as stated, were defended, for the first time in his judgment, for he re-called as Court witnesses the prosecution witnesses, who had previously described the hiding places they took up and from which they alleged they witnessed the stages of the crime. These witnesses on re-call by the Court were further cross-examined by the defence, so that any opinion that the Judge had formed from the local inspection came through the prosecution witnesses as Court witnesses. From these considerations I am unable to say either that the Judge acted illegally or that any material irregularity resulted to the prejudice of the accused.

The second point under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, can be very shortly dealt with. In my opinion, this case does not fall within the Full Bench judgment recently delivered by this Court in Criminal Revision Case No. 384 of 1922 [In re Varisai Rowther (7).] There the learned Chief Justice says: "In my judgment the words 'after the prosecution witnesses have been examined' (citing the words of section 342) "mean 'after the prosecution has finished calling evidence.'" If fresh evidence is called by the prosecution after the charge has been framed, then on the termination of that evidence the accused must be examined under the section. The short answer to the objection really is that the prosecution here called no fresh evidence, the prosecution witnesses, as stated above, having been re-called by the Court and re-cross-examined by the defence. On the same question of prejudice to the accused, it is pointed out that there are three important points on which the Court should have questioned the accused. They are all contained in the re-examination of P. W. No. 1 by the Court. They are as follows: (1) "As there were thicker jungles on Krishnan Nair's side of the paddy field I went there." (2) "when the Court inspected the place, P. W. No. 5 showed the Court where he hid. That place was only 10 to 15 feet from where I was but I never saw him at the time." (3) "I say that the well of the deceased's house is visible from my house." As before stated, the witnesses were re-cross-examined by the Vakil for the defence and it cannot, in my opinion, be said that the interests of the accused in any way suffered by the accused not being re-examined under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code. This disposes of the preliminary objections.

With regard to the merits, I do not propose to say more than that I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother and I agree with him as to the view he takes of Exhibit A and of the rest of the evidence adduced in this case. On the whole, I think it would be unsafe to act on the testimony of the prosecution witnesses as to the identification of the actual murderers of the deceased. I agree with the conviction and sentence proposed.

Appeal against the judgment of the Sessions Judge, Akola, in Sessions Trial No. 10 of 1923, dated the 12th May 1923.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT—This judgment also disposes of Criminal Appeal No. 53-B of 1923. The two appellants Musammat Radhi, wife of Ragho, and Shripati, son of Ganpati, have been found guilty by the Sessions Judge, Akola, of the offence of murder and sentenced each to transportation for life.

The facts found are these. One Ragho, who lived at Chichamba, is the husband of the female accused. He married her some 2½ years ago and their married life does not appear to have been particularly happy. The woman's story is that her husband kept a concubine and, therefore, beat her. She had a son by him, called Ananda, aged 8 months at the time of his death. On the Sunday preceding the death of this infant Radhi's mother accompanied by Shripati went to Radhi's house at Chichamba and in the absence of her husband brought the woman back to her parent's house at Risod. Ragho appeared there the same evening and took away his wife next morning. On the following Tuesday Radhi disappeared from home taking her son Ananda with her. There is ample evidence to show that she was seen in some bushes near a well in the jungle of Risod on the Tuesday and Wednesday. On the Tuesday night Narayan (P. W. No. 12) says he saw Shripati, who was a servant of the same master as himself, sleeping in the field in his hut with the woman Radhi and the child. Next morning one Krishnappa (P. W. No. 7) saw the woman standing near the well of Gulab Rao. Radhi's husband had been making enquiries as to his wife's whereabouts and went to Risod in search of her. Krishnappa, therefore, told Gopal Rao, who is an Honorary Magistrate of Risod. Gopal Rao went with others and questioned the woman, found the dead body of the child in the well, and the woman told them that Shripati had taken the child from her and thrown it into the well. Police investigation started and resulted in the two accused being put on trial for murder with the result already stated.

The offence took place on the 14th March last. The woman's confession was recorded by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate Basim, seven days later. It has been translated thus:—

"My husband has kept a woman. For her he beats me. I ran away from his house. Shripati said to me 'Stay with me. I shall maintain you at Risod.' I ran away to Risod. The next day my husband and Rama Boradia came in search of me. Shripati said (we two shall run away). I refused. Shripati asked me again and again to ran away but I refused to do so. My child was crying and so Shripati took it from me and threw it in the well I have to say nothing besides this."

Before the Committing Magistrate the woman's statement runs as follows:—

"He always beat me. I took my child Ananda to Risod. It was aged 8 months. I stayed in the hut in Shripati's field. At that time Shripati was in that field. That night I stayed in Shripati's hut. The next morning I concealed myself in the bush pointed out by the witnesses at the instance of Shripati. The field containing that bush adjoins the field in which I passed the night. Thereafter Shripati came to me and said 'your husband and some other persons are searching you and they will come hearing the cries of your child. Let us, therefore, throw that child into water.' I then made over that child to Shripati with this object that he should throw it into water. Then Shripati threw that child into water. At that time we were near the well."

Before the Sessions Judge the female accused denied these previous statements but eventually stated:—

"Shripati came and said to me 'Your husband has come in your search and so we shall throw the child into water.' On my asking him the reason he said that he would hear his crying. I refused to do so saying that I had brought up the child for 8 or 9 months. In the meantime, Shripati forcibly snatched the child from me and then threw it into water. But I do not know where he threw it. At that time I was not near the well."

And again:—

"When Shripati snatched the child from me I began to cry and so he gagged me with dhoti and struck me."

She admits that the body found in the well was that of her son Ananda.

Against the woman there are her own statements and it has to be noticed that in the Magistrate's Court she admitted that she gave up the child to Shripati with the object that it should be thrown into the well. That she was seen with Shripati the previous night is proved by the testimony of Narayan (P. W. No. 12). There is no reason to disbelieve this witness. That she was found near the well in some bushes the following morning is clear from the statements of Krishnappa (P. W. No. 7), Bhayylal (P. W. No. 8), Balaji (P. W. No. 9) and Gopalrao (P. W. No. 14). Krishna (P.W. No. 11) saw her on the previous day with the child at that place and she told him that Shripati had told her to stay there. This was some 800 feet from the well. It is also proved that she told the witnesses who found her near the bushes on the morning of the murder that Shripati had taken the child from her and thrown it into the well. I find it established that she left her husband's house with the intention of eloping with Shripati; that she went with him to Risod; that he concealed her on the night of the 13th March, and that on the 14th the child was thrown into the well. An infant of 8 months could not well fall into water by mistake. Her own statement that she made over the child to Shripati to throw into the well is corroborated by the fact that she raised no alarm when the child was thrown into the water. Unless she has been a party to her lover's act, she would have raised an alarm but it seems that both were apprehensive that crying of the infant might lead to their discovery by the husband. The evidence on record, together with the woman's own statements, justify the conviction. I confirm in her case conviction and sentence and dismiss her appeal.

With regard to Shripati, the principal evidence against him consists of the various statements of the female accused. These statements can be taken into consideration and used as evidence not only against the person making them but also against the person tried jointly with the confessing accused of the same offence: see Emperor v. Kehri (1). And as regards such co-accused though corroborative evidence should by itself be sufficient to support a conviction, the evidence of Narayan (P. W. No. 12) conclusively proves that Radhi spent the previous night with the accused Shripati. His going to fetch her with her mother the previous Sunday shows that he was acquainted with the woman and there is little doubt that the woman's statement that he wished to elope with her is true. The two were together the previous night some eight or nine hundred feet from the well in which the child's body was subsequently found. It is extremely unlikely that, except on pressure from her lover, the woman would have consented to the murder of her infant, and it is unlikely that she would herself commit the murder, though a party to it and being present makes her punishable as the principal. Taking the facts of the case, together with the confessions and statements of Musammat Radhi, I have no doubt that Shripati took an active part in the murder of Ananda and that he was present at it. I confirm his conviction and sentence and also dismiss his appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction for prosecution—Evidence in original suit—Court, whether can go beyond.

In giving or upholding a sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code a Court is not restricted to the evidence recorded in the original suit. It has inherent power to take such steps as may be necessary to enable it to discharge the duty imposed upon it under sub-section (6) of the section.

Revision from an order of the District Judge, Saugor.

ORDER.—Parmanand Parwar and Pannalal Parwar, applicants, have filed these two applications in revision against the order of the District Judge, Saugor sanctioning prosecution of the applicants under section 193, Indian Penal Code, for giving false evidence. The facts are as follows:—

The applicant, Parmanand, is a dealer in saltpetre at Khurai in the Saugor District. He bought some bags of saltpetre at Sujatpur on the East Indian Railway, but these bags were not delivered at Khurai within a reasonable time and Parmanand brought a suit against the East Indian Railway for damages and obtained a decree. The applicant Pannalal, who is Parmanand's munim, was examined as a witness and stated that he had gone himself to Sujatpur and purchased the saltpetre at Rs. 47-12 a maund. After a considerable interval the Sub-Inspector of Police suspecting that the suit was a false one made an application for the prosecution of the applicants for making a false claim under section 210 and for giving false evidence under section 193, Indian Penal Code. The Munsif refused to grant sanction under either section, but on appeal the District Judge, Saugor, while upholding the order refusing to grant sanction under section 210, granted sanction against both the applicants for giving false evidence under section 193, Indian Penal Code. Hence the present applications for revision.

The statements in respect of which the sanction has been granted are as regards the purchase by Pannalal personally of the saltpetre at Sujatpur at Rs. 47-12 a maund, there being documentary evidence from the applicant Parmanand's own books that the original price paid was Rs. 13-8 a maund, and the Police being prepared to produce evidence that Pannalal never went to Sujatpur at all, the goods being sent by V. P. P.

It has been contended on behalf of the applicants that there is no evidence whatever on the record in support of these allegations and that the Court could only decide the question on the evidence on record in view of the ruling In re Paree Kunhammed (1) in which it was held, "that it is the duty of the authority giving sanction or upholding it, under section 195 to go into the merits of the applications for sanction, with reference to the evidence before it, which is relied on as justifying the according of sanction." I do not think that this ruling can be held as restricting the Court to the evidence recorded in the original suit. As a matter of fact, the District Judge when he gave sanction relied on the plaintiff's accounts before him in which there was an entry of the purchase of the saltpetre in question at Rs. 13-8 a maund, and in any case the case of Budhu Lal v. Chattu Gope (2) is an authority for holding that the Court had inherent power to take such steps as may be necessary to enable it to discharge the duty imposed upon it under section 195 (6) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In addition to the plaintiff's accounts, the District Judge had before him an affidavit from the Sub-Inspector that he was prepared to produce the evidence of the vendors of the saltpetre at Sujatpur as to the price paid and the manner in which the transaction was effected.

It is argued that there is no evidence to show that the applicant Parmanand's statement that he was told by Pannalal that the price paid was Rs. 47-12 per maund is false, that would be a matter for the Trying Court to consider in view of the entry in his account-books. It is contended that the statement in question was not material to the case since the only important issue in it was the price at which saltpetre could be sold at Khurai on or about the date on which the goods ought to have been delivered by the Railway Company. Hence it is argued that the question of the price paid for the saltpetre was perfectly immaterial to the case and still more was the manner in which the purchase was effected. The plaint does not refer to the price paid for the saltpetre. The rate at which damages were asked for was Rs. 1-5 per seer which comes to Rs. 52-8 per maund and this amount he obtained. The Judge who tried the case is unfortunately dead. The statement regarding the price of the saltpetre at Sujatpur was made in answer to the questions put by the Court and while, in the absence of the Judge, it will not be possible to say what his object in putting these questions was, it seems very probable that his view as to the rate of the saltpetre may have been affected by the price alleged to have been paid, namely, Rs. 47-12 a maund. The difference between the price actually paid, i.e., Rs. 13-8 a maund, and the rate at which damages were claimed, i.e., Rs. 52-8 a maund, that is, very nearly four times as much, is very great. I will admit that the question as to whether the goods were purchased personally by Pannalal or were ordered to be sent by V. P. P. seems at first sight immaterial, since the Railway Company acknowleges the receipt of the goods, but there is a prima facie case that the statements both as to the price and the manner in which the goods were bought are false, and the plaintiff who is a regular trader must have brought the case after consulting his books; and could not be under any misapprehension as to the real state of affairs. In these circumstances, it seems very probable that the value of the goods when purchased was overstated with a view to the claim for damages, and as evidence is available to prove the overstatement, and the depositions of both Parmanand and Pannalal on this point apparently are false, I agree with the learned District Judge that this is a proper case for sanction and I, therefore, confirm the order of sanction and dismiss both the applcations.

Applications dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 30—Confession of co-accused—Substantial self-implication—Admission of actual guilt, whether necessary—Confession, retracted, value of—Corroborative evidence.

All that is required to make the confession of an accused person admissible against a co-accused under section 30 of the Evidence Act is that the confession shall substantially implicate its maker in regard to the offence with which he and his co-accused are charged. It is not necessary that there should be an admission of actual guilt. The admission may establish constructive guilt only. [p. 711, col. 2.]

A retracted confession ought to be viewed with the greatest suspicion even as against the maker himself, but where the corroborating evidence is clear and convincing there is no reason to discard it. [p. 712, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal from the decision of Sessions Judge, Cuttack, dated the 23rd May 1923.

Mr. B. P. Jamuar, for the Appellants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—The appellants, Suka Raut and Jhulan Raut, have been sentenced to death for having about 6-30 P. M. on the 15th March last murdered Loka Raut at Mauza Uttarpratap in the District of Cuttack. Suka is about 30 years of age and Jhulan about 25. As is usual with the inhabitants of Orissa, Suka went in search of work to Calcutta at an early age and comes home from time to time on occasional visits. Three or four years ago he married and he has now a child 14 months of age. He last returned from Calcutta about one-and-a-half months before the murder. Loka who was about 14 years of age was his youngest brother and was a pupil at a Day School in Mauza Lahangapatna about quarter of a mile south-east of his house. From Suka's statement it would seem that he was not on good terms with his father Jagu Raut, and that he suspected him of relations with his wife, and that he had been anxious to remove from the family house. On the 14th March Suka lodged a complaint before the manager of his zemindar (the Raja of Madhupur) alleging that his father was favouring his other brothers and was not making suitable provision for his maintenance. The manager sent a peon to Jagu Raut directing him to appear at his office on the 23rd March. The arrival of the peon on the morning of the 15th led to a quarrel between Suka and his father with the result that Suka was turned out of the house and he and his wife and child took shelter in the house of a neighbour, named Bhikhari Palai, but later, owing to the intervention of Banchanidhi Raut, Jagu relented and Suka's wife and daughter came back to the house in the course of the afternoon. The evidence shows that Suka also came back but only for a short time. His father was then away from home and Banchanidhi says that he saw Suka going towards his house about 1 ghari before sunset and told him that the next day he would get his father to pay him his fare to Calcutta which was about Rs. 4. Between that time and 9 P. M., when he confessed to his father and a number of other villagers that he had killed Loka, we have no information as to Suka's movements except from his confession.

The events which led up to this confession are as follows. Loka had come home from school at midday for his meal as usual. He went back again about 4 o'clock and would, in the ordinary course, have come about 6. Owing to his failure to return, his father, his cousin Kelu, his brother Parikhit and others began to make a search. They went to the school and were told that the boy had left in company with some school-fellows about sunset and had last been seen going towards a deserted garden known as Madhei Sahu's Bari through which his way home would lie. It is said that, while the search for the boy was going on, Kelu received information from a goldsmith named Brinda that Suka had been to him a little earlier in the evening and had tried to pawn two silver bangles and a waist chain. Jagu had just before this seen Suka sitting in the yard of Bhikhari Palai and he went straight to Suka and brought him to a Khamar (zemindar's home farm) near the garden. Suka at first denied that he had seen Loka but when confronted with Brinda he confessed that he and Jhulan had killed the boy and robbed him of his jewellery and that he had last seen him in the Bari when going away to pawn the silver trinkets. On being taken to the garden and finding that the body was not there he said that Jhulan had told him that if he found that the boy was not dead he would throw him into the well in the garden. A visit was then made to the well but the garden being thought to be haunted and it being night no body was willing to enter the water. The Chaukidar's brother was then put in charge of the well and Jagu and the villagers returned to the Khamar with Suka. At this stage Jhulan appeared at the Khamar. There is some conflict as to whether he was fetched or whether he came of his own accord, but the learned Sessions Judge finds that he came of his own accord. On being questioned, he denied having seen Loka but he and Suka were both taken by Indra Mullick Chaukidar to the Thana which is three miles off and which was reached about 2 A. M. The Sub-Inspector was awakened and Jagu Raut's information was recorded. The Sub-Inspector then searched Suka's person and Suka gave up an Anta Suta (waist chain) which was his own and Rs. 1-3-5 in cash. Jhulan was next asked to shake his dhoti and as soon as it was loosened two Nolis and one Fasta belonging to Loka fell on the ground. Early the following morning the Sub-Inspector arrived at Madhei Sahu's Bari and searched the well and the body of Loka was recovered from the bottom. The body was naked but a gamcha with a heavy stone about 20 seers in weight was tied round the middle, evidently for the purpose of preventing it from floating. Round the throat and over the mouth there was another gamcha tied tightly and it was obvious that the boy had been either throttled or strangled to death. Later in the day, Banchu, the brother of the goldsmith Brinda, handed over to the Sub-Inspector one waist-chain and two silver bangles belonging to Loka, which, he said, had been brought to him for sale about 7 o'clock the previous night by the accused Suka, who wanted to sell them as he was leaving for Calcutta the following day. Bancha further told the Sub-Inspector that he could not fix the price without testing the metal and that Suka thereupon hurried off saying that he would call for them the next morning.

On the 18th March Suka was placed before a Magistrate and was asked whether he desired to make any statement. His reply was that he knew nothing.

A commitment inquiry was then begun and both accused were examined by the Magistrate under section 209, Criminal Procedure Code, on the 7th April. Suka who by that time had apparently re-considered his position then made a long and detailed statement describing how he and Jhulan had attacked and robbed Loka while returning through Madhei Sahu's Bari, but he attempted at the same time to exculpate himself to some extent by saying that he tried to prevent Jhulan from killing Loka and that he was driven away by Jhulan and Jhulan's father Nira, as to whose complicity no hint had been given in the confession of the 15th March, Jhulan, on the other hand, still protested his innocence and said that he had been working in the Khamar until 2 gharis of the night with a number of labourers; that, shortly after he had gone home, Suka's brother came and informed him that Suka had thrown Loka into Madhei Sahu's well, that he came at once to the Khamar, that he was there questioned by Dinabandhu Sahu, and that in spite of his protestations he was taken to the Thana. He denied that any gold ornaments were found on him.

In the Sessions Court Suka made a still further variation. He admitted making the statement which the Committing Magistrate had recorded, but he added that it was his father who had killed Loka in order to revenge himself against Jhulan and Nira and that he had been tutored by his father to accuse Jhulan falsely, with whose family his father had been quarrelling for about four years about a wall and a fence. He also said that he suspected his father of tampering with his wife. Jhulan's statement was practically the same as that made before the Committing Magistrate and he still denied that the Nolis and the Fasia were found in his possession.

Agreeing with the three assessors as regards Suka and disagreeing with them as regards Jhulan, the Sessions Judge has sentenced both appellants to death for an offence under section 302, Indian Penal Code.

Now, the case against Suka presents no difficulty. His movements between 1 ghari before sunset and 9 P. M. on the 15th March can only be ascertained from his confession before the Committing Magistrate. His account is that, after he went back to his father's house with his wife and child, he waited some time at the house but was not given anything to eat. He then went to the Khamar and found Jhulan and his father there. With regard to what followed, I quote his own words: "Jhulan then said "Do they not give you anything to eat? Have you got money with you?" I said "No". He said "You had two rupees with you." I said "I have spent a part of that money in filing the application there is a balance of Rs. 1-3-0." Jhulan then said "What more will you do—your brother Loka has gone to Chatsali (Pathsala). As there is no money we shall take bracelets and waist chain from him and by that money we shall go to Calcutta." He next proceeds to relate how Jhulan's father Nira also worked upon his feelings and advised him to go the following day to the zemindar's Kachahri. After this he waited till dusk at the Khamar and saw his brother Loka coming from school whereupon Jhulan said "He is going by that road. Let us go by this way. Catch hold of him." The confession then proceeds as follows: "I went and caught hold of his hand and pulled him in that Bari. There is a Sahara tree there which was in darkness then. He cried, Jhulia put his hand in his mouth and thrusting his hand from the side of his legs carried him to Madhei Sahu's Bari. I took off his bracelets and waist chain. He took off his Nolis (ear rings) with the help of his nails. As the Fasia did not come out he pulled it. While he was taking off these articles he put a cloth in his mouth and pressed him with his knee. Loka was throwing about his legs. After taking out the Noli and Fasia Jhulia began to strangle him. He was holding his neck. I pulled out his hand and said "He is my brother he will die, I shall not be able to bear it." He said "What do you know—you keep quiet. We shall kill him. You are taking the waist chain and Khadu. Your father and mother will let you off. They will arrest me of theft. We shall kill him. I am tying his hand and feet; you go to the goldsmith's house and come back after selling the Khadu and Suta." He tied the legs with a red napkin and the face with the old one and said "I am now going to the Khamar; I was working there; I shall ascertain if there is work for to-morrow. You go to the Bania's house; I shall come back just now. If I shall see that he is dead then alright, otherwise I shall throw him into the well." I went to the Bania's house and he to the Khamargarh. When I went towards the road my conscience pricked me (or I felt uneasy). I thought, why should I kill him. I came back and untied the leg and was about to untie the face when Jhulia and his father arrived. I put off the cloth from the mouth and raised him and made him sit. He sat. Nira Raut said "Why did you make him sit? The Sala is half dead. Why do you make him sit? Let us kill him." I said "No, we shall not kill him." He said "Sala, what do you know? I married two wives, I killed the first wife. As soon as she died I put some Torani (rice water). All knew that she died of Maidan (diarrhoea or cholera); who could know that? Did the Police catch me—we shall kill him in the same way. You go away. Dont' tell this to any one." I was driven out, I fled away keeping my eyes over them at times. I went to a distance and from thence I looked at them. Nira Raut and Jhulia said "Why are you standing on? Go away." I went away to Bania's house. I took the articles to Brunda Bania's house. He said "I have no money." Then I went to Banchu Bania and said to him "Will you take the Khadu and Anta Suta." He said "Why not"? I then said "What will you pay for each Vari." He said "I shall pay 11 annas for each Vari, let the articles remain here till to-morrow morning when you will come and have them weighed and take the price." I then came away from that place and sat in the Gonda's house. My father went there to call me. With him I came to the Khamar. There I confessed everything. Gentlemen say that I stated that I killed him which is not so. I stated "We left him at that place."

There is no foundation for the suggestion that this statement was inspired by the appellant's father. On the other hand, it is difficult to follow the workings of the appellant's mind and to explain his conduct, first, before the villagers, then before the Magistrate on the 17th March and then before the Committing Magistrate on the 7th April and finally before the Sessions Judge on the 11th May. There can be no doubt that, as soon as he was taxed by his father and his co-villagers regarding the disappearance of Loka, he made a clean breast of the whole affair. This is proved by Jagu, Dinabandhu, Kelu, Giridhari, Narain, Dhruba and Brinda. The reason for this confession at least is clear for he was confronted with Brinda to whom he had just taken the two bracelets and the waist chain and he evidently had not the presence of mind to concoct any plausible explanation. The evidence of Dinabandhu on this point seems to me to be perfectly straight-forward and reliable and I quote the material portions of it in his own words:—

"Jagu Raut said that his boy was not found and asked what he should do. We asked him to search in the village, and just then Kelai Raut, Jagu's nephew, arrived and said that Brunda Maharana was saying at the Khamar that Suka had taken bangles, waist chain to him for sale. Kelu asked Jagu to see where Suka was. Jagu and Kelu went to fetch Suka, Jagu having seen Suka at Bhikhari Palai's house. They asked us to go to the Khamar as Brinda was there. So we went to the Khamar. Brinda was sitting there. Padmalabh the man in charge of the Khamar was not there. We spoke to Brinda and Jagu and Kelu arrived there with Suka. I asked Suka saying that Brinda was saying that he, Suka, has taken bangles and waist chain to him. Suka denied it. I said that Brinda was no stranger to him and had been saying it, Suka after saying that Brinda might be saying it and that he (Suka) could not prevent it, kept quiet for some time. Then he said that he had taken the ornaments to Brinda. I then asked him what he had done with his brother Loka; now that he admitted taking the ornaments to Brinda, Suka said nothing. Then he said "Mari Pakaichhi" (I have killed him). We were disgusted, and he said that he had left Loka in the Bari of Madhei Sahu. We thought that the boy might by some chance be alive, and we wanted to hurry to the spot and get up when Kelu seized the Batua, Exhibit 1, from Suka's waist. Dhruba Raut asked Kelu what was the point of taking the Batua. Kelu said that the silver ornaments had been taken to the goldsmith but the gold ornaments—Noli and Fasia—may be in the Batua. Suka said that Jhula had taken the gold Nolis and Fasia. I asked Suka why Jhula had taken those things and Suka said that he and Jhula together had killed Loka. He added that after killing him they had left him tied in Madhei Bari, and that Jhula had said to him "take silver ornaments to a Bania and sell them. Let the body remain here. As I have been working at the Khamar, I will go and see the Khamar people. I will come later on and see the body. If I find life gone, well and good, otherwise I will throw him into the well." So we all went to Madhei Sahu's Bari. There I asked him to point out the place where the body was left. I asked him why it was not there, and he said that Jhula must have thrown it into the well. We tried to look into the well with a lantern, but as it was night, nothing could be seen. So we came out of the Bari and sat on the road in front of the Bari; that road is called the Kodigna Padia (a fallow where transactions in Cowries used to take place). Banchu Raut was sent to fetch the Chaukidar Indra Mallik with his brother. Suka was with us, and I asked Suka how he had killed Loka and Suka said that Jhula had seized Loka by the legs, that he (Suka) had tied a cloth over his mouth and neck tightly, that after throwing Loka in that condition Suka had gone to the Bania, and that he could not say what happened after that. Then the Chaukidar and his brother Narsing Mallik arrived; they had not come when Suka told us how he had tied his brother. Soon after, the Chaukidar came Jhulan. He had not been sent for at all."

While the statement before the Committing Magistrate is obviously incorrect in so far as it seeks to reduce Suka's guilt there is, in my opinion, no doubt that the above confession made to the villagers was a true and accurate account of the events that happened. From the 17th March Suka was in custody in Jail and between that date and the 7th April he had ample time to prepare a carefully considered defence. In my opinion the skill displayed in the preparation of the statement of the latter date makes it quite impossible to accept the suggestion that Suka is a person of weak intellect and that he was coerced into joining in the robbery under the influence of a stronger mind. As for the statement made before the Sessions Judge about a month later, it clearly bears evidence of both malice and cunning. There is no evidence whatsoever that Jagu Raut, the old man, was carrying on an intrigue with the appellant's young wife, and as for the suggestion that Jagu Raut killed his own son, who was the youngest child and the favourite of the family, not only is there no evidence but the motive is wholly inadequate. It seems that two years before the occurrence there was a criminal case about a fence between Jagu Raut and Nira which was compromised and that, shortly before the occurrence, Nira had beaten one of Jagu Raut's sons in the course of a quarrel about a boundary and that the two families were not on good terms, Nira suspecting that Jagu had estranged Jhulan from him. It further appears that Nira and Jagu had not been on speaking terms for three or four years; but, all the same, these disputes and quarrels do not to my mind afford a sufficient motive for Jagu's killing his own son in order to fasten a false charge upon Jhulan; on the contrary, the suggestion is that Jagu was siding with Jhulan against Nira. At the same time, the statement before the Sessions Judge shows that Suka had a very lively appreciation of the situation created by his confessions and that he fully realised the necessity of neutralizing their effect. It is true that in his petition to the Zemindar on the 14th March he said that as he was not more intelligent than his other brothers his father was insulting him in various ways and was unwilling to allow him his proper share or to give him access to the house. This admission of intellectual inferiority is counter-balanced by the assertion that he was earning more money than his brothers, and I can find nothing on the record to show that the appellant is of such weak mental capacity that it would be unsafe to rely upon anything that he has said.

The medical evidence also corroborates the story told by him. It discloses the following injuries upon Loka:

(1) The eyelids of both eyes ecchymosed: one small lacerated wound $\frac{1}{4}''$ by $\frac{1}{8}''$ skin deep below the lower eyelid on the right side—the bridge of the nose also ecchymosed.

(2) Three small ecchymoses with swellings on the forehead one at the middle $\frac{1}{2}''$ by $\frac{1}{2}''$ one $\frac{1}{4}''$ by $\frac{1}{2}''$ on the left side, another $\frac{1}{2}''$ by $\frac{1}{2}''$ on the right. On incision extravasation of blood found in the tissues.

(3) One scratch mark on the right side of neck just behind the angle of jaw $1\frac{1}{4}''$ by $\frac{1}{8}''$ probably caused by finger nails. Another on the right cheek $\frac{1}{4}''$ by $\frac{1}{8}''$ probably caused by finger nails. On incision extravasation of blood found on all ecchymoses.

(4) Two small scratch marks one on the right arm above elbow on the outside probably caused by finger nails.

SUKA RAUT v. EMPEROR.

(5) Laceration of the left ear-lobe from the upper bore for ornaments: a portion ½" in le gth completely torn.

Death was due to asphyxia, probably caused by suffocation and no sig of drowning was present. In the opinion of the Sub-Assistant Surgeon the above superficial injuries were not sufficient in themselves to cause death. The ecchymoses on both eyelids and the bridge of the nose and the condition of the conjunctivae show that something was tied round the face and the small scratches on both arms, the neck and the cheek indicate a struggle and the use of finger nails. This evidence, in my opinion, strongly corroborates the account given by Suka to Dinabandhu and I have no doubt that Loka was throttled or strangled to death.

There is yet another piece of evidence which corroborates the confessions and that is the delivery of the two bracelets and waist chain to the goldsmith Banchu after the murder. On this point we have the evidence of Brinda and Banchu. It was possibly owing to the confusion following the discovery of the murder that Banchu was not examined that night, and apparently the first thought of the villagers was to hurry Suka and Jhulan to the Police Station. It was not till the following day that Banchu produced this jewellery, but there can be no reason whatsoever for disbelieving his evidence and that of his brother Brinda as to Suka's part in the matter. Suka offered the jewellery first to Brinda and finding that Brinda had not the money he went to Banchu who told him he would keep the ornaments and give him the money the next day after ascertaining their weight. The evidence of Ankuri Sahu and Sura Sahu establishes the fact that these articles were made by them for Jagu and Jagu's evidence shows that they were being worn by Loka on the day of the occurrence. There can be no doubt that Suka was speaking the truth when he stated before the villagers and repeated in the Committing Magistrate's Court that he robbed Loka of this jewellery and disposed of it in the manner alleged by Banchu.

A point has been made that the evidence of the witnesses who support the confession in the village cannot be accepted because, if Suka had in fact confessed, an attempt would have been made to search the well that night. The explanation is that nobody was willing at that hour to enter the well. The well was carefully guarded the whole night and the discovery of the body in it also corroborates the confession.

Suka's statement both before the villagers and in the Committing Magistrate's Court that he was not present when the body was actually thrown into the well may be true but probably it is not. One reason for doubting its truth is that the body was weighted with a stone weighing about 20 seers; as the distance from the place, where Loka was killed, to the well (according to his own statement) was about 5 yards, it would have been difficult, though not impossible, for one man to carry the body that distance and to throw it with sufficient care into the well so as not to touch the sides; from the state of the body it would seem that care was taken to see that the head did not strike the brick work inside the well.

I am satisfied therefore, that Suka was one of the persons who caused the injuries from which Loka died and I do not believe his later statement that he made an effort to save Loka.

The only inference that can be drawn from his conduct is, that from the outset his intention was to kill and even if he went away to the Bania's shop to pawn the things after the assault, he had no intention of averting fatal consequence; either Loka was dead when he went away or he was nearly dead and Suka's statement to Dinabandhu that Jhulan said, "If I find on my return that he is dead, all right, if not, I will throw him into the well" demonstrates beyond doubt that Suka made no effort to undo what he had done. The probability is that both he and his accomplice threw the body into the well and the absence of signs of drowning shows that life was then extinct.

The learned Counsel for the appellants urges that the motive disclosed is wholly inadequate. Now, the evidence shows that Suka had quarrelled with his father and that he was anxious to leave on the 16th March for Calcutta. He had appal-rently no money to pay the fare. He had a sum of Rs. 2 out of which he spent 7 annas for the petition to the zemindar and he had the balance in his possession when searched at the Police Station. He required about Rs. 4 for the Railway fare to Calcutta and, in my opinion, his object in killing his brother was robbery. There may possibly have been some idea of revenge against his father also but the principal motive was undoubtedly to get the money. The total price of the jewellery taken is said to be a little over Rs. 25, the golden ornaments, that is, the Fasia and the two Nolis which are said to have been taken by Jhulan were worth about Rs. 15; Suka's share, therefore, amounted to about Rs. 10 which was ample for his expenses to Calcutta. So small a sum might seem an inadequate motive for fratricide, but murders have been committed even for less adequate motives and the insufficiency in the present case is not, in my opinion, a ground for disbelieving the evidence.

I have already declined to accept the plea that Suka was incapable of forming any intention of his own and was completely under the will and influence of some superior mind, and to my mind the crime offers no redeeming features. Suka had been earning his own living in Calcutta for 15 or 16 years, and there is nothing to suggest that he was not fully capable of realizing the nature of his act. In these circumstances, no sentence other than death will, in my opinion, be proper. His appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

Ths case against Jhulan is more difficult. We have no informaton at all of his movements on the day of occurrence except from the statements of Suka and the first question is, whether the confessions of Suka can be received as evidence against him. It is contended that the statement before the Committing Magistrate certainly cannot be admitted inasmuch as Suka exculpates himself and throws the whole blame of the murder upon Jhulan. The law on the subject is contained in section 30 of the Indian Evidence Act; and if Suka's statement before the Committing Magistrate can be regarded as a confession, then it is permissible to take it into consideration against his co-accused. The statement is certainly a confession as to the robbery. Is it necessary that in order to be capable of being taken into consideration against Jhulan there must also be a clear and unequivocal admission of murder? Various authorities have been cited before us to show that, unless a confessing prisoner implicates himself as fully as his co-accused, the statement will not be admissible, the principle being there is no guarantee that the maker of the confession is speaking the truth; and reliance is placed upon Empress of India v. Ganraj (1) and Empress of India v. Mulu (2). In my opinion no general rule can be laid down and each case must be decided on its own facts. All that is required is that the confession shall substantially implicate its maker in regard to the crime with which he and his co-accused are charged. It is not necessary that there should be an admission of actual guilt. The admission may establish constructive guilt and the question in the present case is, whether Suka's statement to the Committing Magistrate, taken with the fact that the body was found in the well, would be sufficient to raise an inference that he and his accomplice had the common intention of killing the deceased and that the act which caused death was done in furtherance of that intention. In my opinion the answer to this question is in the affirmative and, therefore, the statement is admisible in evidence.

But the prosecution are on firmer ground when they urge that, whatever may be said of the satement to the Committing Magistrate, the statement to the villagers is certainly a clear and direct admission of guilt and as such it fully complies with the strict rule laid down by the Allahabad and the Calcutta High Courts. I have already referred to Dinabandhu's evidence which proves that the confession was made by Suka as soon as he was confronted with Brinda. Jhulan was not present, but the confession has been legally proved and, therefore, it is admissible even though it was made in his absence. In that confession Suka used the words "I have killed him." He also admitted that Jhulan had seized Loka by the legs, that he (Suka) had tied a cloth over his mouth and neck tightly, that after throwing Loka down in that state he had gone to the Bania, and that he could not say what happened after that. He further said that, after killing Loka he and his companion had left him tied in Madhei Bari and that Jhulia then said: "Take the silver ornaments to a Bania and sell them. Let the body remain here. As I have been working at the Khamar, I will go and see the Khamar people and ascertain whether there is work for to-morrow. You go to the Bania's house, I shall come back just now. If I shall see that he is dead, then all right; otherwise, I shall throw him into the well." There can be no doubt that these statements constitute a full and complete admission of the offence of murder and there is no reason why it should not be taken into consideration against Jhulan. It is true that this confession was partially varied in the Committing Magistrate's Court and completely retracted in the Sessions Judge's Court. It is needless to observe that retracted confessions ought to be viewed with the greatest suspicion even as against the maker himself, and in the present case, if there had not been any corroborating evidence against Jhulan, I do not think it would have been safe to convict him; but the corroborating evidence is clear and convincing and, in my opinion, the learned Sessions Judge was right in disagreeing with the assessors as to its value.

I refer to the fact that two Nolis and one Fasia were found upon the person of Jhulan at the Thana when he was searched. The evidence of Parikhit shows that he got these ornaments made in Calcutta two years before the occurrence and that he gave them to his father who proves that Loka was wearing them on the day of the occurrence. As Jhulan denies that the ornaments were found on his person and indeed that they were found at all at the Thana, it is necessary to examine with some care the evidence bearing upon this part of the case. It appears that at 2 A. M, Jhulan and Suka had arrived at the Thana in the custody of the Chaukidar Indra Mallik and of Jagu, Kelu and Bandhu. The Sub-Inspector, Akbar Khan, was asleep, but on being awakened he caused two independent persons named Sirajuddin, a cultivator, and Sadhucharan Das, a stamp-vendor, to be fetched. These persons were present when Jagu's first information was recorded and the Sub-Inspector took the precaution of taking their signatures upon it. At that time the Sub-Inspector was sitting in the verandah of the Police Station with Sirajuddin and Sadhu. According to the evidence of Sadhu, the two accused were about 10 cubits to the left of the Sub-Inspector near the end of the verandah. Jagu and his co-villagers were immediately below the Sub-Inspector in the yard before the First Information was recorded, but he came up afterwards. Near the accused there were some Constables, but they were below in the yard. The Sub-Inspector had a lantern, the Constables had one or two lanterns and the villagers had brought a lantern of their own so that there seems to have been sufficient light. After recording the First Information the Sub-Inspector recorded the statements of two or three witnesses; he then called the accused up to him and recorded their statements; he next asked Suka to loosen his dhoti; Suka did so, and he gave up one Suta and some money, and nothing else of importance was found upon him. According to the Sub-Inspector Jhulan was next made to stand up and to shake his dhoti and as soon as he did so two Nolis and a Fasia fell on the floor of the verandah about one cubit from Jhulan. A Constable then picked up the ornaments. Jagu immediately identified them as being Loka's. Sadhu's account is a somewhat fuller one, but I do not think there is any material difference between it and the Sub-Inspector's, and wherever there is a discrepancy I prefer to trust to Sadhu's memory. Sadhu states that just before Jhulan and Suka were ordered to stand up, two Constables were called from the yard up to the verandah and that Suka gave the money and the waist chain to the Constables. With regard to Jhulan, Sadhu stated before the Committing Magistrate that a Constable untied Jhulan's cloth and in explanation of this statement he said in the Sessions Court that as Jhulan hesitated a little the Constable put his hand on Jhulan's dhoti and that Jhulan shook it after the Constable had untied it. The Constable picked up the jewellery and handed it to the Sub-Inspector. The Sub-Inspector deposes that he asked Jhulan where he had got the ornaments and that Jhulan replied that he had got them from Suka; but there is no corroboration on this point. Indeed Sirajuddin is positive no one asked him any question on this point. On other points his evidence generally corroborates Sadhu.

In these circumstances, it does not appear that it was possible for any of the prosecution witnesses or Suka to make the ornaments fall out Jhulan's dhoti. To any one familiar with the way money and small articles are rolled up in the folds of the dhoti at the waist it is clear that the only person who could have done it was the Constable who is alleged to have untied the dhoti; but in order to fasten the act upon him, it would be necessary to show that he was in possession of the Nolts and the Fasia. There is, however, no reason for believing that any of the prosecution witnesses brought these articles to the Thana and afterwards handed them to the Constable in order to create evidence against Jhulan and the evidence of Sirajuddin and Sadhu Charan who are absolutely disinterested witnesses is wholly destructive of the theory that there has been any manufacture of false evidence in this connection. It is difficult to conceive that a wickedly malicious conspiracy of this nature between the prosecution witnesses present at the Thana and the Police could have been carried out without detection by these two persons. On the other hand, it is contended by the learned Counsel that it is equally inconceivable that Jhulan should have kept the spoils of his crime upon his person so long. This point has certainly to be met and we have to inquire how it was that he came to the Khamar at all after the murder. Jagu said in had confessed, he and his co-villagers went to Jhulan's house and questioned him, but he gave no answer and that Suka then took his co-villagers to the garden and showed them the well into which Loka's body was thrown. The evidence given at the trial shows that this statement was incorrect. Having regard to the fact that the First Information was recorded at 2 A. M. the error, in my opinion, is intelligible. Jagu now denied that he went to Jhulan's house and says that he cannot say whether any one brought him to the Khamar. Dinabandhu's evidence, however, is quite clear and he is certain that Jhulan was not sent for at all and that he arrived shortly after the Chaukidar, and the learned Sessions Judge is also of this opinion. Jhulan himself stated before the Committing Magistrate that he was at home reading a sacred book when one of Suka's brothers came and told him that Suka had thrown Loka into the well and that he at once came to the Khamar, and it would seem that his case is that he arrived after Suka had made his confession and pointed out the well. I think this is correct, and we can only speculate as to Jhulan's reason for carrying the ornaments upon his person. It may be that as he had gone to the length of risking his life for the sake of the ornaments, the desire to retain physical possession of them overpowered the dictates of ordinary prudence. He might certainly have thrown away or hidden the ornaments, but it is possible that so completely dominated was he by the feeling of greed that he was not willing to relinquish his custody of the articles even for one moment. It is true that the value of the articles was only about Rs. 15, but as in the case of Suka the smallness of the value is immaterial. It may also be that Jhulan did not know that he had been accused by Suka or that, if he did know, he intended to brazen out the accusation. He may have thought that he would be able to deny successfully that the articles belonged to Loka if they were found in his possession at the Khamar or that nobody would have the courage to search him against his will. In this last surmise he was certainly right, because, as a matter of fact, he was not searched till he got to the Thana.

I am, therefore, not much pressed with what men of ordinary intelligence would have done under similar circumstances. If Suka was capable immediately after the murder of pawning the silver ornaments with the goldsmith Banchu in utter disregard of the fact that he would certainly be caught as soon as the disappearance of Loka became known, it is scarcely surprising that Jhulan should have committed the indiscretion of carrying about the stolen property upon his person.

It is next urged that Jhulan could have thrown them away on the way to the Thana; but the evidence is that he was tied with a rope and that his hands were not free. Indeed, after his arrival at the Khamar he had no opportunity of disposing of the ornaments. He asserts that he was not tied and the prosecution witness Dhruba supports him on this point, but this witness was not present when the villagers started with Jhulan for the Thana. On the other hand, the Chaukidar Inder Mallik, Bandhu and Jagu all depose that Jhulan was dead and, in my opinion, their evidence should be accepted.

It may be asked why Jhulan was not searched. From Dinabandhu's evidence it would appear that he was not quite certain that Jhulan ought to be sent to the Thana and that, when Jagu protested that Jhulan ought not to be left behind, Dinabandhu said that the Chaukidar was to decide. This may explain why Jhulan was not searched by his co-villagers. Or it may be that there is really no explanation to give. As the villagers did not take the precaution to search Suka who was confessing, there was perhaps nothing strange in their omitting to search a man as to whose guilt there was some doubt.

Finally, there is evidence of association between Jhulan and Suka. Jagu states that he believes that Jhulan and Suka work together at the General Post Office in Calcutta. There is also a somewhat curious statement by Suka in his confession which points to an intimate connection. From his confession it would appear that Jhulan knew that Suka had Rs. 2 in his possession and questioned him about it shortly before the murder. It is not likely that this part of the confession was pure invention and, in my opinion, it is established that Jhulan and Suka were close friends.

With regard to Jhulan's father Nira, there was no mention of him in the confession to the villagers, and it does not appear that he took any part in the proceedings at the Khamar before Jhulan and Suka were sent to the Thana. His name was introduced by Suka for the first time in the Committing Magistrate's Court and it is probable that Suka's object was to account for the disposal of the body. He had realized that it would have been difficult to make people believe that, weighted with a heavy stone, it was removed by Jhulan alone.

It is unnecessary to discuss the evidence of the defence witnesses called by Jhulan. They seek to prove that he was working in the Khamar at 6-30 P. M. but their evidence is inconclusive.

The result, therefore, is that in my opinion, the learned Judge was right in finding that Jhulan took part in the murder and that he has committed an offence under section 302, Indian Penal Code. There are no extenuating circumstances in the case. The offence was committed in a cruel and callous manner and with a disregard for consequences verging on contempt. In my opinion, death is the only proper penalty in the circumstances and the sentences passed by the learned Sessions Judge upon both appellants will be affirmed.

The appeal of Jhulan is also dismissed.

CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 262 OF 1923.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 342—"Examined," meaning of—Examination of accused after cross-examination of prosecution witnesses, whether obligatory.

The word "examined" in section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not merely refer to the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses but includes their cross-examination and re-examination. [p. 719, col. 1.]

Mazahar Ali v. Emperor, 71 Ind. Cas. 662; 27 C. W. N. 99; 36 C. L. J. 417; 24 Cr. L. J. 198; (1923) A. I. R. (C.) 196; 50 C. 223, followed.

Per Buckland, J.—In all cases, whether additional witnesses have been called after a charge has been framed or not, the obligatory examination of the accused under section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code should take place after all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and cross-examined and before he is called on for his defence. [p. 717, col. 1.]

Per Cuming, J. (dissenting).—The expression "examined" used in section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not include cross-examination or re-examination. [p. 717, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Buckland, J. (April 19th, 1923).—The point involved in this Rule has come before the Court recently on several occasions, and it arises upon the interpretation to be given to section 342, Criminal Procedure Code. The complainant and five witnesses for the prosecution were examined-in-chief on the 7th July 1922, On the 20th July 1922 five other witnesses for the prosecution were examined-in-chief. The accused was then examined under section 342. On the 7th August a charge was framed. No further witnesses for the prosecution were examined-in-chief, but on that and on subsequent dates the witnesses for the prosecution were cross-examined. On the 18th September six witnesses for the defence were examined. The question is, whether or not the obligatory examination of the accused under section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code should have taken place after the witnesses for the prosecution had been cross-examined.

It has been submitted to us that, inasmuch as there was no examination of the accused under that section after the witnesses for the prosecution had been cross-examined and before he was called upon to enter upon his defence, the provisions of the section have not been complied with. In point of fact, the accused was examined after the witnesses for the prosecution had been examined-in-chief and before he was called on for his defence. But the contention is that the word "examined" in section 342 includes cross-examination and that, in consequence, the provisions of the section have been contravened.

We have been referred generally to recent decisions of this Court and particularly to the judgment in Mazahar Ali v. Emperor (1) in which the learned Chief Justice referring to the words of the section said: "That must mean after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, and after the cross-examination and re-examination, if any, of such witnesses, for ordinarily the accused is not called on for his defence until the case for the prosecution is closed." I do not understand that by this it is necessarily meant that the word "examined" includes cross-examination and re-examination if any. It .....seems to me that the decision is based upon broader grounds, for a few lines earlier in the judgment I find it stated: "In my judgment it is clearly indicated in that part of the section that the time at which the Court shall question the accused generally on the case, is, after the prosecution case is completed and before the accused person is called on for his defence."

I agree with this conclusion and I desire to state my reasons with reference to the procedure laid down in Chapter XXI for the trial of warrant-cases. Section 252 provides for the examination of the complainant and of witnesses for the prosecution in the first instance. As regards them it is open to the defence to cross-examine them if they choose to do so as they are called or to reserve the cross-examination until the opportunity provided later. When those witnesses have been examined or at any previous stage of the case, which means before they have all been examined, the Magistrate, under section 254, is entitled to frame a charge in writing against the accused. The charge is then read and explained to the accused and he is asked to plead to it. Then, if he does not plead guilty or has to be tried, the accused is given an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has already been taken, and after those whom he desires to re-call for that purpose have been cross-examined and re-examined they are discharged. Next, the evidence of the remaining witnesses for the prosecution is taken and after cross-examination and re-examination they too are discharged. There the case for the prosecution closes and it is at that stage and before the accused is called upon to enter on his defence which is the next stage that the obligatory examination of the accused under section 342 should take place.

(1) 71 Ind. Cas. 662; 27 C. W. N. 99; 36 C. L. J. 417; 24 Cr. L. J. 198; (1923) A. I. R. (C.) 196; 50 C. 223.

There may, therefore, be cases where all the witnesses for the prosecution are examined before a charge is framed and they are only cross-examined thereafter and cases where additional witnesses are called for the prosecution after a charge has been framed.

With regard to trials in which such additional witnesses are called for the prosecution, in my opinion, which I might have to re-consider if the point directly arose for decision at any further time, such additional witnesses for the prosecution should be cross-examined and re-examined one by one as they are called. As regards witnesses called before a charge is framed an opportunity is provided to them for cross-examination but there is no such provision as regards the additional or remaining witnesses for the prosecution. Failure to observe this procedure is one source of error with regard to questioning a prisoner under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code. But if the additional witnesses for the prosecution are examined-in-chief, cross-examined and re-examined one by one then, as a matter of course, it will follow that the stage at which the Court shall question the accused generally on the case will be after the prosecution case is complete and before the accused is called on for his defence and no question can possibly arise as to whether the word "examined" in section 342 does or does not include the word "cross-examined".

In cases, however, where no additional witnesses are called after a charge has been framed, errors in the observance of section 342 are even more frequent. As to these cases the procedure laid down, even if followed with the utmost precision, does not lead with the same directness to the point of which sight cannot be lost at which the obligatory questioning of the accused must take place. The reason for this is that, if the accused is questioned after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined-in-chief, but before they are cross-examined, and also, of course, before he has been called on for his defence, the terms of the section so far as they require him to be questioned "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence" have been complied with unless the word "examined" is held to include "cross-examined". But this is not all that the section says. The words quoted indicate that the accused is to be questioned at least after all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined-in-chief, and I know of no case where it has been argued that the section is not contravened if witnesses for the prosecution are examined-in-chief after the accused has been examined and he is not again questioned before he is called on for his defence. The section also provides that the accused shall be questioned "generally on the case" and to hold that to question him before the witnesses for the prosecution have been cross-examined is sufficient is to lose sight of this very important phrase. For it may well be that circumstances demanding explanation have been elicited by the cross-examination, and whether that is so or not it cannot by any stretch of language be said that to question the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain the examination-in-chief but to give him no opportunity to explain any or even only a part of the cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution is to question him generally on the case. This reasoning applies equally to cases where additional witnesses for the prosecution are called after a charge has been framed but for reasons which I have given its application to such cases should be unnecessary.

For these reasons I am of opinion that, in all cases, whether additional witnesses are called after a charge has been framed or not, the obligatory examination of the accused under section 342 should take place after all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and cross-examined and before he is called on for his defence.

Before I conclude I should say that my judgment is not intended by such general observations as I have made to suggest that where in his discretion the Judge or Magistrate rightly permits a witness or witnesses for the prosecution to be called or cross-examined after the accused has been called on for his defence a further examination of the accused under this section must take place. The section only deals with an obligatory examination of the accused before he is called on for his defence, and should any such question arise hereafter the point will then have to be decided.

In my judgment this Rule should be made absolute and the order of the Trial Court, dated the 15th November 1922, should be set aside and the trial should be resumed by the Magistrate from that point at which the obligatory examination under section 342 should have taken place.

As my learned brother dissents, the case will have to be referred under section 429, Criminal Procedure Code.

Cuming, J.—(April 19th, 1923).—I would discharge this Rule. The Rule was granted on the ground that in the absence of examination of the petitioner according to the mandatory provisions of section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code the conviction of the petition cannot be sustained. From the body of the petition it appears that it is alleged that the provisions of the section were not complied with, in that the accused person was not examined after the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and it would appear from the order-sheet that this was so. It appears that after the examination of the prosecution witnesses-in-chief the accused was examined and the prosecution witnesses were subsequently cross-examined. In my opinion and with great respect to the learned Judges who decided the case of Mozahar Ali v. Emperor (1) this was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the section. Section 342 states: "For the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, the Court may at any stage of any enquiry or trial without previously warning the accused, put such questions to him as the Court considers necessary, and shall, for the purpose aforesaid, question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence." As I read the section, the expression "examined" means examination-in-chief and does not include cross-examination or re-examination of the prosecution witnesses. A perusal of the Code will show that the Code apparently contemplates three distinct stages in the examination of the witness—his examination, his cross-examination and his re-examination, and where the Code uses the expression 'examined' in section 342, it seems to me that the Code intended to refer to examination and not necessarily to cross-examination or re-examination; in other words, the expression "examined" as set out in section 342 does not include cross-examination or re-examination. My reasons are these. Consider, for instance, the sections dealing with the trial of warrant-cases.

Section 252 provides that the Magistrate will hear the complainant and take all the evidence which may be produced in support of the prosecution. After taking their evidence the Magistrate examined the accused under section 253. The Magistrate may then either discharge him or frame a charge. The charge could be framed previously at any stage under section 254 but as soon as the charge is framed the accused is called on to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution who have already been examined. They are then re-examined if necessary and discharged. The remaining witnesses for the prosecution are then examined, cross-examined and re-examined; the accused then is called on to enter on his defence. Section 257 provides for the accused re-calling and cross-examining prosecution witnesses after he has entered on his defence.

It will be noticed that the different stages, examination, cross-examination and re-examination may take place at different times. These sections set out the procedure to be followed in warrant-cases and after section 253, which alone provides for the examination of the accused, no mention whatever is made of such examination. No doubt the Code contemplates in certain cases further witnesses for the prosecution being examined after the charge, and reading section 342 which is in the general provisions for trials, the accused must also be examined after these witnesses have been examined in order that he may explain anything that may appear against him in their evidence. Now, if the object of the examination is to allow the accused to explain anything which may appear against him in the evidence of the prosecution there would be no necessity to examine him after the cross-examination, for the object of the cross-examination is, I understand, to destroy the evidence for the prosecution and in itself to explain away facts which might appear against the accused. I am, therefore, of opinion that the expression "examined" in section 342 refers to the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses and does not include their cross-examination or re-examination and that, therefore, in the present case the requirement of the Code have been complied with.

Rankin, J.—(May 21st, 1915)—In this case the accused person was standing his trial in a warrant-case on a charge under section 500 of the Indian Penal Code. After the prosecution witnesses had been examined-in-chief the accused was questioned generally on the case by the Magistrate. Thereafter cross-examination of the posecution witnesses took place and the objection now under consideration is this: That section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, was not complied with as, after the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, the accused was not again examined generally on the case in terms of the section. The view taken by Mr. Justice Buckland, following the decision in Muzahar Ali v. Emperor (1), was that in those circumstances the provisions of section 342 had not been complied with, the requirements of the section being that after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined in the sense that the examination, cross-examination and re-examination have concluded, the accused is entitled to the advantage of being called upon to explain any matter against him. Mr. Justice Cuming has taken the view that, upon the wording of the section, the words "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined" do not mean more than that the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined-in-chief.

To begin with, in this reference the learned Vakil for the complainant has drawn my attention to sections 255, 256 and 289 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. He has contended that the words of section 342, "and before he is called on for his defence" mean the same thing as the expression, "shall be asked whether he is guilty or has any defence to make", and that they do not mean the same thing as the words in section 256 where it says that the accused "he shall then be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence," In like manner, he distinguishes the language of section 342 from the concluding words of section 289 "the Court shall call upon the accused to enter on his defence." Now, it is quite true that the phrase "before he is called on for his defence" is slightly different from the phrase "called on to enter on his defence" but in my judgment they mean exactly the same thing and the reference at the end of the first sub-section of section 342 is to the same point, or to the same matter as is dealt with at the end of the first sub-section of section 256. Section 255 deals with plea. The question is not one of calling on the accused for his defence or of entering upon a defence but only of ascertaining whether there is any defence or not. If there is a plea of guilty, it will not be necessary to hear further evidence for the prosecution. In most cases the stage in the case pointed out by the first sub-section of 255 will not immediately be followed by the accused person entering on his defence or being called upon for his defence but will be followed by the prosecution proceeding to prove their case.

The next point taken is that, if one looks at various sections of the Code, one will find that examination, cross-examination and re-examination are used in contradistinction to one another. It is, however, quite clear that examination-in-chief, cross-examination, and re-examination are different sub-species of what is called more broadly examination. A witness is said to be examined when the whole process has been completed. In this connection I will refer to section 231 of the Code. It seems to me that it is quite clear that the word "examine" is there used in the larger sense and that it would cover cross-examination. In the same way it seems to me that the frame of section 342 must be considered. A particular stage of the trial is indicated by saying "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence." Does that mean that the witnesses for the prosecution have been completely heard and finished and the evidence for the defence is about to begin, or does it mean that the witnesses for the prosecution have been part heard, have been examined-in-chief and that at any time during the succeeding stages but before the accused is called on to enter on his defence the accused is to be examined by the Court? In my judgment the end of sub-section (1) of section 342 indicates a perfectly definite stage, namely, after the prosecution case is finished and before the defence case is begun. It is diffiicvlt in a long Code to maintain a special meaning for ordinary English words, and in section 342, just as in section 231, the word "exmined" is to be taken, in my judgment, in the ordinary English sense in which it covers all kinds of examination including cross-examination and re-examination. The language of section 137 of the Indian Evidence Act shows the primary meaning of the word because it says that the examination of a witness shall in some circumstances be called examination-in-chief in others cross-examinations and in others re-examination.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the judgment of Mr. Justice Buckland and the order proposed by him is right and the judgment of Mr. Justice Cuming dissenting from it ought not be upheld. I propose in this case to make the same order as Mr. Justice Buckland proposed to make, namely, to make the Rule absolute, to set aside the order of the Trial Court and direct the trial to be resumed by the Magistrate from that point at which the examination under section 342 should have taken place.

Where service of a Distress Warrant, issued under the Bengal Municipal Act, cannot be effected personally on the addressee, the fact that it is left at his house and presented to an adult male member of his family constitutes regular service under section 356 of the Act. GOVERNMENT ADVOCATE, BEHAR AND ORISSA v. GANGA PRASAD.

The mere omission to specify the date of return in a Distress Warrant issued in the proper form provided by the Bengal Municipal Act, Sch. IV, does not render the warrant illegal. [p. 721, col. 1.]

A person employed by a Municipality for the purpose of collecting taxes is a Public Officer under section 21 (10) of the Penal Code. [p. 721, col. 1.]

The sanction of a Public Officer for a prosecution under section 195, of the Criminal Procedure Code is not necessary in a case where the complainant is himself the Public Officer concerned. [p. 721, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Honorary Magistrate, Second Class, Sadikpur, dated the 25th October 1922.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. S. Dayal, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal from an acquittal by an Honorary Magistrate of the Second Class of the Sadikpur Bench in Patna on the 25th October last year. The complainant is a Tax Collector employed by the Municipality of Patna. The accused is in occupation of a house within that Municipality. The name of the accused is Ganga Prasad but the house is entered in the name of his brother, Tulsi Lal, who appears to be the actual owner of the house. Ganga Prasad, however, is in occupation and the taxes, although levied on Tulsi Lal, have hitherto been collected from Ganga Prasad. The offences with which the accused is charged are offences under sections 504 and 186 of the Indian Penal Code. Section 504 refers to intentionally insulting or giving provocation to a person intending or knowing it to be likely that such provocation will cause a breach of the peace or some other offence. Section 186 refers to voluntarily obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions. It appears that on the 14th July last the complainant proceeded to the house in question with a distress warrant in order to attach the property in the house by reason of a default in payment of the taxes due. The tax due was a small sum of Rs. 1-14-0 or thereabouts. A demand notice had previously been served; no payment had been made and consequently something more than a month later the distress warrant having issued was given to the complainant, who is the Tax Collectct or employed by the Municipality, in order to serve it. What happened has been described by the complainant himself and by four or five other witnesses. He went to the house occupied by Ganga Prasad and when Ganga Prasad appeared he presented the warrant with the result that he was called filthy and abusive names and Ganga Prasad apparently got angry and went for a stick which he brought out and he chased the complainant away threatening and abusing him. I ought perhaps to add, before this assault took place the complainant upon being refused the amount of the tax had ordered his peon to attach two of the chairs in the house and it was upon the peon's attempting to do so that the accused was guilty of the offences charged against him. The evidence given by the complainant is supported in its main incidents by Gopi, the peon, and by one Chhotto, a toddy seller, by Ganga, a Telegraph peon, and by Lalloo Ram, a Collectrate peon, and by Luchmi Prasad, a Waterworks tax collector in Bankipore also employed by the Municipality. There can be no doubt, if the evidence of these witnesses is relied upon, that the accused not only threatened the complainant and chased him with a stick but also used extremely abusive and insulting language to him such, that it was certainly very likely, unless the complainant showed great restraint, as to result in a breach of the peace.

In answer to these charges there is not a scrap of evidence given on behalf of the defence. The learned Honorary Magistrate before whom the case came dismissed it upon three grounds. He said that as the distress warrant was addressed to Tulsi Lal in whose name the house stood in the Municipal Register and as it was served merely at his house or upon the accused Ganga Prasad there was, therefore, no proper service of notice. He was clearly wrong in this because, under the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, section 356 provides that every notice, summons, or other demand under this Act may be served personally on or presented to the person to whom the same is addressed or may be left at his usual place of abode with some adult male member or servant of his family. Now, what was done in this case was that it was left at Tulsi Lal's house and was presented to an adult male member of his family, viz., his brother. There can be no doubt, therefore, in my mind as to the regular service of the notice.

The second point upon which the learned Honorary Magistrate dismissed the suit was, that the distress warrant was illegal inasmuch as there was no date of return mentioned in the said warrant. I am unable to imagine under what law the learned Honorary Magistrate considered that it was necessary to have any date mentioned for the return of the warrant. It was issued in the proper form provided in Schedule IV of the Bengal Municipal Act and that form does not require that any date should be put in the warrant for return and this is hardly surprising when one considers that the warrant is merely an order directed to the Tax Collector, or whoever may be the proper person to serve it, directing him that if the tax cannot be recovered he should attach the property belonging to the defaulter. Thereupon, armed with that warrant, the Tax Collector proceeds to the house and endeavours to carry out the duty enjoined upon him.

The next ground upon which the learned Honorary Magistrate thought that the case should be dismissed was that the complainant was not a public servant. The complainant is undoubtedly a person employed by the Municipality for the purpose of collecting taxes and has been so employed for some time. Under section 21 of the Indian Penal Code it is distinctly provided in the 10th clause, that the word. "Public Servant" shall apply to every officer whose duty it is, as such officer, to take, receive, keep or expend any property, to make any survey or assessment or to levy any rate or tax for any secular common purpose of any village, town or district. It seems quite clear that the learned Honorary Magistrate did not have his attention properly drawn to the law upon this subject. Another matter which he considered was fatal to the present prosecution was that no sanction had been properly accorded for the prosecution in this case under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Again, the learned Honorary Magistrate's law is at fault. Had he taken the trouble to consider the matter in the least and read the section in question it would have been at once manifest to him that sanction was not necessary in a case where the complainant was himself the public officer in question.

Therefore, in so far as the learned Magistrate has acquitted the accused upon these grounds of law, his judgment cannot possibly stand. The learned Honorary Magistrate did not in his judgment find that the facts upon which the charge is based had not been proved although he said there were certain discrepancies in the evidence and, therefore, we are unable to say whether, if he had not misdirected himself as to the law, he would have convicted the accused of the offences charged. In appeal before us to-day the law laid down by the learned Honorary Magistrate has not been supported, but it has been contended that upon the evidence given we ought to come to the conclusion that nothing of the sort occurred as is alleged by the witnesses. The account given is, as I said at the beginning, an account which shows not only an attack and threats but also very abusive language used against a public officer in the attempted discharge of his duties. But it is said that there are certain discrepancies in the evidence given by these witnesses which ought to lead us to the conclusion that none of the evidence can be accepted. I am entirely unable to come to that conclusion. It is quite true in a case of this sort, as so frequently happens where you get accounts given by different witnesses, there are some discrepancies. The main discrepancy which has been relied upon is that Tabarak Hosain, the complainant, stated in his cross-examination in one place that on the day of the occurrence he went to accused only with a warrant peon. It appears from his evidence, however, a little later on, also in cross-examination, that when the incidents which are complained of took place Luchmi Prasad and several others were present at or very near the house when the accused threatened to beat him. The evidence given by Luchmi, it is said, is in conflict with this. What Luchmi said was that he had gone the same morning to the same house to try and collect the water-tax but had been unsuccessful, but later in the day he met Tabarak Hosain also on his way to the house of the accused and he went back with him thinking perhaps he might have better luck that time. He was outside the house at the time when the occurrence took place and he corroborates the other witnesses as to the assault and the bad language used. The only discrepancy, if it be a discrepancy at all, is that, whereas Tabarak Hosain said he went to the accused only with a warrant peon, the other witness, Luchmi, says he met him before he got there. Now the complainant certainly does in his evidence also say that, Luchmi and other men, some of whom have given evidence, were present when the occurrence took place. I do not think myself that there is any real discrepancy in the evidence. It may well be that when he gave the first part of his evidence he was referring to the time when he actually began to proceed to the house to collect the debt.

Another matter which has been drawn to our attention is, that Gopi, the warrant peon, who accopanied the complainant says that when they went to the house there were two boys reading in the dalan and he asked them to call Tulsi Lal which they did, and accused then came out whilst Tabarak, the complainant, does not in fact refer to these boys being there at all. He certainly does not contradict the evidence but he has omitted the incident altogether. What he says is, "I went to the house of the accused at 10 A. M. and demanded taxes which he refused to pay. I informed and showed him the warrant" and so on. There is, no real discrepancy there. It merely means this that, whereas Gopi had gone into evidence which was really not material leading up to the actual assault, the complainant had not considered it necessary to give all these details but has gone straight to the material points. I can find no discrepancies in the evidence such as would lead us to reject the whole of it and consider that the whole case was got up for some ulterior purpose.

A suggestion has been made in the written statement that there was enmity between the complainant and the accused because the accused had threatened to charge him with committing a nuisance by going to the house, of a prostitute at night somewhere in the neighbourhood of the accused's own house, but there is not a word of evidence in support of this charge and I think it may at once be dismissed as altogether unfounded.

The result is, that we have come to the conclusion that the charge in this case has been made out. It is essential that people in the position of Tax Collectors who are always very unpopular should not be subjected to insults and annoyance by those who are by law bound to pay their taxes and we think, therefore, that some punishment should be inflicted upon the accused. Fortunately, no damage was done and, although the complainant was threatened, he was not in fact beaten. We think, in the circumstances of the case, the accused should be fined a sum of Rs. 50 or in default one month's simple imprisonment for the offence under section 504. We also consider him guilty under the other section but we do not pass any separate sentence under that section.

ROSS, J.—I agree.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 36—Touts, publication of list of—Fourth Presidency Magistrate, jurisdiction of.

Inasmuch as the Court of a Fourth Presidency Magistrate is subordinate to that of the Presidency Magistrate, the presiding officer of that Court has no jurisdiction to publish a list of touts applicable to Courts, other than his own, which are not subordinate to his Court.

Messrs. Santosh Kumar Bose, Santosh Kumar Pal and Amulya Chandra Sen, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order passed under section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act including the petitioner's name in a list of touts.

It appears that the order for the inclusion of the petitioner's name was passed by the Fourth Presidency Magistrate and on this order the petitioner's name was added to the list of touts for the Court at Jorabagan. It appears, however, that the Court at Jorabagan is subordinate to the Chief Presidency Magistrate and consists of several Courts presided over by several Presidency Magistrates, one of whom is the Fourth Presidency Magistrate, Mr. J. N. Sarkar, who passed this order. But, the powers of a Presidency Magistrate to publish list of touts is limited by section 36 to his own Court and the Courts subordinate thereto. The list in which the petitioner's name has been published is applicable to Courts other than that in which the Fourth Presidency Magistrate presides and those Courts are not subordinate to his Court. We must, therefore, hold that the order was bad as having been made without jurisdiction.

We accordingly make this Rule absolute and set aside the order of the Fourth Presidency Magistrate directing that the petitioner's name be included in the list of touts for the Jorabagan Court.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 117—Evidence of mere suspicion, value of—Prosecution, duty of—Evidence of good repute—Court, duty of—Powers to be exercised with caution—Joint trial, objection to, when should be taken.

Evidence of mere suspicion of a person having taken part in certain criminal offences is not evidence of general repute within the meaning of section 117, clause (3), Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 726, col. 2.]

Raham Ali v. Emperor, 20 Ind. Cas. 231; 11 A. L. J. 461; 14 Cr. L. J. 407, referred to.

In order to bind a person down in security to be of good behaviour under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, there should be evidence in which the accused is proved to have been concerned in certain criminal cases, or some direct evidence to establish his complicity in such cases; the evidence ought to be of such a nature as to lead to a reasonable and definite ground for coming to the conclusion that the accused is a habitual thief. [p. 726, col. 2.]

When proceedings under section 110 are taken against a person and he is able to produce witnesses on his behalf to speak of his good character, the Court ought to pay particular attention to such evidence and should find substantial reasons for not believing the evidence before it makes an order. [p. 726, col. 2; p. 727, col. 1.]

Hakim Singh v. Emperor, 31 Ind. Cas. 826; 13 A. L. J. 1055; 16 Cr. L. J. 810, referred to.

The powers given to a Court by section 110 of the Code should be exercised with extreme caution and with very great discretion. [p. 727, col. 1.]

An objection to the joint trial of accused persons ought to be taken at the beginning of the trial, or, at least, at an early stage thereof. Such an objection taken after the witnesses on both sides have been examined and when the case is being argued, cannot be entertained. [p. 724, col. 1.]

Revision from the decision of the District Magistrate, Purnea, dated the 9th June 1923, confirming that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kishenganj, dated the 29th March 1923.

Mr. Muhammad Hasan Jan, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been ordered to execute a bond of Rs. 200 with two sureties of Rs. 100 each to be of good behaviour for a period of one year under section 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Kishenganj. He was tried along with another person named Kalu who was also ordered to execute a similar bond to be of good behaviour for one year. They appealed to the District Magistrate of Purnea who discharged the order as against Kalu but affirmed the order as against the petitioner, Shaikh Amjad. The petitioner has filed the present application in revision against the said order of the learned District Magistrate. The proceedings against the petitioner as well as against Kalu were drawn up under clauses (a), (b), (d) and (f) of section 110, but the prosecution only tried to prove that the accused persons were by habit house-breakers and thieves. The petitioner objected to the joint trial and the learned District Magistrate agrees with the Sub-Divisional Magistrate that the petitioner has not been prejudiced by such joint trial. He says that if the petitioner had really apprehended prejudice, he could have objected to the joint trial at the beginning of the proceedings, but he did not do so. It has been contended by the learned Vakil for the petitioner that it was not possible for him to object to the joint trial at the beginning before the nature of the evidence adduced in Court was known and it was only when the evidence was given in Court for the prosecution that he was in a position to object to the joint trial. There is some force in the argument of the learned Vakil, but, having regard to the circumstances of the case, this ground by itself is not sufficient to set aside the order. The petitioner knew from the proceedings drawn up by the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate what the nature of the case of the prosecution against him was and he ought to have made his objection, if not at the beginning, at least at an early stage of the trial. The objection, as a matter of fact, was taken only after all the witnesses for both sides had been examined, and when the case was being argued by the learned Vakil for the petitioner. I am, therefore, of opinion that this objection on the ground of joint trial is not sufficient to set aside the order.

Turning to the merits of the case, the learned District Magistrate holds that the evidence of general repute produced in the case was not in his opinion particularly strong. On going through the evidence he found that a great many men only began to suspect the accused of being thieves and badmashes after the present proceedings had been started. He, therefore, does not rely upon the evidence of general repute. He observes that "the prosecution in this case stands or falls not so much on proof of general repute of the accused as on proof of specific instances in which they were suspected on reasonable grounds or actually detected in the commission of crimes." He divides the evidence upon which he relies and to which he attaches great weight, under two heads. The first head consists of evidence furnished by records of information given to the Police and written in the form of station diary entries, First Information Reports, etc. The second head consists of the evidence of specific instances in which crimes were committed regarding which no statements recorded by the Police had been filed in Court, but which have been sought to be proved by evidence of witnesses. Under the first head the learned Magistrate observes that there are seven Exhibits, but, as a matter of fact, two duplicate copies of the same documents had been admitted in evidence and, therefore, there were really five documents of the nature described under the first head. Of these five documents, three relate to the present petitioner, namely, Exhibits 1, 4 and 6.

Exhibit 1 is a slip of paper containing a statement made by one Gouri Nath Das regarding a burglary in his house. Gouri Nath did not see the burglars, but suspected Amjad as being one of them, his reason being that Amjad was known to make money by thefts and burglaries. The Magistrate does not apparently rely upon this Exhibit. The witness examined in support of this Exhibit was prosecution witness No. 7, Ghogha Sahu, who referred to a burglary in his house and said that he gave a slip to the Sub-Inspector, prosecution witness No. 92, and the Sub-Inspector produced the slip in Court which is marked Exhibit 1. But this slip, Exhibit 1, is signed by Gouri Nath Das and refers to a burglary in Gouri Nath's house and Gouri Nath was not produced as a witness in this case. The learned Magistrate remarks that it is not clear from the document itself that it has any connection with the case of Ghogha and he observes that the prosecution ought to have explained the matter or to have produced the writer of the slip. This document, Exhibit 1, therefore, is not of any importance in the present case.

The second document against the petitioner is Exhibit 4-a, First Information Report of one Jafar Ali, dated the 1st October 1921, relating to dacoity in his house. Jafar could not recognize the dacoits, but at the end of the First Information Report it is stated that he suspected Amjad and several others because they were men of bad character. Jafar Ali was examined as a witness in this case and he stated that a slip was written out giving the names of the dacoits recognized at the time. This slip is said to have been written by Mabud who is prosecution witness No. 30. The list is alleged to have included the name of Amjad. This list, however, has not been produced and the explanation given for its non-production is that it was taken away from the hand of Jafar by the Chaukidar Chethroo on their way to the Thana. It appears that the Chaukidar Chethroo was prosecuted under section 201, Indian Penal Code, for causing disappearance of this list containing the names of the dacoits, and the finding of the learned Magistrate in that case was that there was no evidence that any dacoity had, as a matter of fact, taken place and the accused Chaukidar was acquitted. Prosecution witness No. 29 was examined as a witness in that case against the Chaukidar and a copy of his deposition in that case is Exhibit B in this case. This witness is the father of Jafar Ali and the list is said to have been written by prosecution witness No. 30 at the dictation of witness No. 29. In that deposition the present witness No. 29 stated that he could not identify any of the dacoits, he merely suspected Amjad. Therefore, the list of the names in that slip contains the names of persons who were suspected and not of those actually seen in the dacoity. In the present case, however, witness No. 29 says that he identified Amjad amongst the dacoits. Having regard to these circumstances, I do not think it safe to attach much importance to this document, Exhibit 4.

The last document is Exhibit 6-a First Information given by Sheikh Dilkhosh regarding a dacoity in his house. This document does not contain the name of Amjad amongst the list of persons given by Dilkhosh as having taken part in the dacoity, but Dilkhosh, who is prosecution witness No. 4 in the present case, stated that Amjad had come to his house the previous day and this gave some ground of suspicion against Amjad. To my mind this evidence is of no value. This disposes of the evidence under the first head.

Turning to the evidence under the second head in which there are no records of statements, but which consists of instances wherein the present petitioner was suspected to have taken part in dacoities of thefts. There is evidence of ten instances in which the present petitioner was so suspected. The first is a dacoity in the house of one Dadni of Baldiaghat. Dadni is prosecution witness No. 10 in this case and he says that he told the Sub-Inspector that he suspected Amjad. Prosecution witness No. 59 has also been examined in connection with this matter. He is a Tahsildar Punch and he states that he was coming from Kharudih on the night of the dacoity. He heard the vioces of some persons in the garden and got smell of cigarette smoking. At that time Amjad was a Dafadar. The witness was coming on a pony and Amjad obstructed his way and asked him who he was. On his answering, the two recognized each other and the witness was allowed to go. While going, he turned round and saw that Amjad entered the garden. It appears that Amjad was a Dafadar of Circle No. 10 of Islampur Thana in the Sub-division of Kishenganj for about two years-and-a-half and the suggestion in the cross-examination of this witness is that Amjad was on his rounds in the usual discharge of his duty; that he was in his uniform and as he saw a man going in the dark near the garden he accosted him. The evidence of this witness is not sufficient for the purpose of coming to a finding that the petitioner is a habitual thief. The second instance consists of a dacoity at the house of Chand Bux. The learned Magistrate remarks that the prosecution witness No. 11, Chand Bux, saw a man like Amjad wearing a red pugri among the dacoits, but this is not what this witness states. What he says is, that there was a dacoity in his house in Chait and certain articles and cash were taken by the dacoits; that he was severely beaten and when he recovered his senses one Torab Ali informed him that a tall man with red pugri was among the dacoits. Now this witness expressly says that he did not see the tall man with the red pugri. He, moreover, says that he did not know the accused persons in the dock and the learned District Magistrate appears to be under a misapprehension when he says that the witness saw a man like Amjad amongst the dacoits. Torab Ali is witness No. 12 in this case and he says that he noticed a man of the stature of Amjad amongst the dacoits, but that he could not say definitely if the accused Amjad was the man whom he saw on the night of the dacoity. The third instance is that of a theft of buffaloes of one Chirag Ali. Chirag Ali is prosecution witness No. 15. The learned District Magistrate observes that Amjad had wanted to take away this man's buffaloes for grazing and he approached him for the purpose. On the same night the witness missed his buffaloes. Prosecution witness No. 16 was sent to search and found the buffaloes with Amjad. Now, turning to the evidence of these two witnesses we find that Chirag Ali has stated that he had asked Amjad to take his buffaloe for grazing, not that Amjad had asked him as put by the learned Magistrate. It may be stated here that Amjad takes leases of lands for grazing purposes and is in the habit of taking charge of cattle of other people on payment of some fees for grazing on those lands. Prosecution witness No. 16 states that he found the buffaloes tied in the Hat and Amjad was standing at some distance and that there was no man near the buffaloes. The fifth instance is that of theft in the house of Sababu, prosecution witness No. 17. This witness did not suspect any one as a suspect before the Police who came to enquire about the theft and the reason assigned is that he was given an assurance by Idar that his property would be restored to him if he did not do so. This man now says that he suspected the two accused. Very little reliance could be placed on the deposition of this witness. Next instance is that of an attempted dacoity at the house of one Sheikh Gaisal, prosecution witness No. 18. The only reason for suspecting Amjad in this attempted dacoity, as stated by this witness, is that Amjad had been to his house just before the occurrence and questioned him about his arrangements. The next instance is that of burglary in the house of one Rasik Lal, prosecution witness No. 27. This man laid an information before the Police, but did not name the petitioner though he says he suspected the petitioner as having taken part in the burglary. The last instance is that of the burning of the houses of Amrit and Labukant two days after these two witnesses had deposed against the petitioner before the Police in the present proceedings. The learned Magistrate remarks that this seems to him to be a clear case of terrorism, and, although there is no direct evidence to connect the present petitioner with this affair, the inference drawn by the learned Magistrate is that it is almost inevitable that one or both of the accused persons in the present case had a part in it.

Now, this is all the evidence in the case referred to by the learned Magistrate as against the present petitioner. The evidence at the most discloses merely a case of suspicion. The evidence is of a very vague nature and the evidence of mere suspicion of a person having taken part in certain criminal offences is not an evidence of general repute within the meaning of section 117, clause (3), Criminal Procedure Code. In the case of Raham Ali v. Emperor (1) Mr. Justice Rafique observes that, "evidence as to cases in which the applicant was suspected cannot be said to fall within the meaning of general repute under section 117 of the Code of Criminal Procedure." These are instances of mere suspicion which, to my mind, are not sufficient in order to bind down a person to be of good behaviour under section 110. The evidence in such a case must be evidence in which the petitioner is proved to have been concerned or some direct evidence to establish the complicity of the petitioner in such cases. The evidence ought to be of such a nature as to lead to a reasonable and definite ground for coming to the conclusion that the petitioner is a habitual thief. Such evidence is wanting in the present case. Moreover, the petitioner has examined no less than 145 witnesses in his favour to testify to his good character. Of these 145 witnesses, 24 witnesses belong to his own village and they all come and bear testimony to the good character of the petitioner. The learned Magistrate does not consider this evidence at all. As was laid down by the Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Hakim Singh v. Emperor (2), where proceedings under section 110 are taken against a person and he is able to produce witnesses on his behalf to speak of his good character, the Court ought to pay particular attention to such evidence. By this it was no doubt not meant that the Court must necessarily believe those witnesses, but the Court should find substantial reasons for not believing the evidence before it makes an order. Powers given by the Code under section 110 should be exercised with extreme caution and with very great discretion. A person must be found upon evidence to have habitually committed or attempted to commit offences before he could be bound to be of goood behaviour. Such evidence is, to my mind, wanting in this case. I have gone through some of the evidence in this case as I was invited to do so by the learned Vakil for the petitioner on the ground that the evidence had been misapprehended by the learned Magistrate and on going through the evidence referred to by the learned Magistrate I am bound to say that, in my opinion, that evidence is not sufficient in order to require the petitioner to furnish security to be of good behaviour. The order passed by the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate must be set aside. If the petitioner has given any security such security will be cancelled.

(2) 31 Ind. Cas. 826; 3 A. L. J. 1055; 16 Cr. L. J. 810.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 494—Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment Act XVIII of 1923), Sch. II, cl. XX—First Class Magistrate—Jurisdiction—Order of discharge after defence, value of.

Under the Code of Criminal Procedure, as modified on the 1st of September 1923, a Magistrate of the First Class has jurisdiction to try an offence under section 494, Penal Code, and dispose of the same without committing the case to the Court of Session, and an order of discharge passed by the Magistrate in such a case, after the accused had been called upon to enter on his defence, is tantamount to an acquittal.

Application against an order of the Sessions Judge, Sitapur, dated the 1st February 1923, upholding that of the Magistrate of the First Class, Kheri, dated the 16th October 1922.

Mr. Ghulam Hasan, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.—No sufficient cause appears for interference. The complainant, Dal Chand, instituted a complaint so far back as 1st July 1922 against a woman whom he called his wife, for a bigamous marriage, and against her father and her present husband and a go-between who brought about the present marriage, for abetment of the offence. The proceedings were held before a Magistrate who was a Hindu gentleman presumably well-acquianted with marriage ceremonies among Brahmans to which caste the parties belong. He recorded the evidence both of the complainant and of the accused and then refused to commit the case to the Court of Session. Under the Code of Criminal Procedure, as modified on the 1st September, the Magistrate himself would have jurisdiction. This is a relevant fact at present in so far that, if the Magistrate be held to have jurisdiction to dispose of the matter, his order of discharge would be tantamount to an acquittal, because he had put the accused to the trouble of entering on their defence. The matter depends upon oral testimony and, as I have pointed out, the Magistrate who heard the evidence was in a good position by the fact of himself being a Hindu to adjudge the value thereof. My attention was called to bond, Exhibit A, alleged to have been executed by the girl's father for a sum of Rs. 98 in consideration of marriage fixed on 23rd June 1922. This bond executed nine days prior to the date fixed for the marriage does not raise a presumption that the marriage did take place on the date stated in the bond. It is quite possible that the girl's father, Ram Lal, was either making a fool of the complainant or broke his promise on discoverning that his daughter was marketable at a higher price. I also think that the Criminal Law affords a quick remedy by creating offences relating to marriage some of them unknown in other countries. I do not think that the Criminal Law is meant to apply to a litigation like the present so long drawn out. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case I refuse to interfere and dismiss this application.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), ss. 13 (b), (f), 14—Jurisdiction of Subordinate Judge to order enquiry—Pleader asking Bench Clerk before judgment is pronounced as to what is the trend of judgment—Professional misconduct.

A Subordinate Judge is quite competent, under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act, to order an enquiry into the facts and circumstances of a case whether it comes under clause (b) or whether it comes under clause (f) of section 13 of the Act. [p. 729, col. 2.]

No Pleader, standing, as he does, in a fiduciary position towards the Court, is entitled either out of motives of curiosity or still less out of other less excusable motives to endeavour to find out before judgment is delivered or when the judgment is written or partly written what in fact is the effect of it. JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an application on behalf of Narendra Nath Roy, a Pleader, practising at Ranchi, asking us to quash proceedings which have been instituted against him by the Subordinate Judge of Ranchi under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act. The facts of the case may be shortly stated. The petitioner was engaged as Pleader for the defendant in a suit for damages. On the 9th May this year the hearing of the case was concluded and judgment was reserved. The case against the petitioner is that on the 14th May, before the judgment was delivered in Court, he went to the Subordinate Judge's Bench Clerk and asked him how far the judgment had proceeded and what the trend of it was and the suggestion is that this was done with an improper motive. On the following day, the 15th May, judgment was pronounced in open Court decreeing the plaintiff's suit. Before the judgment was pronounced, however, it appears that an application was made to the learned Judge by the defendant himself asking for stay of judgment and further proceedings pending an application to the Judicial Commissioner at Ranchi to transfer the whole case from the file of the Subordinate Judge to that of the Judicial Commissioner. The grounds of that application which has been put before us, were entirely trivial and it has been described by Mr. Hasan Imam who appeared on behalf of the present applicant as a perfectly insane application. It may or may not be that the endeavour, if he did endeavour, on the part of the petitioner to ascertain from the Bench Clerk what was likely to be the effect of the judgment was directly connected with the application to remove the case from the file of the Judge to that of the Judicial Commissioner. There is no direct evidence before us nor indeed are we concerned at present with the evidence which may eventually be put forward connecting the action of the petitioner with the application for transfer. The learned Subordinate Judge refused the application for stay and, in my opinion, quite rightly and pronounced judgment on the 15th May. It transpired subsequently, a fact which was not known to the Subordinate Judge at the time, that the application for transfer had already been presented to the Judicial Commissioner on the same morning and had been rejected by him. That, however, is not a material factor in considering this case. The fact that the petitioner had endeavoured to ascertain from the Bench Clerk what was likely to be the effect of the judgment was brought to the notice of the Subordinate Judge a few days later. He then apparently wrote a letter on the 18th or 19th May asking the petitioner for an explanation of his conduct. No reply appears to have been received to that letter until the 24th by which time the Subordinate Judge had drafted an order directing an enquiry into conduct of the petitioner under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act. The order was withheld as on that day the petitioner apparently wrote a letter in reply in which he did not deny that he had asked the Bench Clerk when the judgment would be delivered but he did deny that he had enquired what the purport of it was. This explanation apparently did not satisfy the learned Subordinate Judge who still considered that it was a matter for enquiry. He had, on the one hand, a direct statement by the Bench Clerk that the petitioner had enquired what the purport of the judgment was or what it was likely to be; he had on the other hand a denial by the petitioner. He accordingly framed a charge which was delivered to the petitioner calling upon him to show cause why he should not be dealt with for an offence committe within the meaning of section 13 clauses (b) and (f) of the Legal Practitioners Act.

The present application is one asking us to quash those proceedings. No very precise ground has been urged before us for exercising our powers in this case except that it was suggested that the offence, if it were an offence, was in any case of a very trivial nature and that the petitioner was a young man on the very thresl hold of his career, and even if a judicial enquiry should take place with the result that he should be acquitted that would, nevertheless be a serious deteriment to him in the practice of his profession in the future. It was also argued, although I think under a misconception, that the learned Subordinate Judge in acting under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act was restricted in ordering an enquiry to offences mentioned under clauses (a) and (b) only of section 13 and that he could not order an enquiry in respect of any offence coming under clause (f). In support of that contention he relies upon a dictum of Mr. Justice Hill in the case of In the matter of Purna Chunder Pal (1) the passage in question being at page 10 1. In that case Mr. Justice Hill, relying upon a decision of the Privy Council in In the matter of Southekal Krishna Rao (2), decided in the year 1887, took the view that the Subordinate Court acting under section 14 was only entitled to hold an enquiry in respect of offences coming within clauses (a) and (b) of section 13. That dictum, however, was referred to and explained by Mr. Justice Mukerji in the case of In the matter of Rasik Lal Nag (3), where he pointed out that at the time when the Privy Council decision was given the clauses of section 13 were equivalent to what are now clauses (a) and (b) of that section, but that the section had since been amended and the other clauses (c) (d) (e), and (f) had subsequently been added. That explanation clearly shows that Mr. Justice Hill was acting under a misapprehension and in any event it seems to me that the view he took with regard to the interpretation of the present sections of the Legal Practitioners Act was an extremely narrow view and unjustifiable. I have no doubt, therefore, that the learned Subordinate Judge was quite competent to order an enquiry into the facts and circumstances of the present case whether it came under clause (b) or whether it came under clause (f) of section 13 of the Act. In my opinion, therefore, this application ought to be rejected.

The matter is one clearly for enquiry. It may be or it may not be that the petitioner did in fact ask the Bench Clerk what was the trend of the judgment. If he did so, that was in itself, to my mind, clearly professional misconduct on the part of the Pleader. No Pleader, standing, as he does, in a fiduciary position towards the Court, is entitled either out of motives of curiosity or still less out of less excusable motives to endeavour to find out before judgment is delivered or when the judgment is written or partly written what in fact is the effect of it. It is obvious that such conduct although in some cases it may be innocent enough in other cases may lead to most improper practices and, therefore, it is the class of conduct which clearly ought to be taken notice of and certainly should be stopped. The question is really one of fact whether the Pleader is accurate in saying that he did not make the enquiry which he is alleged to have made or whether the Bench Clerk is telling the truth when he says that the Pleader did in fact endeavour to find out what the trend of the judgment was. In so far as the gravamen of offence is concerned that of course must depend upon what the object was, if in fact the enquiry was made, in making it. If the object was on finding that the judgment was against his client to assist his client in preparing an application for transfer, then I think the offence must be considered a grave one. If, on the other hand, assuming that the offence was committed out of pure curiosity in order to ascertain what he was not entitled to know until judgment was delivered then the offence was clearly not of such a grave character, but in either case these attempts to endeavour to find out what until it is disclosed ought to be kept secret are matters which the Court cannot but look upon as professional misconduct. We are not in a position to judge one way or the other in the present case as to the facts or as to the conduct of the petitioner or as to the gravamen of the offence if in fact it was committed. At the same time, I think this is a case in which we ought not at this stage to stay the proceedings. In these circumstances, it seems to me that this application must be dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 522—Criminal trespass, conviction for—Criminal force, use of, absence of—Restoration of possession, order for, whether can be made.

Petitioners were convicted of an offence under section 447 of the Penal Code by reason of their having continued to cultivate certain fields in spite of their ejectment. There was nothing to indicate that the offence was attended by the use of criminal force;

Held*, that an order under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code directing the restoration of possession of the fields to the complainant, could not, in the absence of a finding as to the use of criminal force, be made in the case. [p. 731, col. 2.]

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Aligarh, dated the 21st February 1923.

REFERRING ORDER.—This is an application for revision in connection with an order passed by the Honorary Magistrate of Sasni under section 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The facts are as follows:—A complaint was filed against the applicants, Chuni Lal and Indra, as well as two others, under sections 447 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code. It was alleged that the two applicants had been lawfully ejected from certain fields, but that, in spite of the ejectment, they still continue to cultivate the fields and when the complainant remonstrated with them, they ordered the other two accused to give him a beating. On October the 18th 1922 the two applicants were convicted under section 447 and fined Rs. 5. each. But the Honorary Magistrate disbelieved the story of any beating, and held that only an altercation had taken place. There was, therefore, no conviction under section 323, and the other two accused were acquitted.

On October the 24th the complainant filed an application before the Court under section 522, and on December the 14th 1922 the Honorary Magistrate allowed this application and passed orders directing delivery of possession of the fields to the complainant.

I have heard and considered the arguments of both parties in this matter. It has been pointed out that the action of the two applicants in stil retaining possession of the fields, in spite of their conviction under section 447, amounts to a species of contempt of Court. It has been suggested that the two applicants being admittedly rank trespassers, are entitled to no consideration at the hands of the Court. They did not even appeal against their conviction under section 447. I have also been asked to consider what is likely to happen if possession is restored to the two applicants, the suggestion being that a riot is likely to take place over the crops standing in the fields. It seems to me, however, that if any violence is likely to be used at all, it is just as likely to be used if possession is not restored to the applicants, as it seems clear from the arguments before me, that the standing crops must have been sown by the applicants themselves. The applicants urge that these crops are worth Rs. 400, though this is no doubt a considerable exaggeration.

I do not think, however, that I am at present concerned with any of the above matters. The question is, whether or not the order passed by the Honorary Magistrate was a legal one. There are many rulings to the effect that an essential ingredient of section 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that the offence of which the person concerned is convicted must have been attended by criminal force, or, at the very least by the show of criminal force. An almost parallel case is to be found in fact in Churaman v. Ram Lal (1). It is impossible to go behind the finding of the Honorary Magistrate himself to the effect that no offence under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code was committed, and that an altercation was all that took place. In the circumstances, I am of opinion that section 522 did not apply, and that the order passed was, therefore, an illegal one. Two remedies were open to the complainant he could either have filed another complaint under section 447 against the applicants, or else he could have sued for their ejectment in the Civil Courts. What was not open to him was to apply for delivery of possession under section 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure this case will accordingly be reported for the orders of the Hon'ble High Court, with the recommendation that the order passed by the Honorary Magistrate unde section 522 should be set aside, and that possession should be ordered to be restored to the two applicants.

(1) 25 A. 341; A. W. N. (1903) 59.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The learned District Magistrate finds that the applicants, Churni Lal and Indra, were convicted of an offence under section 447 of the Indian Penal Code by reason of their having continued to cultivate certain fields in spite of their ejectment and that there was nothing to indicate that the offence of criminal trespass was attended by the use of the criminal force. Section 522, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot, on these facts, apply and the order of the learned Honorary Magistrate directing the delivery of possession of the fields in question with the crops standing thereon to the complainant cannot be sustained. The Reference is, therefore, accepted and the order of the Honorary Magistrate passed under section 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is set aside. It is open to the complainant to seek any other remedy open to him in the manner provided by law. Let the record be returned.

should be a clear finding as to the common object of the unlawful assembly; and also that the common object so found should have been clearly stated in the charge so that the accused person might have an opportunity of meeting it.

Petition for revision, under sections 435, 439, of the Criminal Procedure Code, of an order of the Sessions Judge, Gujranwala Division, dated the 11th January 1923, dismissing the appeal and confirming an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Gujrat, dated the 2nd December 1922.

Mr. Abdul Latif, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—Criminal Revisions Nos. 256 and 672 of 1923 arise out of the same case and both will be disposed of by this judgment. The petitioners, fifteen in number, have been convicted under sections 147 and 353 coupled with section 149, Indian Penal Code, of rioting and assault on a public servant, i. e., a bailiff. It appears that Allah Dad, Lambardar, petitioner, was the sapurdar of the attached property of a judgment-debtor, but failed to deliver it when called upon to do so. The Executing Court, therefore, issued a warrant of attachment of his moveable property and with this warrant the bailiff along with some seven men went to his residence and there attached his cattle. As he was proceeding to remove the cattle a number of men appeared on the scene and rescued the same.

The bailiff was not hurt but his companions received slight injuries.

One of the grounds of appeal was that the warrant of attachment was illegal; but this is not touched by the learned Sessions Judge who throughout his judgment speaks of Allah Dad as judgment-debtor. It is clear that the Court executing the decree was not competent to issue a warrant for the attachment of the property of the sapurdar. A sapurdar is not a Receiver appointed by Court and, therefore, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to a Receiver appointed by Court do not apply to a sapurdar to whom attached cattle or other articles are made over by the bailiff. Therefore, the warrant was illegal and the sapurdar and his partisans were competent to resist the removal of his cattle from his house and were not guilty of any offence if in the exercise of that right they inflicted slight injuries to the companions of the bailiff. Where a warrant issued under section 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code was illegal, it was held that the accused, eight in number, who used criminal force upon the Sub-Inspector of Police and his companions to prevent them from executing it, were justified in doing what they did in the exercise of the right of private defence. [Basu Haldar v. Emperor (1)] In the present case it appears that some trouble was apprehended and, therefore, the bailiff took a number of men with him in order to overcome resistence. But the petitioners do not seem to have exceeded their right of private defence and as they did not cause hurt to the bailiff or use criminal force to him it cannot be said that they were guilty of the offence defined in section 353, Indian Penal Code.

Another point that may be noticed here is that the particulars of the offence under section 147, Indian Penal Code were not stated in the charge framed against the accused. The charge runs as below:—

"That you * * * assaulted and snatched the attached cattle of Allah Dad from the bailiff Allah Jawaya and thereby committed an offence punishable under sections 353 and 147, 149, Indian Penal Code."

In Sabir v. Queen-Empress (2), it was held that, "before a conviction can properly be maintained for the offence of rioting, it is necessary that there should be a clear finding as to the common object of the unlawful assembly, and also that the common object so found should have been stated in the charge in order that the accused person might have an opportunity of meeting it."

Having regard to all that is stated above, the convictions cannot be upheld. Therefore, I accept the petitions and acquit the petitioners and discharge them from their bail bonds.

Where the evidence against an accused person in connection with a dacoity is considered by the Police to be of so little value as to result in his release under section 169 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, without even being placed before the Court, it is contrary to all accepted principles to make use of this evidence as a ground for binding the accused over on a charge under section 110. Nor is it open to a Magistrate to act upon information not given in evidence but obtained from a perusal of the Special Diary.

Criminal revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Budaun, dated the 21st March 1923.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by Jhandu Singh who has been bound over under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment on the failure to give security. An appeal was filed to the District Magistrate who in a very brief judgment dismissed the appeal. The learned District Magistrate says that he has read the evidence that the Magistrate has written a fair and convincing judgment and that he fails to see how the Trying Magistrate could have come to any other conclusion with regard to the guilt of the appellant. I regret to say that the judgment of the Trying Magistrate produces an entirely opposite impression on me from that which it has produced on the learned District Magistrate. The applicant was admittedly at enmity with the Mukhia Nawab Singh and was a witness for the prosecution in a case in which the Mukhia was accused of murder. The applicant was tried with eight other persons as forming one gang. The Magistrate expressly finds that the evidence that they did form one gang is unworthy of credit. He had also acquitted several of the accused on the ground that they were implicated through enmity. His chief reason for convicting the applicant is that he believes that certain evidence goes to show that the applicant took part in a dacoity which was committed in December 1922 shortly after the murder case. Now, the applicant was actually arrested in connection with the dacoity in question, but the Police considered the evidence against him of so little value that he was released under section 169 of the Criminal Procedure Code without even being placed before the Court. It is contrary to all accepted principles to make use of this evidence as a ground for binding the accused over on a charge of being a bad character. If the evidence was insufficient to implicate the accused in the offence to which it relates it was equally insufficient to be used for influencing the Court against him on a question of his general character. It was equally not open to the Magistrate to act on information not given in evidence but obtained from a perusal of the Special Diary. Although the Magistrate says at the conclusion of his judgment that there is some evidence against the accused and the other persons who have been convicted of cutting crops. It is clear from the judgment that the main grounds on which he has convicted the accused are the evidence tendered to show that he took part in the dacoity case and a perusal of the special diary. The order of the Court below cannot, therefore, be upheld. I allow the application and setting aside the order passed against the accused direct his immediate release.

SHEO RAM AND OTHERS—CONVICTS—APPELLANTS

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Evidence—Accused a Brahmin whether sufficient to reject evidence otherwise reliable.

SHEO RAM v. EMPEROR.

The mere fact that an accused person is a Brahmin is not a sufficient reason for rejecting the evidence of witnesses who testify against him, and who are prima facie reliable. [p. 735, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Hissar, dated the 14th July 1922.

Messrs. M. L. Puri and N. C. Pandit, for the Appellants.

Mr. F. M. Mackay, for the Government Advocate for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by seven persons who have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Hissar of causing grievous hurt to Musammat Bhagi and hurt to Norang by beating them on the night intervening between the 25-26th of January 1922. The accused were sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment under section 325 and a fine of Rs. 25 each under section 323, Indian Penal Code. Two other persons Rilia and Shoram, son of Hanso, were also tried but were acquitted by the Court below. It is common ground that there was intimacy between Norang Jat (P. W. No. 3) and Musammat Bhagi who was a widow. The appellants and Shoram who was acquitted, are nearly related to Musammat Bhagi's deceased husband, Moman being alleged to be the nearest reversioner. Appellants Nos. 1 to 4 are brothers and appellants Nos. 5 and 6 are also brothers.

The theory for the prosecution is that, on the night of the occurrence, Norang and Musammat Bhagi were sleeping together in the latter's Nohra when the appellants came and demanded admittance and being refused broke open the door and administered a severe beating first to Musammat Bhagi and then to Norang. An alarm was raised and P. Ws. Nos. 4 to 7 came up and rescued Norang from his assailants. They found Musammat Bhagi lying on her bed crying and she said that she had been beaten by the Brahmins. Nothing occurred on the 26th of January but on the 27th the dead body of Musammat Bhagi was found in a well 200 yards distant from the village. The Lambardar sent Shankar, one of the appellants, to the Thana to make a report. In this he referred to the intimacy between Musammat Bhagi and Norang and said that on the night of the occurrence Norang was seen at her house and that he (Shankar) had abused Norang and that the next day the women of the Muhalla had abused Musammat Bhagi. He went on to say that on the 27th of January Musammat Bhagi had been found in the well, into which she herself had jumped in order to commit suicide owing to the disgrace brought upon her by her having been found with Norang.

The theory for the prosecution is, that Musammat Bhagi was killed by the appellants who had beaten her on the night between the 25th-26th of January and that some of them subsequently came and threw her body into the well. The medical evidence shows that the deceased woman received very serious injuries which will be found detailed on page 19 of the printed record. The injuries include extensive fracture of the skull, bruising of the chest, fracture of the left leg, dislocation of the right knee, laceration of the liver and effusion of blood in the kidneys. The Civil Surgeon was of opinion that all the injuries, with the exception ofthe fracture of the leg and the dislocation of the right knee joint, were caused before death. There are several difficulties in the way of the prosecution theory. The evidence of the eye-witnesses shows that they all apparently considered that an ordinary beating had been given to Musammat Bhagi and Norang. This is clear from the fact that on the 26th of January no report was made to the Police either by Norang or by Sarasti, Lambardar (P. W. No. 5). The witnesses say that she was speaking when they went into the house. According to the Doctor she could not have spoken after receiving the injuries to her head and, therefore, it is clear that at that time she had not received the injuries. When the witnesses arrived, her assailants had left her and were holding Norang, round whose neck they had placed a rope. They had apparently finished with Musammat Bhagi. The witnesses say that when they rescued Norang they left the appellants at Musammat Bhagi's house and Mr. Mackay, who argued the case for the Crown, propounded the theory that after Norang had been rescued, the appellants inflicted a fresh beating upon

SHEO RAM v. EMPEROR.

Musammat Bhagi and then caused her death. This theory does not appear to have been put forward in the Court below and in our opinion it is not a plausible one. The appellants had, as already stated by us, finished beating Musammat Bhagi when the witnesses arrived, and there was no reason why they should again beat her, and give her such a severe beating as to cause her death. It is unlikely that they would have done this, seeing that a number of people had recognised them in the house of Musammat Bhagi. Moreover, she had a little daughter, aged six or seven years, living with her and there is no evidence on the record to show what this child was doing on the 26th of January. If her mother had been killed on the previous night she would surely have raised the alarm on the 26th and the whole village would have become aware that Musammat Bhagi had been killed.

There is, moreover, reliable evidence, including that of the two Lambardars (D. Ws. Nos. 29 and 30), to the effect that Musammat Bhagi was seen by them alive and well on the 26th of January, Prima facie these Lambardars are reliable witnesses, and the only ground which the lower Court has given for disbelieving them is that appellants are Brahmins and that the deceased is a woman and that the witnesses do not condsider the death of a mere woman of any importance compared with the lives of some Brahmins who are accused of her murder. In our opinion, the mere fact that the appellants are Brahmins is not a sufficient reason for rejecting the evidence of witnesses who are primi facie reliable. There is also evidence, including that of these Lambardars and two others (D. Ws. Nos. 31 and 32), that when the body was being got out of the well the first time, the rope broke and the body fell down into the water again. According to the evidence the well is a very deep one, the water being 85 haths or say, 120 to 130 feet below the surface of the ground. It is made of two concentric cylinders of brick, the diameter of the lower one being about a foot or 18 inches less than that of the upper one. There was thus a ledge of masonry sticking out all round about ¾ths of the way down. If the woman had jumped into the well she might very easily have struck this ledges and received injuries to her head and also the rupture of her liver and other injuries to the body. The post mortem injuries to the leg and right knee might similarly have been caused when the rope broke as the body was being taken out of the water. In fact, the theory for the prosecution is that those injuries were caused when the dead body was thrown into the well after the murder.

Another point to be noticed is that the body had ordinary clothes on it and all its ornaments when it was taken out of the water. It hardly seems likely that if the woman had been murdered and her dead body had been thrown into the well by the murderers, they would left all the ornaments on it.

Having regard to all the above facts and considerations we are of opinion that it cannot be considered proved that she died as the result of a beating administered to her by the appellants on the night between the 25th-26th of January. In our opinion it is clearly proved that the appellants, perhaps accompanied by others, broke into Musammat Bhagi's house and gave her and Norang a severe beating, but that it is not proved that they caused her grievous hurt on that occasion. It is possible that some of the appellants or other persons may have beaten her to death on the following night and then thrown her body into the well, or the theory of the defence may be the correct one that she threw herself into the well in order to escape from the disgrace on account of her having been found at night in company with Norang. It is, however, unnecessary for us to decide the point. It is sufficient to say that we consider that the only offence proved against the appellants is that they voluntrily caused hurt to Musammat Bhagi and Norang by beating them on the night between the 25th and 26th of January. No doubt, they committed house trespass or even house-breaking because they broke into her house in order to give her a beating, but they were not tried for house breaking and, therefore, we think they might be prejudiced if they were convicted of that offence.

SHER BAHADUR SINGH v. FAZAL ALI.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and, setting aside the convictions and sentences under section 325, Indian Penal Code, convict the appellants instead, of voluntarily causing hurt to Musammat Bhagi under section 323, Indian Penal Code, and for that offence we sentence them each to one year's rigorous imprisonment. The convictions and sentences under section 323, Indian Penal Code for causing hurt to Norang will stand.

The Judge in Chambers before whom this appeal came directed that notice should issue to the appellants to show cause why they should not be convicted under section 302, Indian Penal Code, and why their sentences should not be enhanced. If we had concurred with the learned Sessions Judge that Musammat Bhagi was beaten to death on the night of the occurrence, we should have felt bound to alter the convictions into one under sections 304/149, Indian Penal Code, and to very materially enhance the sentences.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Dispute over property—Preliminary order—Omission to mention source of information—Jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of a Magistrate to take proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is not ousted by his merely omitting to mention in the preliminary order the source of information upon which he was satisfied that a dispute existed concerning certain property and was likely to cause a breach of the peace.

Application against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, First Class, in charge of Malihabad Tahsil, Lucknow, dated the 30th June 1923.

Messrs. Ram Prasad and Bhawani Shankar, for the Applicant.

Mr. Abdul Raut, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from an order purporting to have been passed under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Under section 435 (3) no revision lies to this Court unless the Magistrate has acted without jurisdiction. In the present case the applicant himself applied to the Magistrate who passed an order on the 9th June 1923 under clause (1) of section 145 requiring the parties concerned in the dispute about a grove to attend his Court and to put in written statements of their respective claims as respects the facts of actual possession of the subject-matter in dispute. The parties appeared and put in their statements and on 30th June the Magistrate passed an order in favour of the opposite party declaring him to be entitled to possession of the grove. Two omissions in bar of the Magistrate's jurisdiction were pointed out by the learned Counsel for the applicant, (1) that in the preliminary order of 9th June the Magistrate had not stated the grounds of his being satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed concerning a grove, (2) that on the 30th June the Magistrate failed to examine the witnesses produced by the applicant.

As regards the first point, it is true that Mr. Hopkinson did not refer to the report he had received from another Magistrate, Mr. Jardine, but from a slip on the record of even date it is obvious that the ground for Mr. Hopkinson's belief was the information sent to him by Mr. Jardine after making personal enquiries. The mere omission of the mention of the source of the information when in fact the Court is assured of the existence of such a source cannot oust the Magistrate's jurisdiction. As regards the second point the learned Counsel for the opposite side does not admit that the applicant's witnesses were present or were offered for examination on the 30th June. It appears that witnesses were summoned but there is no note that any were present or offered for examination. There is no affidavit presented by the applicant to this Court in the matter. Under the circumstances the second alleged omission is not proved.

This Court has, therefore, no jurisdiction to interfere and this application is dismissed.

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), ss. 84, 86—Tax levied illegally—Suit to recover amount paid, whether maintainable—Civil Courts, jurisdiction of.

The special procedure enacted in sections 84 and 86 of the Punjab Municipal Act relates only to appeals against the assessment or levy of a tax under the Act and does not provide a remedy for an act which might be done in violation of the provisions of the Act. [p. 738, col. 2.]

Section 86 of the Punjab Municipal Act does not oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to relieve one subject of the Crown against an illegality imposed upon him by any other subject. [p. 739, col. 1.]

G. I. P. Railway Co. v. Amraoti Municipality, 16 Ind. Cas. 449; 8 N. L. R. 107, relied on.

A Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit to recover the amount of a tax illegally levied by a Municipality on the plaintiff, and failure on the part of the plaintiff to take action under section 84 of the Punjab Municipal Act does not bar the suit. [p. 738, col. 2.]

Petition for revision of the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jhelum, dated the 3rd January 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Pind Dadan Khan, District Jhelum, dated the 23rd June 1919.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Bhagwan Singh, son of Ganda Singh, is a tenant of three shops situate in Gur Bazar Mandi, within the Municipality of the town of Pind Dadan Khan. The Municipal Committee levied a tax called teh bazari from him and recovered Rs. 72, which was paid by Bhagwan Singh under protest. This tax was levied on the ground that Bhagwan Singh had been using a plot of land measuring 10 ft. by 40 ft. in front of the shops of which he was the tenant, which land belonged to the Municipal Committee and had been occupied without its permission. Having paid the tax Bhagwan Singh instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif against the Municipal Committee for recovery of the sum, so paid with Rs. 3 interest, on the ground that he was not liable to pay the said tax, the Committee not being the owner of the land. The Trial Court dismissed the suit, but on appeal by him the Senior Subordinate Judge, holding that the Committee had failed to prove its ownership of the land occupied by the appellant and that the Municipality had acted arbitrarily and without justification in recovering the amount, decreed the plaintiff's suit. Against this decree the Municipal Committee has preferred a second appeal to this Court through Mr. Tek Chand.

On behalf of Bhagwan Singh Mr. Nanak Chand raised a preliminary objection to the effect that no second appeal lay, the suit being of the nature of a small cause. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, who has appeared on behalf of the appellant, admitted the soundness of this objection, but urged that the appeal should be treated as a revision and I have heard him on that basis, no second appeal being competent.

It has been contended that the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to try the case, firstly, because section 84 of the Punjab Municipal Act, 1911, lays down the procedure to be adopted when a person wishes to contest the levy of any tax, and my attention was drawn to Municipal Committee, Ambala v. Mohender Singh (1), where it was held that when a special Act, such as the Municipal Act, provides a certain remedy by appeal against the acts of the Committee the failure to comply with that special procedure would bar a suit in the Civil Courts. Secondly, it was contended that section 86 of the Act ousted the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to adjudicate upon any objection regarding the liability of any person to be assessed and provided that "no refund of any tax shall be claimable by any person otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri contended that in this respect the language used in the Municipal Act was far more extensive than that used in the Municipal Acts in other Provinces, and my attention was drawn to Kamayya v. Leman (2) and Municipal Council, Nellore v. Rangayya (3). In the former case the suit had been brought for recovery of the amount of a professional tax levied by the Municipality on the plaintiff. On behalf of the Commissioners an objection was taken to the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to deal with the question of the liability to taxation of the plaintiff and that objection was sustained by the High Court. In Municipal Council, Nellore v. Rangayya (3), the plaintiff sued to recover certain moneys paid by him to the Municipal Council, Nellore, on the ground that he had paid a tax to which he had been improperly assessed. The High Court held that, section 262 of the Municipal Act being applicable, the suit was not maintainable.

At the same time, in Municipal Council of Tuticorin v. South Indian Ry., Company (4), the Municipality at Tuticorin called on the South Indian Railway Company to pay a professional tax which the Company had already paid to the Municipality at Negapatam. The Company paid the amount under protest and sued the Municipality for a refund. The High Court held that the suit was maintainable and granted the Company a decree.

Mr. Nanak Chand for the respondent first contended that this Court should not interfere in revision, inasmuch as there had been a decision on the question of jurisdiction, which, even if decided wrongly, should be regarded as final, having regard to the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (5). He further contended that section 86 of the Municipal Act, 1911, did not deprive persons of their ordinary remedies under Common Law and referred to a case reported as Committee of Notified Area, Una v. Chatar Behari Narain (6), in which Scott-Smith, J., held that the power conferred by a special Act on a local authority to impose a particular tax for particular purposes in a specified manner did not oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to give relief against an illegality committed by that body under cover of statutory powers. He also held that a Civil Court had jurisdiction to determine the question whether the imposition of a tax was illegal and ultra vires and to give relief if a tax had been levied from a person who was not liable to pay the same.

In G. I. P. Ry. Company v. Amraoti Municipality (7), the G. I. P. Ry. Company instituted a suit against the Municipality of Amraoti seeking to recover a sum of Rs. 500 which they alleged had been illegally levied from them by the Committee and paid by the Company under protest. The Company also asked for an injunction restraining the defendant from recovering, or attempting to recover, any such tax in future. Inter alia, the Committee pleaded that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and this particular question came up before the Additional Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur. The Berar Municipal Law contains provisions similar to those to be found in the Punjab Municipal Act. Section 51 provided for an appeal against the assessment or levy of a tax under the Berar Municipal Law, i.e., provided a procedure similar to that laid down in section 84 of the Punjab Municipal Act. Section 53 of the Berar Municipal Law contained a provision similar to that to be found in section 86 of the Punjab Municipal Act. It was held that the special procedure laid down by the Berar Municipal Law related only to appeals against the assessment or levy of a tax under the law and did not provide a remedy which might be done in violation of that law. It was also held that section 53 of the Berar Municipal

(2) 2 M. 37; 3 Ind. Jur. 22; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 297.
(3) 19 M. 10; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 711.
(4) 13 M. 78; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 765.
(5) 11 C. 6; 11 I. A. 237; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 559; Rafique & Jackson's P. C. No. 83; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 760 (P. C.).
(7) 16 Ind. Cas. 449; 8 N. L. R. 107.

Law did not oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to relieve one subject of the Crown against an illegality imposed upon him by any other subject. Section 53 of the Berar Municipal Law is almost word for word the same as section 86 of the Punjab Municipal Act.

On the finding in the present case, that the Municipal Committee is not the owner of the site in front of the shops tenanted by Bhagwan Singh, the said Bhagwan Singh was not liable to be taxed as he has been. The action of the Municipal Committee in levying the tax from him, therefore, gave him a cause of action in a Civil Court.

Following G. I. P. Ry. Company v. Amraoti Municipality (7) and Committee of Notified Area, Una v. Chatar Behari Narain (6), I hold that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to try this case and that the failure on the part of Bhagwan Singh to take action under section 84 of the Act is no bar to the suit, inasmuch as the tax was levied illegally.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri further contended that the decision of the Court below was bad on other grounds. I am, however, unable to see any ground for revision and I accordingly dismiss this petition with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 153, O. I, r. 10—Appeal filed against deceased respondent—Procedure—Application to amend cause title by substituting names of legal representatives of deceased, maintainability of.

Where an appeal is filed by mistake against a respondent who had died prior to the presentation of the appeal, the proper procedure to adopt is to file another appeal and to have the delay, due to the mistake committed in good faith, excused.

An application to amend the cause title of the memorandum of appeal by susbstituting for the name of the deceased respondent, the names of his legal representative is unsustainable and does not lie. Neither O. I, r. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code nor section 153 of the Code is applicable to such a case.

No such proceeding as an appeal against a party who is dead is authorised by the Code of Civil Procedure.

Mr. C. Sambasiwa Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. B Jagannadha Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are applications to the Court to amend the cause title in a second appeal and to excuse the delay in seeking that relief. It will, of course, be unnecessary to consider the second application, unless the first succeeds. The circumstances in which the amendment is asked for are that the respondent, whose name is entered in the appeal as presented died before the presentation. We are now asked to substitute for his name those of the legal representatives. In the objection to this that an appeal cannot be presented against a person who has ceased to exist O. I, r. 10 is relied on, but we do not see our way to apply it here, since it refers to suits instituted in the name of a wrong person, and we do not think that it is applicable to a case, such as the present. The power conferred by section 153 is general, but again we do not think we ought to use it, while another course is open to the petitioner, that course being to file another appeal and to have the delay due to his mistake committed in good faith excuse

Taking this view, we must dismiss these applications and also the second appeal on the ground that no such proceeding as an appeal against a party, who is deceased, is authorised by the Code. There will be no costs in second appeal but the petitioner will pay the respondent's costs in the petitions.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Chuhru died in 1892-93 leaving him surviving a widow, Musammat Matti, who inherited 47 kanals of land from her husband. On the 17th July 1917 Musammat Matti acquired by pre-emption 144 kanals 12 marlas of land, and on the 9th of November 1917 she mortgaged her entire holding to Palu and three other persons for Rs. 350. Mutation of this mortgage was sanctioned on the 27th February 1918.

On the 22nd May 1920 Musammat Matti died and on the 9th of August 1920 Palu and the other mortgagees applied for and obtained mutation, of the land mortgaged to them, as owners on the strength of a document described as a 'Will' claiming to have acquired the ownership of the land mortgaged to them on payment of Rs. 600. This mutation was sanctioned on the 7th January 1921. On the 12th February 1921 Rasilu and others sued Palu and the other mortgagees-vendees for possession of the land on the ground that the said land was ancestral and that the sale and mortgage set up by Palu and his companions were without consideration and necessity. In the plaint the mortgage of the 9th November 1920 was referred to and it was pleaded that the defendants having been called upon to surrender possession, had set up a sale in their favour by Musammat Matti, which it was said the plaintiffs knew nothing about, but that, in any event, there had been no necessity for the alienation. The defendants definitely and clearly pleaded that on the 16th May 1920 Musammat Matti had sold the property in suit to them under an oral sale for Rs. 600, the consideration being Rs. 350 on account of the previous mortgage and Rs. 150 already taken by the lady and Rs. 100 left with the vendees for the cremation of the vendor if she died and to be paid to her if she survived the illness from which she was on that day suffering. The learned Vakil for the defendants also made a statement, prior to the settlement of issues, and there clearly stated that Musammat Matti had, for consideration and necessity, sold the land in suit to the defendants for Rs. 600 under an oral sale and had subsequently executed a "Will." Various other pleas were raised challenging the locus standi of the plaintiffs and disputing the ancestral nature of the property. The Trial Court held that the plaintiffs were collaterals of Chuhra in the 5th degree and the land qua them was not ancestral; that the vendees were in possession of the land, and that certain daughters of Musammat Matti were not the daughters of Chuhra. The plaintiffs' suit was dismissed.

They thereupon preferred an appeal to the District Court and the learned District Judge found that out of the land sold 47 kanals were ancestral and the remaining 144 kanals were the self-acquired property of Musammat Matti. It appears that there is no evidence whatever of the alleged oral sale with the exception of the document referred to by the defendants' Counsel in the Court below, dated 16th May 1920. This document was regarded and relied on by the learned District Judge as evidencing no more than an intention on the part of the widow to sell the land but he held that no sale had been completed and the defendant had failed to prove the sale set up by them. The plaintiffs were accordingly granted a decree for possession of the ancestral land, i.e., 47 kanals, without any payment, and a decree for the possession of the remaining 144 kanals on payment of Rs. 350 the amount due under the mortgage, dated 9th November 1920, which it was held the plaintiffs could not challenge.

Against this decree the defendants have come up to this Court through Mr. Mehr Chand and I have heard Mr. Sheo Narain for the respondents. So far as the ancestral land is concerned, i.e., 47 kanals, Mr. Mehr Chand has given up the appeal. The property being ancestral and the plaintiffs being reversioners of the last male-owner they were entitled to challenge the alienation that affects their reversionary rights and it has been found that there was no necessity for any alienation of the land.

Qua the remaining land, however, it has been strongly urged that the land being the self-acquired property of Musammat Matti was capable of being alienated by her without any interference on the part of the plaintiffs. It was urged that the construction placed by the learned District Judge on the document of 16th May 1920 was erroneous and that that document evidenced an oral sale which had already been completed, and that inasmuch as the defendants-appellants had, subsequent to the death of their vendor, obtained possession of the land in suit, the plaintiffs had no right to any decree. It was also contended that, in any event, the plaintiffs could not have been granted what practically amounted to a decree for redemption of the mortgage in the present suit. Qua the document, in the alternative it was argued that if the construction of the Court below was correct this document amounted to an agreement of sale, that Musammat Matti having full power to sell, her heirs, whoever they might be, were bound by her contract and that, therefore, the appellants could enforce specific performance of the same, and if they could do this, they could contest the present suit on that ground. I may say at once that a reference to the document in question in my opinion shows that the construction placed thereon by the learned District Judge cannot be said to be entirely erroneous. It is true that it recites that the property had been sold and that possession thereof had been given. The recital as to possession is, however, not of much importance inasmuch as the defendants were already in possession as mortgagees. Further, the reference to the expenditure of Rs. 100 on her funeral ceremonies or the payment of that amount to her if she survived, and her subsequent undertaking to execute a duly registered deed may, in my opinion, be regarded as an intention on her part to sell, but it cannot be definitely said that this document affords sufficient proof that she had already completed the sale.

As to the alternative argument that the agreement being one to sell the appellants could defend their title on that ground, reference was made to Laxman Madhavrao Jahagirdar v. Bhagvansingh Narsingbhau Navalurkar (1). The facts of that case are, however, somewhat dissimilar. There the owner of a certain property entered into an agreement with the defendant for sale of the property and received a part of the consideration as earnest-money. Before the sale-deed could be executed he died and his widow, who was then a minor, completed the transaction and put the defendants in possession of the property receiving the balance of the consideration money. Subsequent to this, she adopted a certain person, who sued for recovery of possession of the property contending that the sale was invalid and the widow was a minor when she executed it. It was held that the widow was entitled to carry out the agreement entered into by her husband and that the defendant by reason of his having obtained possession under the sale could successfully resist the plaintiffs' suit to eject him. However, as urged by Mr. Sheo Narain, this defence was never pleaded in the Court below, the appellants relying on a completed sale in their favour. Mr. Mehr Chand has practically asked me in second appeal to allow him to amend his pleas so as to bring in this defence as an alternative. He is, however, unable to show me any authority which would justify my doing so at this late stage. The appellants based their defence on a definite plea that they were holding under a completed sale, and it was that plea that was put in issue and has been decided against them. It has been repeatedly pointed out that pleadings must be strictly construed, and that parties must be restricted to what they allege in their plaint or in their written statements, as the case may be, and I am, therefore, unable to see my way to allow such an amendment is the defendants-appellants' pleas at this late stage of the case.

The next point for consideration is, whether the learned District Judge was right in decreeing the plaintiffs' suit for possession on payment of Rs. 350 on the ground that the plaintiffs as the heirs of the deceased Musammat Matti were entitled to redeem the mortgage. My attention has been drawn by Mr. Sheo Narain to Parshotam Bhaishankar v. Rumal Zunjar (2) where it was held that a Court can in its discretion pass a decree for redemption in a case in which the plaintiffs have sued in ejectment. The plaintiffs came into Court alleging that they were entitled to possession on the ground that the alienation was made by a widow without necessity. Cases of this nature are common and decrees constantly have been given for possession on payment of money which has been found to have been a charge on the property as being for necessity. It is admitted that the only charge on the property is Rs. 350 and it seems to me that it would tend to reduce litigation if in a case, such as the present one, a decree, such as has been passed by the learned District Judge, was allowed. As laid down in Parshotam Bhaishankar v. Rumal Zunjar (2), the Court has discretion to pass such a decree. I see no reason to interfere with the discretion exercised by the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 10—Assignment of interest pending suit—Records sent to High Court in interlocutory matter—Application for substitution—Court, proper.

Where in the case of an interlocutory appeal the High Court sends for the records of a pending suit for the purpose of dealing with that particular matter, for all other applications the suit continues pending in the Trial Court, and that Court has jurisdiction to entertain an application under O. XXII, r. 10, of the Civil Procedure Code, for substitution of an assignee from a plaintiff in his place, and a refusal to entertain such an application amounts to a failure to exercise jurisdiction.

Application against an order passed by the District Judge, Surat, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 26 of 1920, confirming an order passed by the Subordinate Judge at Surat, in Civil Suit No. 238 of 1917.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Applicant.
Mr. M. B. Dave, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—We think the initial error was made by the Trial Court when the present applicant applied to be put on the record in the place of Sorabji who was dead. At that time there was an appeal against an interlocutory order pending in the High Court. The learned Trial Judge thought that on account of that appeal its functions were entirely suspended. Even if, in the case of an interlocutory appeal, the High Court sends for the record for the purpose of dealing with that particular matter, for all other applications the suit is pending in the Trial Court. Therefore, the Trial Court had jurisdiction to entertain the application, since on the death of a party it is necessary to place his representatives on the record. It seems to me, therefore, that once we find that the Trial Court failed to exercise its jurisdiction and that error is at the root of all later proceedings, it is really not necessary to consider why the applicant has been still unsuccessful in getting his name on the record in the place of the deceased Sorabji. There has been a failure to exercise proper jurisdiction. On these grounds, we think the Rule must be made absolute with costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. Other costs will be costs in the cause.

Specific performance—Delay in suing, effect of.

Mere delay, which is short of the period prescribed by the Limitation Act and which is not of such a character as to give rise to an inference of abandonment of right, is no bar to a suit for specific performance unless it is shown to have prejudiced the defendant. [p. 744, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 8th November 1922, modifying that of the Munsif, First Class, Delhi, dated the 28th April 1922.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.
Lala Sardha Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are very simple and are briefly these:—

The houses of the plaintiff and the defendant adjoin each other. On the first December 1918 the defendant agreed to sell the superstructure of his house to the plaintiff for Rs. 290 and received Rs. 5 as earnest-money. The defendant having failed to perform his part of the contract the plaintiff sued in July 1920 for specific performance and for damages which he assessed at Rs. 290. The defendant admitted the agreement but pleaded that the superstructure was owned jointly by him and his son and that as the latter had refused to join in the sale the plaintiff had refused to purchase and had cancelled the contract himself. The Trial Court held that the onus of proving the defendant's exclusive ownership of the property was upon the plaintiff and that he had failed to discharge this onus. He further held that defendant had failed to establish that the agreement had been cancelled by the plaintiff and that, in these circumstances, he was liable to pay damages. In spite of this finding, the learned Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit holding that it was not at all clear what was the defendant's share in the house and that, therefore, the amount of the damages could not be determined. Against this decision an appeal was preferred to the District Judge who disagreed with the finding of the Trial Court on the question of onus and held that it was for the defendant to prove that he was not the exclusive owner and that his son was also entitled to a share in the superstructure. He further held on the evidence that the defendant had failed to discharge this onus and that he must be held to be the owner for all intents and purposes. On the question as to who was guilty of breach the finding was entirely in favour of the plaintiff, and it was found that the defendant had broken the contract. The learned District Judge, however, concurred with the Trial Court in dismissing the suit for specific performance on the ground that the plaintiff was guilty of laches because he had brought the suit more than twenty months after the date of the breach of the contract.

Against this decision a second appeal has been preferred to this Court by the plaintiff through Mr. Shmair Chand, and I have heard Mr. Sardha Ram on behalf of the respondent.

In my opinion the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is obviously wrong and must be set aside. There is ample authority for holding that mere delay, which is short of the period prescribed by the Limitation Act and which is not of such a character as to give rise to an inference of abandonment of right, is no bar to a suit for specific performance unless it is shown to have prejudiced the defendant. In the case of Juagal Singh v. Ghulam Mahomed (1) it was held by a Division Bench of this Court that "delay in bringing a suit for specific performance may, in certain cases, be evidence of abandonment or acquiescence, but, on the other hand, delay which does not amount to waiver, abandonment or acquiescence and in no way alters the position of the defendant, does not disentitle the plaintiff to sue for specific performance." In the present case laches were not even pleaded by the defendant and the only point on which the parties went to trial was whether the defendant was a joint owner of the superstructure with his son and whether the plaintiff had himself cancelled the contract owing to the son's refusal to join in the sale. No issue was framed on the question as to whether the right to claim specific performance had been abandoned by the plaintiff, and no evidence was consequently given by the parties upon this point. In my opinion the delay in this case is not so great as to induce me to hold that the plaintiff has forfeited his right under the agreement. I accordingly accept the appeal and decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Mr. K. A. Potay, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. R. Indurkar, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The learned Subordinate Judge appears to have rejected the application through a complete misunderastanding of the amendment proposed to be made in the plaint. The written application for amendment is as follows: "If the Court holds that the plaintiff has no right to claim possession of the village in suit, then she submits that she has a right to receive Rs. 90 every year from the two first defendants for her maintenance and nothing at all has been paid during the last three years, and she, therefore, prays that an amended (prayer) be made that the defendants do pay Rs. 270 to the plaintiff for her maintenance for the last three years and that this payment be made a charge on the estate of the plaintiff's husband in the hands of the defendants." This appears to be exactly the claim which the learned Judge held in the first part of his order to be the proper claim for the plaintiff to make. I may remark that an application for leave to sue as a pauper cannot be rejected on the ground that the claim is "doubtful," that is to say, weak, even if there were no better reasons than that it is impossible to say whether it is weak till it has been tried. The order of the lower Court is set aside. The application for leave to sue as a pauper will be taken up again and fully considered. The costs in these proceedings, in which the Pleader's fee will be Rs. 15, will be costs in the lower Court.

Babu S. K. Mukerji, for the appellant.

Lala Mool Chand, R. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In accordance with the order dated 23rd February 1921 in Civil Appeal No. 546 of 1920, a report has been received to the effect that the forfeiture of the shares held by Musammat Ghulam Fatima was illegal. Under Articles 42 to 44 of the Articles of Association, however, the Bank had a lien on the shares in question and was entitled to sell the said shares in exercise of that lien.

The respondents in this and the connected Appeals Nos. 1978 and 1979 of 1918 seek to contest their liability on the ground that they were induced to buy the shares allotted to them by a fraudulent representation that they were to purchase new stock. This they cannot be allowed to do, inasmuch as a shareholder cannot be relieved of his liability as a contributory in the winding-up proceedings on the ground of fraud. Under the Muhammadan Law in a suit by a plaintiff for damages for breach by the defendant to give his daughter in marriage to the plaintiff, the latter is entitled only to receive compensation under section 73 of the Contract Act for any loss or damage caused to him by the breach, or which the parties knew would be likely to result from the breach of it. [p. 747, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 13th November 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Gujranwala, dated the 23rd August 1922.

Sheikh Niaz Muhammad, for the Appellants.

Lala Mool Chand, R. S., and Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal is the result of a suit brought by Mehraj Din, minor, against Fazl Ilahi, father of Musammat Zainab and Ghulam Muhammad, adoptive father of Fazl Ilahi, for Rs. 1,000 as damages for breach of a betrothal contract entered into between the plaintiff's father and the two defendants for the marriage of the plaintiff with Musammat Zainab. The Trial Court dismissed the suit, holding that Musammat Zainab, who is now a Muhammadan woman of full age and would be entitled to repudiate any actual marriage contracted for her during her minority, has refused to marry the plaintiff, that the defendants have no control over her and that thus the contract is one falling under section 56 of the Contract Act which has become impossible of performance, and, therefore, void.

On appeal to the Additional District Judge, a different view was taken. The learned Additional District Judge agreed that Musammat Zainab was 18 years of age and was at liberty to repudiate her betrothal with the plaintiff arranged by the defendants, but he found that the defendants had entered into negotiations for marrying Musammat Zainab elsewhere and had actually betrothed her to another man. This action, he considered, rendered them instrumental in the breach of the previous contract since, in his opinion, it would have been impracticable for Musammat Zainab, who observes purdha, to have arranged her betrothal herself. The defendants accordingly were held to have committed a breach of contract. Further, it was found by the learned Additional District Judge that gifts to the value of Rs. 100 had been made to the defendants in connection with the betrothal; that the plaintiff was entitled to recover this sum, an that he was also entitled to Rs. 200 as damages, it being remarked that the amount claimed by him of Rs. 450, for general damages was excessive. The plaintiff accordingly was given a decree for Rs. 300, with full costs, an order which was interpreted, when the decree was drawn up, as costs on the full Rs. 1,000 originally claimed.

In second appeal it is argued that there was no breach of contract by the defendants; that it would not be unlawful for them to contract any marriage on behalf of Musammat Zainab, and that the contract fell within the purview of section 56 of the Contract Act as one which had become void owing to the act to be done having become impossible or unlawful.

Secondly, it is contended for the defendant-appellants that the plaintiff, as ruled by the Bombay High Court in Abdul Razak Keval v. Mahomed Hosein Dalvi (1), could not in any case recover damages such as are recoverable in an action for breach of promise of marriage under the English Law, but could only recover damages proved under section 73 of the Contract Act and a return of the actual sum expended by him for the benefit of the defendants.

On the other side, reliance has been placed on the discussion in Purshotamdas Tribhovandas v. Purshotamdas Mangaldas (2) regarding the liability of persons who enter into an absolute contract to give a girl in marriage and the exact meaning of the word "impossible" in section 56 of the Contract Act. This case related to a Hindu betrothal, but the discussion referred to proceeded on lines independent of Hindu Law and sentiments, and much of it is in point in the present case where the defendants, instead of disapproving of Musammat Zainab's refusal to marry the plaintiff and declining to assist her in arrangements for another marriage, actually encouraged her in the attitude which she took up and negotiated her second betrothal. It is not necessary, however, to go into the question of breach by the defendants, since their learned Counsel admits that the plaintiff is entitled to the Rs. 100 held as a fact by the lower Appellate Court to have been expended by him or his father in presents. Obviously, if the defendant-appellants' contention is accepted that the contract has become void under section 56, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the Rs. 100 under section 65 of the Contract Act and this is conceded.

(2) 21 B. 23; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 16.

As regards the remaining Rs. 200 decreed by the lower Appellate Court, the ruling referred to [Abdul Razak Keval v. Mahomed Hoseln Dalvi (1)] is clear that under the Muhammadan Law in a suit by a plaintiff for damages for breach by the defendant to give his daughter in marriage to the plaintiff, the latter would be entitled only to receive compensation under section 73 of the Contract Act for any loss or damage caused to him by the breach, or which the parties knew would be likely to result from the breach of it. If the plaintiff-respondent were to be taken to have established his point that there was an actionable breach of contract by the defendants in the present case there is no evidence on the record on which damages under section 73 could be awarded. No such evidence is referred to by the learned Additional District Judge. The plaintiff is a minor himself and he has not been shown to have suffered in reputation or otherwise. There were no grounds, therefore, for the decree so far as it related to the Rs. 200.

I accept the appeal to the extent of reducing the decree to one for Rs. 100; and the plaintiff will have his costs in all Courts on this sum alone.

Musammat GAURAN—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—OBJECTOR—APPELLANT

CHANDU LAL AND ANOTHER—DECREE-HOLDERS, AND ANOTHER—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 58—Execution of decree—Attachment—Objection by party against whom suit was dismissed, nature of—Appeal, whether lies

A defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed is a party to the suit, within the meaning of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and where an objection lodged by such a person to the attachment of certain property in execution of the decree passed in the suit is dismissed the order dismissing the objection is open to appeal. [p. 748, col. 2.]

The mere fact that an objection to an attachment by a party to the suit is lodged under O. XXI, r. 58 of the Civil Procedure Code, would not disentitle the objector from pleading that the objection was really under section 47 of the Code and that O. XXI, r. 58 of the Code was relied on under a mistaken view of the law, and that an appeal is competent from the order dismissing the objection. [p. 748, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Simla, dated the 11th November 1922.

Lala Gobind Ram Khanna, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Faqir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings. The property in dispute is situated at Sabathu in the Simla District, and belonged originally to one Musammat Ganeshi who executed a deed of mortgage in respect thereof in favour of the present decree-holders in 1906. After the execution of the mortgage-deed in 1908 Musammat Ganeshi assigned her rights in the property to Musammat Gauhran, the present appellant. In 1915 the mortgagees brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Simla to enforce their mortgage impleading both Musammat Ganeshi and Musammat Gauhran as defendants to that suit. The case was subsequently referred to the arbitration of Mr. Jai Lal and Mr. Mir Muhammad Khan who gave their award on the 7th June 1917 and passed a simple money-decree in favour of the plaintiffs for Rs. 7,700 against Musammat Ganeshi only exempting Musammat Gauhran altogether from the operation of that decree. The award was couched in the following terms:—

"Our award is that simple money-decree be passed in favour of the plaintiffs against Musammat Ganeshi only for Rs. 7,700. No future interest and parties to bear their own costs. The execution of the decree will be deferred till three months after the conclusion of the War but in the meantime the property recited in the mortgage-deed will be subject to a lien for the payment of the decree."

On the 3rd April 1916 a decree was passed by the learned Subordinate Judge against Musammat Ganeshi in the terms of the award. Subsequently, the decree was put into execution and the property at Sabathu which had been mortgaged with the decree-holders attached in execution of that decree. An objection was filed by Musammat Gauhran against this attachment under O. XXI, r. 58 of the Civil Procedure Code and it was prayed that the property attached should be released inasmuch as it did not belong to the judgment-debtor and was not made the subject of a charge under the decree. The learned Subordinate Judge disallowed the objection holding that the objector was a party to the suit and that, therefore, it was not competent to her to lodge her objections under O. XXI, r. 58 which was meant only for third parties. He further held that the assignment in her favour was made subsequent to the mortgage and it was, therefore, not binding upon the decree-holders. Against this decision an appeal has been preferred to this Court through Mr. Gobind Ram and I have heard Mr. Tek Chand and Lala Faqir Chand on behalf of the decree-holders and the judgment-debtor.

A preliminary objection is raised that no appeal lies, inasmuch as the objection lodged was under O. XXI, r. 58, and that an order made on an objection under that provision is not appealable under the Civil Procedure Code. I am unable to agree with this contention. Musammat Gauhran, the present appellant, was clearly a party to the suit, and O. XXI, r. 58 had no application to her case. The mere fact that the objection was lodged under a wrong section does not disentitle the appellant to plead that the objection was really under section 47 and that O. XXI, r. 58 was relied on under a mistaken view of the law. Under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed is a party to the suit and I have no hesitation in holding that the suit against Musammat Gauhran was, for all intents and purposes, dismissed under the award given by the arbitrators. She was, therefore, a party to the suit and fully competent to lodge an appeal under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Next, it is contended that the judgment-debtor's representative has not been made a party to the appeal within the time of limitation and that the appeal should, therefore, be dismissed in its entirety. I fail to understand how the representative of the judgment-debtor was a necessary party to the appeal. The dispute only related to the property which was in possession of Musammat Gauhran who filed an objection in the Court below. In my opinion the objector was the only necessary party to this appeal and it was wholly unnecessary to implead the judgment-debtor who was merely a formal party to the case. Moreover, it should be observed that the judgment-debtor's representative made an application to this Court for his being impleaded as a respondent to the appeal. That application was granted by Mr. Justice Martineau on the 4th May 1923 and he was allowed to be impleaded as a respondent to this appeal. I do not see any force in this objection and overrule it.

MAGANMAL v. RAGHUNATHRAO.

On the merits there can be no doubt that the order of the lower Court is wrong and must be set aside. The decree was obviously a simple money-decree and in execution attachment could only be effected against the property which belonged to the judgment-debtor. Long before the decree was passed, an assignment of the property at Sabathu had been made in favour of Musammat Gauhran, and she was in possession as an owner. There was no decree against this property and I fail to see how attachment could be taken out against the property which was not owned by the judgment-debtor. There is no doubt that the property was at one time mortgaged to the decree-holders, but the effect of the award given by the arbitrator and of the decree obtained on the basis of that award was that the mortgage was cancelled and in lieu thereof a simple money-decree granted in favour of the plaintiffs-decree-holders. It is not, therefore, now open to the decree-holders to say that they can attach this property because it was once held by them under a mortgage. Whatever rights the plaintiffs had under this mortgage became merged in the decree and they are not now entitled to go behind it. I accept the appeal and direct that the property should be released from attachment. The respondents should pay the costs of the appellant in this appeal.

Messrs. M. Gupta, V. Bose and N. G. Bose, R. B., for the Applicants.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—After the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ghunsham Das v. Uma Pershad (1), that the mortgage by Dhanroopmal in favour of Chandmal was a mere device for reserving the bulk of the available assets of Dhanroopmal for the benefit of his family and indirectly for himself, the present applicants, the sons and grandsons of Chandmal, brought this suit based on accounts against Dhanroopmal in the Court of the Additional District Judge at Ajmere-Merwara. The claim admittedly included the consideration of the mortgage. The suit was referred to arbitration and a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs in accordance with the award. The decree was sent to the District Court at Jubbulpore for execution and the plaintiffs applied for rateable distribution of certain assets of Dhanroopmal held by Jubbulpore Court. Other holders of the decree against Dhanroopmal opposed the application on the ground that the plaintiffs' decree was obtained by collusion, no debt being really due by Dhanroopmal. The applicants contended that the Court had no power to investigate into the question of the bona fides of the decree. The Court deciding that it had that power has fixed a date for the submission of detailed statements by the various parties. The applicants have come up in revision.

The point to be decided in the present case is, whether a Court charged with the distribution of assets under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, has power to go into the question of the bona fides of a decree in respect of which an application for rateable distribution is made to it.

The earliest case cited on the point is In re Sunder Dass (2), where it was held that the words "decree-holders" or "persons holding decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor", in section 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure, corresponding to section 73 of the present Code, meant bona fide holders of decrees against the judgment-debtor and that if, in point of fact, a decree in respect of which rateable distribution was applied for was a sham decree the Court had a right to enquire into the question and to exclude its holder from the distribution of assets. It was held that the Court was bound to see when assets were to be distributed whether the claimants were bona de decree-hlolders within the meaning of the section. It was pointed out that if a view contrary to the one taken in the case was adopted the section would give rise to a great deal of fraud and all the assets might be swept away from bona fide decree-holders by sham decree-holders. This case was followed in Puran Chand Bord v. Surendra Narain Singh (3) and Peary Lal Das v. Peary Lal Dawn (4). In Puran Chand Bord v. Surendra Narain Singh (3) the reasons which induced the Judges to accept the view in In re Sunder Dass (2) were (1) the fear of a contrary view giving rise to fraud, (2) the fact that the view in In re Sunder Das (2) was followed in Chhaganlal v. Fazarali (5), and (3) that the Legislature with the knowledge of these two rulings did not alter section 295 so as to indicate that the view taken in these two rulings was erroneous. The decision in Peary Lal Das v. Peary Lal Dawn (4) was by the same Judges as in Puran Chand Bold v. Surendra Narain Singh (3).

A different view was taken in Saravana Pillai v. Arunachalam Chettiar (6), where it was held that an enquiry under section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code is of a non-judicial character and a Court charged with the distribution of assets under that section had no power to enquire into the validity of the bona fide of a decree on the strength of which rateable distribution is claimed. Reliance was placed upon the opinion of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal (7) that "the scheme of section 295 is rather to enable the Judge as matter of administration to distribute the price accroding to what seem at the time to be the rights of parties without this distribution importing a conclusive adjudication on those rights." It may be noted that in Raghu Nath Gujrati v. Rai Chatraput Singh (8), Mcalean, C. J., had some doubt as to the soundness of the decisions in In re Sunder Dass (2) and Chhaganlal v. Fazarali (5). In Dattatraya Govindseth v. Purshottam Narayanseth (9) and Chhaganlal v. Fazarali (5) was expressly overruled and it was held that, where the Court is concerned with distributing assets under section 73 it has no power to go behind the decrees which are presented by the various decree-holders asking for rateable distribution.

I prefer the view taken in Saravana Pillai v. Arunachalam Chettiar (6) and Dattatraya Govindseth v. Purshottam Narayanseth (9) to that taken in In re Sunder Dass (2). The reasons in those cases commend themselves to me and need not be repeated. The third of the reasons given above which induced the Judges in Puran Chand Bord v. Surendra Narain Singh (3) to accept the view in In re Sunder Dass (2) has been met in Saravana Pillai v. Arunachalam Chettiar (6). As regards the fear that a contrary view would give rise to fraud it may be answered that it would be always open to the aggrieved decree-holder to file a suit immediately and stop payment to the opposite party by obtaining an injunction. The view in In re Sunder Dass (2) is based upon one consideration of expediency but it overlooks another, namely, whether it is expedient to allow lengthy investigation into the validity of one or more decrees in a proceeding under section 73. In support of its decision to make the enquiry into the bona fides of the decree in question the lower Court argues that it does not find anything in section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code which prevents it from making the enquiry. The argument is without force. Because the section does not prohibit an enquiry, it does not follow that the Court has power to make it. I fail to see that section 151, Civil Procedure Code, on which the respondents' Pleader relies has any application in the case.

Holding that the lower Court had no power to enter into an investigation as to the bona fides of the plaintiffs' decree, I direct it to proceed with the distribution in accordance with law. The application is allowed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 25.

*Custom—Pre-emption—*Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, presumption as to rebuttal of.

The Wajib-ul-arz of a village drawn up at the Settlements of 1833 and 1860 recorded the existence of a custom of pre-emption. At the time of the Settlement of 1860, however, a note was recorded that the village was waste or desolate up to 1829:

Held*, that the note was insufficient to rebut the presumption of the existence of the custom of pre-emption.

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 29th of November 1921.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju and Pandit Hari Kishen Kaul, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, Munshi Jang Bahadur Lal and Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question in issue is whether the plaintiff claiming pre-emption has proved the existence of a custom of pre-emption in the village in suit. The entries in the wajib-ul-arzes drawn up at the two Settlements of 1833 and 1860 are prima facie records of an existing custom. There were at least three co-sharers in the former year and a number of co-sharers in the latter year. The main contention before us is that this evidence is sufficiently rebutted by a note recorded at the time of the Settlement of 1860, to the effect that this village had been waste or desolate up to the year 1829. We do not think this is sufficient to rebut the presumption raised in favour of the plaintiff. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 49—Assignment of decree—Equities of judgment-debtor against original decree-holder—Effect on assignment.

R obtained a decree on 9th February 1922 against C and assigned it to C, on the same date. G filed a suit against R on 13th June 1922 on a separate cause of action and obtained a decree on 30th August 1922. G deposited the amount due under the decree of R and got it attached in execution of his own decree. C applied to have the attachment raised:

Held, in revision that as G had made cross-claim in the suit by R, the latter had notice of the claim though the suit was actually brought afterwards and assignee took the assignment subject to the claim of C under section 49 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Under section 49 of the Civil Procedure Code, the transferee of the decree holds it subject to the equities (if any) which the judgment-debtor might have enforced against the original decree-holder.

Application for revision of an order of the Small Cause Court, Khurai, dated the 24th February 1923, in Execution Case in Civil Suit No. 1765 of 1921.

Mr. K. V. Deoskar, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. L. Subedar, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The facts of this case are that one Ram Bharose obtained a decree against the non-applicant Gulzarilal in the Small Cause Court at Khurai on 9th February 1922 and on the same day assigned it to the applicant Chunilal. The non-applicant raised a contention that the transfer was fraudulent and bogus. That contention has now been decided and it has been held that the transfer was genuine and for consideration.

On the 13th June 1922 the non-applicant Gulzarilal filed a regular suit against the assignor and obtained a decree on the 30th August 1922. The non-applicant deposited the decretal amount of Rs. 148-10-0 due under the decree which was assigned to the present applicant and then got it attached in execution of his own decree. The applicant applied to have the attachment raised, but the Small Cause Court dismissed the application holding that the case was governed by section 49 of the Civil Procedure Code and relied on Kristo Ramani Dassee v. Keder Nath (1) and Sinnu Pandaram v. Santhoji Row (2).

It is contended that neither of these cases will apply because in Kristo Ramani Dassee v. Keder Nath (1). the suit was pending at the date of the assignment and Sinnu Pandaram v. Santhoji Row (2). refers to cross-decrees passed on the same day. I am, however, of opinion that the view of the lower Court is correct, as the non-applicant put in a cross-claim in the Small Cause Court, in which the applicant, assignor, obtained a decree but the non-applicant was referred to a regular suit. He, therefore, had notice of the claim, though the suit was not actually brought till afterwards. In Mon Mohan v. Dwarka Nath (3) it was held that notice is not necessary. Under section 49 of the Code of Civil Procedure the transferee of the decree holds it subject to the equities (if any) which the judgment-debtor might have enforced against the original decree-holder. Had there been no transfer and had Ram Bharose remained the original decree-holder, the judgment debtor could have prevented the execution of the decree against him until the disposal of his own suit.

The application is accordingly dismissed with costs.

The rule of law enacted in section 133 of the Evidence Act must be subjected to the test deduced from the accumulated experience of human conduct in relation to the testimony of an accomplice. The guiding rule in this behalf is furnished by Illustration (b) of s. 114 of that Act which lays down "that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars." [p. 755, col. 2.]

An accomplice is too immoral a person to be worthy of credit without corroboration in material particulars and if corroboration is not forthcoming, because it is not possible in the nature of things that it should be forthcoming, it does not make the accomplice less immoral or his uncorroborated testimony less unworthy of credit. [p. 755, col. 2.]

It would be wholly unsafe to treat a piece of circumstantial evidence which is widely disassociated from the corpus delicti as a material particular to be of any corroborative value to the testimony of an accomplice. [p. 756, col. 1.]

In cases dependent on circumstantial evidence in order to justify the inference of guilt the incriminating facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. [p. 756, col. 1.]

The favourable impressions on the Judge's mind as to the demeanour of an accomplice in Court cannot take the place of corroboration in material particulars to make the testimony of the accomplice worthy of credit. [p. 756, col. 1.]

It cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a confession made and subsequently retracted by an accused cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence. But the credibility of a confession is in each case a matter to be decided by the Court in the light of the circumstances in which the confession was originally made and in which it was afterwards withdrawn. [p. 756, col. 2.]

So much of a confession made to the Police as directly leads to the recovery of certain articles is admissible in evidence but a further statement with regard to them, for instance, that they were stolen property, is no part of the information directly leading to their discovery and is inadmissible under section 27 of the Evidence Act. [p. 758, col. 1.]

Section 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure forbids reference to Police diaries or to their use as evidence either for or against an accused person and a consent or desire on the part of the defence Counsel cannot legalise such reference or use. [p. 760, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated the 10th May 1923.

Mr. Ajit Prasad, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants, Manna Lal, Lachman Singh and Deep Singh, have been convicted and each has been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code, by the learned Second Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow.

The case is a difficult one and I have given it prolonged and anxious thought. All the three appellants were represented before me by a Counsel and the arguments occupied two days' time. Since the close of the arguments I took time to consider my judgment in the case.

On the night following the 2nd November 1922, a dacoity was committed in the house of one Ganga Sewak, in village Lalupur, in the District of Unao. That the dacoity was committed is not disputed before me. It is urged, however, on behalf of the appellants that none of them took part in the commission of the dacoity. The case for the prosecution as a whole rests on the statement of Ganga Prasad (P. W. No. 27) and the retracted confession of Manna Lal, appellant. To that statement and to that confession are added the testimony of two witnesses, Ganga Sewak, the victim of the dacoity, and Ram Adhar, son of Ganga Sewak, in so far as the complicity of the appellant, Lachman Singh, is concerned and the recovery of some stolen property in so far as the other two appellants are concerned. Ganga Prasad, to quote the learned Judge, "is on his own showing very nearly an accomplice" Manna Lal retracted his confession as soon as he was put before the Committing Magistrate.

The story related by Ganga Prasad reveals startling details of a plan concerted by a party of fourteen persons including himself and the appellants, Manna Lal and Deep

Singh for the commission of the dacoity in question. It so happens that Ganga Prasad breaks off at a tangent from the party about three hours before the actual execution of the plan, with the result that he does not participate in the commission of the crime. His version is, that 8 or 9 months before the dacoity under consideration, those fourteen persons organised themselves into a gang for the purpose of committing dacoities; that previous to the dacoity in question various members of this gang committed larceny by housebreaking on three occasions and two unsuccessful attempts at similar offences in each of which Ganga Prasad participated; that two or three days before the last Diwali festival plans were made for the commission of the dacoity in question at a meeting of the gang held in the house of Deep Singh, appellant, and the scene of the dacoity was fixed upon at the suggestion of one Puttu Lal, whose uncle, Debi Dial, lived in village Lalupur; that Puttu Lal paid a visit to his uncle on the Diwali day and he was accompanied by Manna Lal and on his return reported that the coast was safe and clear for the contemplated action; that two days before the Katiki festival, that is, on the eve of the dacoity eleven members of the gang, including Ganga Prasad and the appellants, Manna Lal and Deep Singh, assembled at the house of the last mentioned person in the City of Cawnpore and a meseiger was sent to village Banthar to fetch three other persons from there; that a guava grove on the Unao side close to the Gangaghat bridge was fixed upon as the spot of rendezvous; that ten members of the gang came to this grove from Cawnpore and were subsequently joined by four others from Banthar, and that Ganga Prasad left the party consisting of thirteen members in the grove and went to the bazar at Gnaga ghat in order to purchase cigarettes where he came across his uncle, Jamna Narain and the two went to Cawnpore.

The First Report relating to the dacoity in question was made at the Police station Unao on the 3rd November 1922 after 4 P. M. by the Chaukidar of the village, named Sheo Ratan. Raghubar Dial, Sub-Inspector, arrived at the scene of the dacoity at 4 A. M. on the 4th November 1922. Three or four days after, he arrested Lachman Singh, appellant, but as there was no sufficient evidence against him he was released under section 169 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Nothing seems to have transpired till the 30th November 1922 when Ganga Prasad visited the house of Jiwan Singh, the Officer-in-charge of the Police station Colonelganj, in the City of Cawnpore, and laid information in respect of the dacoity under consideration. On the basis of the said information Jiwan Singh arrested several persons, including Manna Lal, appellant, and recovered several articles from the possession of the arrested persons which were said to be the property stolen at the dacoity in question. Manna Lal was admitted into the Cawnpore Jail on the 2nd December 1922 and on the 4th December 1922 he made a confession which was recorded within the Jail precincts by a Magistrate of the First Class exercising jurisdiction in Cawnpore. After several remands had been obtained from a Magistrate of Cawnpore, and during all of which Manna Lal was in the custody and company of the Police of Cawnpore for the avowed object of securing his assistance in the matter of investigation, the case was presented by the Police before Babu Shambhu Nath, a Magistrate of the First Class of Unao, for inquiry on the 20th December 1922. For some reason or another the hearing of the case was adjourned on several occasions till the 9th January 1923 when the first witness for the prosecution was examined. The inquiry began as against the following thirteen persons:—

(1) Sardar Singh of village Jarkal, Police station Bahdeo, District Cawnpore,

(2) Kashi Prasad of village Nari, Police-station Unao.

(3) Dunia Singh of village Nari, Police-station Unao.

(4) Sohan Lal of village Nari, Police-station Unao.

(5) Deep Singh of village Nari, Police-station Unao.

(6) Manna Lal of Sukhan Sarai, Police-station Safipur, District Unao.

(7) Puttu Lal alias Putti of village Bharsar Nao Sara. Police-station Fatehpur Chaurasi, District Unao.

(8) Raghuraj Singh of village Paithara, Police-station Achalganj ; District Unao.

(9) Gajraj Singh of village Paithara, Police-station Achalganj, District Unao.

(10) Bhore Singh of village Paithara, Police-station Achalganj, District Unao.

(11) Mannu Singh of village Paithara, Police-station Achalganj, District Unao.

(12) Ram Narain of village Paithara, Police-station Achalganj, District Unao.

(13) Lachman Singh of Lalupur, Police-station Unao.

On the 6th February 1923 the inquiry in the Court of the Committing Magistrate was closed. On the same date the case against the following six accused persons:—namely, Mannu Singh, (2) Raghuraj Singh, (3) Gajraj Singh, (4) Sardar Singh, (5) Sohan Singh, and (6) Dania Singh, was withdrawn by the prosecution and the remaining seven persons, that is, (1) Manna Lal, (2) Puttu, (3) Lachman Singh, (4) Deep Singh, (5) Kashi Prasad (6) Ram Narain, and (7) Bhore Singh, were committed to the Court of Session for trial on a charge under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code. These seven persons were consequently tried by the Court of Session with the result that Kashi Prasad, Bhore Singh, Ram Narain and Puttu were acquitted and the remaining three, that is, Manna Lal, Deep Singh, and Lachman Singh, were convicted and sentenced as stated at the outest of this judgment. They are the appellants in this Court.

The first question for consideration is, how far the evidence of Ganga Prasad can be trusted in the circumstances of this case. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has given to his evidence the treatment which would be accorded to the evidence of an accomplice and I am of opinion that the learned Judge has acted rightly in doing so. On the merits of his evidence, the learned Judge is of opinion that Ganga Prasad has spoken the truth. He observes, and I think rightly, that from the very nature of Ganga Prasad's statement it is obvious that there is little room for corroboration. He relies too largely on the impression left on his mind by the demeanour of the witness in the box and also by "his statement read as a whole." According to section 133 of the Indian Evidence Act, a conviction would not be illegal because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. The learned Judge has, however, refrained from basing his order of conviction on the testimony of the accomplice alone. I also am of opinion that, in the circumstance of this case, Ganga Prasad's testimony without material corroboration could not safely be made the basis of conviction. The rule of law enacted in section 133 of the Indian Evidence Act must be subjected to the test deduced from the accumulated experience of human conduct in relation to the testimony of an accomplice. The guiding rule in this behalf is furnished by Illustration (b) of section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act, which is as follows :—"that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars." The learned Judge and I are agreed that a conviction cannot be based on the uncorroborated testimony of Ganga Prasad. It follows that if, in the nature of the thing itself, corroboration is not possible at all or at any rate, is not possible with regard to material particulars, Ganga Prasad's statement must be rejected as unworthy of credit. I cannot conceive how the absence of corroboration in material particulars can be a substitute for corroboration in those particulars where corroboration is not possible. It would be a perversion of the lesson gained by accumulated experience of the conduct of an accomplice to adopt any such rule of practice as that where no corroboration is possible his testimony may be accepted as true without corroboration. An accomplice is too immoral a person to be worthy of credit without corroboration in material particulars and if corroboration is not forthcoming because it is not possible in the nature of things that it should be forthcoming, it does not make the accomplice less immoral It is admitted that there is no corroboration of Ganga Prasad's testimony except on one matter and that matter is that Manna Lal and Puttu visited Lalupur and stayed at the house of the uncle of the latter on the Diwali day. The incident of the visit may be true but it has no bearing, even the remotest, on the guilt of the appellants Further, the visit may be explained by a reasonable hypothesis supported by evidence on the record. Debi Dial, the uncle of Putti, residing at Lalupur, has been produced as a witness on the side of the prosecution. He said that, ever since Putti left Lalupur ten or eleven years ago, he (Putti) used to visit his house on ceremonial occasions only. He came twice or four times every year. He used to stay one or two days and then go away. Putti's visit, therefore, to his uncle's house on the Diwali day was in consequence of his usual practice. The fact that Manna Lal accompanied him is also reasonably probable on a hypothesis other than the guilt of the appellants. It is proved that Manna Lal and Putti were friends. It is also proved that they lived in the same quarter, though in different rooms, at Cawnpore, and were both employed in a Factory at that place. Manna Lal, therefore, might reasonably be expected to have accompanied Putti to the latter's native village when he was making a visit to it on a day of festival. At the best, the fact that they both paid this visit is a piece of circumstantial evidence but so widely disassociated with the corpus delicti that it would be wholly unsafe, in my opinion, to treat it as a material particular at all. As has just now been pointed out, this visit of Putti is as consistent with innocence as with the guilt of the appellants, other than Lachman Singh, that it cannot have any probative force. The principle is a fundamental one and of universal application in cases dependent on circumstantial evidence that, in order to justify the inference of guilt the incriminating facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. I am, therefore, of opinion, that there is no corroboration whatsoever of the testimony of Ganga Prasad. As pointed out before, the learned Judge seems to be much impressed with the demeanour of Ganga Prasad in the witness-box. To my mind such impressions are too ephemeral in their character to take the place of corroboration in material particulars to make the testimony of an accomplice worthy of credit. There is one fact which looms large in the evidence of Ganga Prasad and I attach very great importance to it. Taylor in his well-known book on the Law of Evidence quotes the following passage from Macaulay's History of England in dealing with the evidence of an accomplice: "It used to be a popular saying that they fished for prey, like tame cormorants, with ropes round their necks." Taylor on Evidence, 11th Edition, Volume I, page 661. There can be no doubt that Ganga Prasad threw his net too wide. He wanted to make a big haul of thirteen persons all of whom were eventually accused by the Police and put before the Committing Magistrate as persons who had committed the dacoity in question. As against six of these thirteen men the case broke down in the Court of the Magistrate. Out of the remaining seven, four have been acquitted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge. On the principle that of things which are not proved and of things which are non-existent the reckoning is the same in a Court of Law, I must hold that these ten men were not guilty of the offence with which they were charged and the evidence of Ganga Prasad implicating them was false. What is the conclusion to which we are driven? It is, that the proportion of falsehood over truth is so great in the testimony of Ganga Prasad that it would be fairly reasonable to characterise it as false in omnibus. The guarantee for truth by corroboration does not exist as shown before. The intrinsic merit is the preponderance of falsehood. Ganga Prasad's evidence must, therefore, be rejected as unworthy of credit.

Now, I turn to Manna Lal's confession. As stated before, Manna Lal was arrested on the night of the 30th November 1922. He was admitted into the Cawnpore Jail on the 2nd December 1922. Within that interval he was in the custody of the Police. Yet another day elapsed before his confession was recorded in Jail on the 4th December 1922. It appears from Exhibit Q on the record that Manna Lal returned to the Police custody and was in their company during the progress of the investigation. Two conclusions flow from the above facts:—(1) the confession was a belated one; (2) Manna Lal was an instrument in the hands of the Police for the purpose of investigation. These conclusions raise, in my judgment, a cloud of suspicion as regards the truth of Manna Lal's confession, though on the evidence I must hold that it was a voluntary one but that is quite a different thing from being a true one. The learned Judge observes more than once in his judgment, that "it is not easy to understand the psychology of a confessing prisoner and he cannot always be expected to state not only the truth but the whole truth." But it is the foremost duty of a Judge to bring to bear his knowledge and expreience of human conduct, in circumstances like these, on the consideration of the evidential value of the confession of a prisoner. The first thing to be borne in mind is that the confession with which we are concerned in this case was retracted at the earliest opportunity. Further, the learned Judge has given cogent reasons for the opinion that the bulk of the statement made by Manna Lal in retracting his confession is untrue. It follows that Manna Lal has no conscience. In the Reg. v. Thompson (1), Cave, J., made the following observation :—"I would add that for my part I always suspect these confessions which are supposed to be the offspring of penitence and remorse, and which nevertheless are repudiated by the prisoner at the trial. It is remarkable that it is of very rare occurrence for evidence of a confession to be given when the proof of the prisoner's guilt is otherwise clear and satisfactory; but, when it is not clear and satisfactory, the prisoner is not unfrequently alleged to have been seized with the desire born of penitence and remorse to supplement it with a confession ;— a desire which vanishes as soon as he appears in a Court of Justice." Such being the setting in which Manna Lal's confession is placed, I have grave doubts as to its being true. "False confessions are generally made by a prisoner who, oppressed by the calamity of his situation, may have been induced by motives of hope or fear to make an untrue confession, and the same result may have arisen from a morbid ambition to obtain an infamous notoriety, from an insane or criminal desire to be rid of life, from a reasonable wish to break off old connections, and to commence a new career, from an almost pardonable anxiety to screen a relative or a comrade, or even from the delusion of an overwrought and fantastic imagination." Taylor on Evidence, 11th Edition, Volume I, section 863.

It seems now to be the settled opinion of all the High Courts in India that it cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a confession made and subsequently retracted by an accused cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence. To this opinion I respectfully bow, but the weight to be given to such a confession must depend upon the circumstances in which the confession was originally made and the circumstances in which it was afterwards withdrawn. The credibility of a confession is in each case a matter to be decided by the Court in the light of the circumstances of every particular case. The treatment accorded by the Police to Manna Lal previous to and after the making of the confession and Manna Lal's conduct on both these periods while in the custody of the Police lends strong support to his statement that he made the confession in hopes of his being turned into a Crown witness. For my purposes it is not necessary to find so positively. It is enough if the circumstances of the case afford reasonable grounds for suspecting the truth of the confession. It is to be noted that Manna Lal's confession has been used not only as against him but also as against his co-accused. This is permissible under section 30 of the Indian Evidence Act, but we must not forget the precise terms prescribed by that section for using such a confession as against other co-accused. The section says that as against them "the Court may take into consideration such confession." This confession, therefore, by itself cannot be treated as sufficient evidence upon which a conviction could be based either of Manna Lal himself or of his co-accused.

Now arises the question whether this confession is corroborated aliunde by reliable and independent evidence bearing on material particulars. The learned Judge thinks that there is such a corroboration. First, as against Manna Lal himself. Exhibit 1 is a yellow sheet of cloth found in Manna Lal's room at the time of his arrest at Cawnpore. This is an article which would ordinarily be possessed by a man in the position of Manna Lal. A similar one might also have been possessed by Ganga Sewak and lost in the dacoity. No particular characteristics are stated in the evidence relating to the identification of Exhibit 1 which would make it out beyond reasonable doubt that it was the property of Ganga Sewak and of nobody else. The recovery of Exhibit 1, therefore, from the possession of Manna Lal is not, to my mind, a sufficient corroboration of the retracted confession. Exhibits 2, 3 and 5 are cloths recoverd by the Police from the house of the brother of Manna Lal's father-in-law in village Piarepur, situate at a distance of more than 12 miles from the residence of Manna Lal at Cawnpore. So much of the confession of Manna Lal which he made to the Police as directly led to the recovery of these articles, namely, Exhibits 2, 3 and 5, is admissible in evidence, but his further statement with regard to them that they were stolen property is clearly inadmissible. The last mentioned statement was no part of the information which directly led to the discovery of those articles (Vide section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act). Exhibit 2 is a lahnga, skirt; Exhibit 3 an orhni, and Exhibit 5 a dupatta. Manna Lal's case is that these articles belong to his wife. Whether this is true or not I am clearly of opinion that their recovery has no bearing on the guilt of Manna Lal. They were not recovered from his possession nor were they recovered from a place which was accessible to him alone or even under his control in any sense of the word. Manna Lal's father-in-law is the zemindar of Piarepur owning a 4-pies share and his brother from whose house articles 2, 3 and 5 were recovered is also a zemindar owning a 12-pies share in the same village. According to the prosecution Manna Lal had stated that Exhibit 2, the lehnga, would be found in his wife's possession at his father-in-law's house. As a matter of fact, it was not found in his wife's possession or in that house, but it was discovered in a separate house of the brother of Manna Lal's father-in-law. Besides, these articles are of very common nature likely to be possessed by persons of Manna Lal's father-in-law's or his brother's status. In the circumstances, I am unable to treat this evidence as corroborative of Manna Lal's confession as to his own guilt or the guilt of his co-accused.

As against the appellant Deep Singh, the corroborative evidence consists of the recovery of a waistcoat, Exhibit 7, from his house in village Sheikhpur Nari. Deep Singh lives and works at Cawnpore. The village Sheikhpur Nari is at a distance of about ten miles from Cawnpore. The dacoity in question was committed about 30 days before this recovery. There is no evidence that in the interval Deep Singh visited his native village. His brother, Dunia Singh, was also one of the persons challaned by the Police but discharged in the Court of the Committing Magistrate. Besides him, three other accused, who have since been either discharged or acquitted, that is, Kashi Prasad, Sardar Singh and Sohan Singh, are also resident of Sheikhpur Nari. In the circumstances, therefore, the fact that Exhibit 7 was found in one of the houses in the village does not to my mind bring home to Deep Singh the responsibility for the possession of that article. In fact, it would be wholly an incorrect use of the language to say that Deep Singh was found in the possession of this article.

As against Lachman Singh, the corroboration rests on the testimony of Ganga Sewak and his son, Ram Adhar. I agree with the learned Judge that if these two witnesses are believed there can be no doubt about Lachman Singh's guilt but, for the reasons now to be stated, I am unable to believe them. As I have said, the first report was made by the Chaukidar of the village. He was examined as a witness at the trial in the Court of Session. He confirms the report which he made. The report distinctly says that what he stated was on the information supplied by Ganga Sewak. According to the report all that Ganga Sewak said with regard to Lachman Singh was that somebody called out to open the door and that he thought that it might be Lachman Singh. In his evidence Sheoratan said as follows:—"Ganga Sewak told us that Lachman Singh, the mukhia of Lalupur, called at his door and that he opened the door on recognising Lachman Sihgh's voice. He said that Lachman Singh had called at his door at about 12 o'clock in the night. When he opened the door two dacoits caught him and two others caught his son and the remaining dacoits entered the house." In cross-examination he stated, "When I asked Ganga Sewak if he had recognised any one of the dacoits he said that he had not. . . . .Ganga Sewak also said that he did not see Lachman Singh, accused, with his own eyes but only recognised Lachman Singh's voice. Ganga Sewak and Ram Adhar also told me that the dacoits held them down and closed their eyes so that they were unable to identify any one of the dacoits." On the other hand, Ganga Sewak said in his evidence in the Court of Session that when he went out, he saw Lachman Singh and thirteen or fourteen other persons standing outside, and that Lachman Singh caught hold of him by the hand and then turned round to his companions and said "hold this sala securely" two of the dacoits then caught hold of me and Lachman Singh then left the place." After the dacoits ran away some of the villagers, including Lachman Singh, came to the house of Ganga Sewak. Amongst these villagers, were Debi Dial (P. W. No. 11), Durga Chaube (D. W. No. 2) and Badri Singh (D. W. No. 3). Ganga Sewak says, "It was before all these people that I mentioned the whole incident how Lachman Singh called me, how I came out, how Lachman Singh caught me and then made me over to the safe custody of his companions." The story related by Ram Adhar is substantially the same as that given by his father, Ganga Sewak. Debi Dial says: "So long as I stayed there Ganga Sewak and Ram Adhar did not state that Lachman Singh caught hold of Ganga Sewak when the latter came out of his house and made him over to other dacoits who seized him." Ganga Sewak and Ram Adhar are, therefore, clearly contradicted on a very material point by Sheo Ratan, the Chaukidar, and Debi Dial. Durga Chaube (D. W. No. 2), who was admittedly present on the occasion when Ganga Sewak related the story of the dacoity, says: "I asked Ganga Sewak how the dacoits entered the house. He replied that he opened the door of the house on the call of Lachman Singh. I then asked if he recognised Lachman Singh. He replied that he did not identify anybody because ten or twelve men caught hold of him as soon as he came out of the door and closed his eyes." The evidence of Badri Singh (D. W. No. 3) gives the same version. It will thus be seen that the statements of Durga Chaube and Badri Singh fall in with the evidence of Sheo Ratan, Chaukidar, and Debi Dial (P. W. No. 11). I cannot dismiss the evidence of these two persons nor of the Chaukidar on the conjecture that they are supporting the case of Lachman Singh by deliberately concocting a false version as to what happened when the villagers assembled at Ganga Sewak's house soon after the dacoity. Further, it should be remembered that Lachman Singh was at first arrested but was shortly afterwards released under section 169 of the Code of Criminal Procedure obviously on the ground that there was no sufficient evidence against him, as Raghubar Dial, the Police Officer, who first made investigation in the case, says. We have also from him that a badmashi case was lodged against Lachman Singh after his release under section 169 of the Code. That case was, however, dropped when he was subsequently arrested in connection with the dacoity under consideration. Raghubar Dial in his statement in the Court of Session says: "In their statements before me Ganga Sewak and Ram Adhar said that the dacoits had closed their eyes and so they could not identify any body." The learned Judge says, that the Counsel for the accused dropped the point after that statement was made, but he pursued it and the result was that Raghubar Dial, in answer to questions put by the Court, said: "From the statement of Ganga Sewak made before me it was clear that he identified Lachman Singh not only by the latter's voice but after the door of the house had been opened." I confess my inability to reconcile the two statements quoted above. They are clearly contradictory of each other and thus support the view that Ganga Sewak and Ram Adhar are not telling the truth in this behalf.

Before I take leave of the case, there is one matter to which I wish to make a particular reference. Frequent use is made by the learned Judge of the general and the special diaries of the Police for the purpose either of supporting the evidence of a prosecution witness or rebutting the arguments of the Counsel for the defence. To begin with, the special diary of the 1st December 1922 is referred to for the purpose of showing that Manna Lal, accused, had made his confession to Jiwan Singh, Sub-Inspector of Police, at Cawnpore to whom the first clue was supplied by Ganga Prasad. Again, reference is made to the same diary for the purpose of discovering the details of Manna Lal's confession made to the Police and recorded therein. Yet, again, reference was made to the special diary of Raghubar Dial with a view to find out as to whether Ganga Sewak and Ram Adhar had or had not mentioned to that officer that they had identified Lachman Singh. Lastly, Raghubar Dial's special diary is again referred to to support the identification of Exhibit 7 by its description given by Ganga Sewak and recorded in the diary. It appears from the judgment of the learned Judge that some of the references were made with the consent, or at the desire, of the Counsel for the defence. This consent or desire cannot, however, legalise the procedure adopted at the trial of this case in the matter of using these diaries as evidence in the case either for or against the accused. Such a procedure is clearly prohibited by section 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. These diaries have so often been relied upon by the learned Judge on points of substance in the case that it would be difficult to say that if they had not been so relied upon the learned Judge would have come to the same conclusion as he did in respect of the guilt of these appellants. "In a criminal proceeding the question is not alone whether substantial justice has been done according to law. All proceedings in poenam are, it need scarcely be observed, strictissimi juris" per Cockburn, C. J., in Martin v. Mackonochie (2).

I, therefore, allow the appeals, set aside the conviction and sentence as against each of these three appellants and direct that they be released forthwith.

CRIMINAL APPEALS NOS. 516, 517 AND 518 OF 1923.

PACHAPPA MUDALIA AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—RESPONDENTS.

Madras Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920), s. 129—Absence of drain or cesspool—Sewage water allowed to overflow on road—Offence.

There is no provision in the Madras Local Boards Act, XIV of 1920, which imposes upon a local authority any obligation to construct a drain or cesspool in every street. The absence of a drain or cesspool is not an excuse or justification for the owner of the premises for letting sewage water flow over the neighbouring road. Such an act is an offence under section 129 of the Act. [p. 761, col. 2]

Queen-Empress v. Sevudappayyar, 15 M. 91; 1 Weir 747; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 412, Emperor v. Nagan Chetty, 30 M. 221; 17 M. L. J. 372; 6 Cr. L. J. 235, followed.

Appeals under section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, against the acquittal of the aforesaid accused by the Second Class Magistrate, Arni, North Arcot, in C. C. Nos. 2, 3 and 4 of 1923 respectively on his file.

Mr. V. Ramaswami Iyenger, for the Accused.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 516 OF 1923.
(C. C. No. 2 of 1923).

The accused has been prosecuted by the Union Board of Arni under section 129 of the Madras Local Boards Act, XIV of 1920, for having allowed his sewage water to run over the adjoining Union road. The Magistrate has found that the sewage water runs into the street and that apparently it gets into a drain on the other side of the street, because the Magistrate says that there is a drain on the side of the street opposite to where the accused's house stands. The Magistrate has acquitted the accused on the ground that he cannot be expected to construct a culvert or a channel to let the sewage water from his house to flow into the opposite channel without spreading into the street. The Magistrate thinks that it is the duty of the Union to construct such a channel and as they have not done so, the accused must be acquitted.

Now, my attention has not been drawn to any section in the Madras Local Boards Act which imposes upon the Union any obligation to construct a drain or cesspool in every street, though ordinarily one would expect that such a work would be done by the Union for the benefit of the inhabitants of the Union. The absence of a drain does not seem to me to be any excuse or justification under the Act for letting one's sewage water flow over the neighbouring road. Section 129 which runs thus, "No owner or occupier of any premises shall allow the water from any sink, drain, latrine or stable, or any other filth to flow out of such premises to any portion of a public road except a drain or a cesspool" is not governed by any condition that he can do this if there is no drain or a cesspool in the street. Apparently, the idea is that if there is no drain into which the sewage water of the house can be led into without overflowing into the neighbouring road, some arrangement must be made by the house owner to have some place in his own premises to collect and retain the sewage water and either with the help of the Taluk Board or the Union Board under section 127 of the Act or by some other means, see that it is disposed of so that it does not cause nuisance to the neighbours.

A similar question had to be considered with reference to section 222 of the District Municipalities Act, IV of 1884 in two cases, the first reported in Queen-Empress v. Sevudappayyar (1) and the second in Emperor v. Nagan Chetty (2). In both these cases it was held that the absence of a drain or cesspool did not justify the owner of the premises to let his sewage water overflow on the road. The obligation is placed upon him by that section just in the same manner as it is placed by section 129 of the Madras Local Boards Act, XIV of 1920, to see that the neighbouring roads are not spoiled by his sewage water, and it was held that if the house-owner broke that obligation he was liable to be convicted and punished though the absence of a drain or a proper place into which the drainage or the sewage water might be allowed to flow could be taken into consideration in assessing the penalty. The position is just the same under section 129 of the Madras Act, XIV of 1920, with which I am now dealing.

I must, therefore, hold that the Magistrate was wrong in acquitting the accused on the ground he took and that the accused is really guilty of an offence under section 129. In the circumstances of the case, I think a nominal fine is sufficient. I would, therefore, convict him of an offence under section 129 and impose upon him a fine of one rupee.

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 517 OF 1923.

In this criminal appeal the circumstances are exactly the same as in the previous appeal, and, for the same reasons, I convict the accused of an offence under section 129 and sentence him to pay a fine of rupee one.

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 518 OF 1923.

In this case the finding of the Magistrate is that the back door of the house opens upon a street which is three feet lower in level than the adjoining street and as there is no way of carrying the water which flows into the street, it must be necessarily soaking there and the accused is not responsible. But that consideration is quite irrelevant in this matter, for the obligation that is vested upon the accused is, that he should not let his drainage or sewage water run into the street at all and if he does run it there, he is guilty of an offence under section 129. It is not necessary to consider, therefore, what happens to the water after it flows into the street. He is also convicted under section 129 and sentenced to pay a fine of one ruppee.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 164 (2), 364—Confession not recorded in accordance with law—Conflict with prosecution evidence—Confession, value of.

A confession which is not recorded in accordance with the procedure laid down by section 164 (2), read with section 364, of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the details of which conflict with the evidence for the prosecution, and which is retracted on the first possible occasion, is of no value as evidence as against the person making it. [p. 763, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Karnal, dated the 22nd March 1922.

Mr. Nanwa Mal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jai Lal, R. B., Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is by Harphul, a Jat, aged 25, of Dhakla, Tahsil Jhajjar, District Rohtak, who has been convicted under section 302, Indian Penal Code, of causing the death, on or about the 8th September 1921, of Kallu, aged 23, a butcher, of Rewari. The appellant has been sentenced to death and, together with his appeal, the sentence is before us for confirmation.

The facts found by the learned Sessions Judge are as follows :—On the 8th of September a cattle fair was in progress at Batolak in Jind State, and Chuna, father of the deceased, a cattle-dealer, had come to attend it with his two sons, Kallu, deceased, and Mallu. On the morning of the 8th Kallu entered into negotiations with the appellant for the sale of a bullock and was seen by a lad named Suleman, also a butcher of Rewari, about 9 A. M. outside the fair ground with the appellant. The appellant said that they were going to try the animal in a plough and Suleman understood that the animal had been sold for Rs. 105 and that the deceased had been paid Re. 1 as earnest-money. Later in the day, Bakhtawar of Kanithi and Dand Ram of Sentham, both villagers in the Jind State, saw the appellant with the bullock and a young man, who appeared to be a Mussalman, about two kos from the fair ground. They were speaking of trying the animal in a plough, but Dand Ram did not allow them to use his plough, and they went away in the direction of the place where the deceased's body was afterwards found. In the afternoon, about 3-30, Chuna and Mullu saw the appellant in the fair with the bullock trying to sell it. They went up and asked him where the deceased was, and he said he did not know. Chuna and Mallu forthwith accused him of making away with Kallu. The bullock was seized and a report was made to the State Officer in charge of the fair and as a result, a Sub-Inspector of State Police arrived from Dadri about sunrise on the 9th. The Sub-Inspector ordered search to be made for Kallu and towards the evening the appellant offered to point out the deceased's dead body. A party proceeded to a piece of waste ground covered with bushes about 3¼ miles from the fair ground, and there the appellant showed the Sub-Inspector the deceased's body lying beneath a tree. The place was within the limits of a village named Barobar in the Rohtak District, and a letter was sent, therefore, to Salhawas thana stating shortly that Kallu had been missed and that after search and inquiry Harphul had pointed out his dead body. The letter was received at Salhawas early in the morning of the 10th of September. The Sub-Inspector of Salhawas, Sadiq-ud-din, arrived at the spot about mid-day. On the same day a confession by Harphul, appellant, was recorded by a Tahsildar Magistrate of the Second Class in Jind State, in which the appellant stated that he and two other persons, Jot Ram and Har Lal, had killed the deceased with lathis. Sub-Inspector Sadiq-ud-din examined the body and prepared the usual statements. It was already decomposed. The chest was blood-stained. A dhoti and a chadar had blood on them. There were scratches on the hands and feet and rents in the neck and stomach. A note was made in the naqsha mazrubi that death appeared to be due to lathi blows, but there was no note of marks of such blows.

The post mortem examination of the dead body was held by the Civil Surgeon of Rohtak on the 11th. Decomposition was so far advanced that the Civil Surgeon could certify to no cause of death. There was a rent about 3 inches long on the left side of the neck and there was a large rent in the abdominal wall measuring 12 inches by 6 inches and exposing the intestines. No bones were broken and no marks of injury were visible to account for death.

The appellant was sent up for trial with Jot Ram and Har Lal, but the latter two were discharged by the Committing Magistrate. The appellant was committed and has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge on the strength of the evidence that he had left the fair ground, had been seen with the deceased by Dand Ram and Bakhtawar the same afternoon, had on the night of the following day pointed out the dead body of the deceased, had made a confession before a Magistrate, and had been unable to give any explanation of why the witnesses should give evidence against him. The assessors were unanimous that the appellant was guilty.

We have heard Mr. Nanwa Mal for the appellant and Mr. Jai Lal, Government Advocate, in support of the conviction.

We see no reason to doubt that the body found was that of Kallu, although Mr. Nanwa Mal has suggested that it was not properly recognisable. We also believe the evidence that the deceased and the appellant went away together with the bullock to arrange its sale and that the appellant returned alone with the bullock to the fair ground in the afternoon. The appellant has retracted his confession and has denied all this, but we are satisfied that the evidence regarding it is true. Dand Ram and Bakhtwar have given evidence, but their statements do not prove that the person whom they saw with the appellant was really the deceased.

We can, however, find nothing else reliable to connect the appellant with the death of Kalu. In the first place, as regards the confession, it was not recorded in accordance with the procedure laid down by section 164 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, read with section 364. This in itself might be of minor importance, since the Magistrate was called and examined in the Committing Court and his evidence was transferred to the Sessions record under section 33 of the Indian Evidence Act. But Chuna, the father of the deceased, has stated that the appellant was beaten on the 4th, before he told the Jind Police what had happened, and the Magistrate has stated that the appellant was returned to the Police after making his confession. Further, there are details in the confession which conflict with the evidence for the prosecution; for instance, statements regarding the payment of money to the deceased for the bullock and the implication of Jot Ram and Har Lal. The learned Government Advocate has asked us to regard certain portions of the confession as false. Finally, the confession has been retracted on the first possible occasion. In our opinion it was not genuine and it is of no value as evidence against the appellant.

This being so, we are left with no evidence at all that the deceased met his death by means other than natural. The Dadri Sub-Inspector stated in Court that he observed marks of injury on the head of the corpse which appeared to have been caused by lathi blows, but no writing made at that time is produced to support the statement and the post mortem makes it clear that the skull was not fractured. The blood on the chest and the clothes of the deceased might have been due to anything. There is no proof that it came from a wound inflicted with a weapon. Thus, even if the evidence be accepted that the appellant pointed out the dead body to the Police it would hardly suffice to convict him of having caused the death.

We are not, however, satisfied with the evidence about the pointing out. There is much confusion between the statements of the various witnesses. Sub-Inspector Mukand Lal of Dadri said that the body was found at 9 o'clock at night on the 9th September and was identified by Chuna and one Bakhshallah by the light of lanterns in the presence of Nathu and Chandgi, Lambardars of Santhaur. Bakhshallah has not been produced at all. Chuna has stated that the body was recovered on the third day from the 8th, (i. e., the 10th) and was pointed out by the appellant in his presence. The description given by the two Lambardars does not indicate that the discovery was made by lamp-light. Both say that Chuna was present. Molar, a third Lambardar, who states that he came up after the body was found and helped to guard it afterwards, stated that there was a Kasai with the party, thereby meaning, we take it, Chuna or, one of his party. The learned Sessions Judge, however, came to the conclusion that Chuna was not present, that the body was identified by Bakhshullah, and that Chuna was brought to see it the next day.

There is also the evidence that orders were given to search the whole neighbourhood on the 9th and, presumably, a search was made during that day. We are not convinced that the evidence about the place being discovered on information given by the appellant is above suspicion, and we incline to the belief that the body was originally discovered by someone else.

We accept it as proved that the body was discovered on the 9th some three miles from the fair ground, but this fact and the facts that the appellant was the last person seen with the deceased on the 8th and that he was, later on that day, in possession of a bullock which the deceased had offered to him for sale do not justify a presumption that the death of the deceased was caused by the appellant, in the absence of any evidence of the cause of death. Still less could it be presumed that the death was caused by the appellant with such intention or knowledge as to render him guilty of an offence under section 302, Indian Penal Code.

We accept the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit the appellant who will be released

CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 334 OF 1922.
July 18, 1923.
Present:—Mr. Kotwal, A. J. C.
THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT—APPLICANT
versus
NANMANT RAO AND ANOTHER—NON-APPLICANTS.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110—"By habit" and "habitually", meaning of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 383—Extortion—Picketing shops and realising fines—Offence.

The word "by habit" as used in section 110 (d), Criminal Procedure Code, means persistence in doing an act, a fact which is capable of proof by adducing evidence of the commission of a number of similar acts. The word does not merely signify an inclination by nature to do such acts. The word "habitually" in the same section means repeatedly or persistently. [p. 766, col. 2.]

The realisation of fines by means of picketing for the purpose of preventing the sale of foreign cloth, is extortion within the meaning of section 383 of the Penal Code.

Criminal revision against an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Jubbulpore, in Criminal Case No. 16 of 1922, dated the 11th September 1922.

Mr. G. P. Dick, Standing Counsel, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—This is an application on behalf of the Crown to set aside the order of the Magistrate refusing to bind over the non-applicants, Hanmantro and Bhaiyalal, under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. The non-applicants had been called upon to show cause why they should not be bound over for a period of one year to be of good behaviour, by an order dated the 28th June 1922. The order discharging them was made on the 11th September 1922. The order to bind them over, if made, would have expired on the 10th September 1923. Some explanation of the delay in the disposal of this application is, therefore, necessary. The application was filed on the 11th December 1922, that is, three months after the Magistrate's order of discharge. The record was then sent for and on the 21st December it was fixed for hearing the applicant. On the 17th January the Standing Counsel was heard, and, in view of certain matters pointed out by me, further orders were postponed, from time to time at the request of the Standing Counsel, till the 21st February 1923 when he said that he had no further submission to make. Notices was then issued to the non-applicants and the 11th April 1923 was fixed for hearing the case. The application for revision urged that the non-applicants should have been convcited under section 110 (e), Criminal Procedure Code. At the hearing the Standing Counsel stated that section 110 (e) was a mistake for section 110 (d) and that he wished to press the case under the latter sub-section. Counsel for the non-applicants not being prepared to meet the case under section 110 (d) the case was adjourned to the 25th April 1923. On that date the case was again adjourned at the request of the Standing Counsel and the 20th June 1923 was fixed by the consent of the parties as the non-applicants' Counsel was going out of Nagpur for the vacation. The case was then heard on the 20th, 21st and 25th June when the arguments were completed.

The proceedings were started on a report of the Circle Inspector that the non-applicants, Hanmantrao and Bhaiyalal, who were leaders of the Non-Co-operation Committee in Katni Murwara, had prohibited the cloth-merchants at Katni from buying foreign cloth and threatened to fine and boycott them socially if they did so and to picket them if the fines were not paid; that they actually fined some merchants; that they threatened those who refused to pay the fines with picketing and boycott and actually picketed them and issued instructions to other merchants to boycott them in their business when the threats had no effect, and by these means compelled them to pay the fines. It was also stated that the non-applicants compelled, by means of picketing, those merchants who refused to sign an agreement not to buy foreign cloth to sign it. Thus, it was said, the non-applicants habitually committed extortion. There were other charges in respect of matters falling under section 110 (e) with which we are now not concerned. The Magistrate held a preliminary enquiry at which four witnesses on the point of extortion were examined. These have been examined again in the case as P. Ws. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 14. It is clear that if the case, as sworn by the Circle Inspector, was proved there were clear instances of extortion established against both the non-applicants.

The order under section 112, Criminal Procedure Code, only charges the non-applicants in general terms with habitually committing extortion. It should have given some details, but I do not think that the non-applicants have been prejudiced as they may be taken to have understood from the record of the preliminary enquiry what they were charged with and expected to meet.

In order to prove that the non-applicants have been habitually committing extortion the prosecution have examined a number of witnesses. The Trying Magistrate has dealt with the evidence in a general and summary way in paragraph 4 of his order. All that he has said in this connection is,—

"In accordance with the definition of extortion in section 383 of the Penal Code there is ample evidence on the side of the prosecution to show that the accused caused pressure to bear on several cloth merchants in the town to sign agreements not to import foreign cloth and also to pay such fines as were rightly or wrongly imposed on them by the organisation which the accused represented."

The Magistrate has not attempted to analyse, criticise or weigh the evidence. It has been contended by the non-applicants that some of the evidence is unreliable, and the rest, even if believed, does not prove extortion. The evidence has, therefore, been gone into in this Court by Counsel on both sides at great length. The learned Counsel for the Crown relied on P. Ws. Nos. 1 to 4, 7 to 11 and 14.

It appears from the evidence that, about the beginning of October 1921, most of the cloth merchants of Katni Murwara entered into an agreement not to sell foreign cloth till the 13th January 1922. These merchants have been referred to by witnesses as the Bazaz Committee. In meetings held subsequently the period during which foreign cloth was not to be imported and sold was extended. The last of such meetings was on the 28th March 1922. The evidence shows that a few merchants P. Ws. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 14, who refused to sign the new agreement, were threatened with picketing or were actually picketed and made to sign the agreement. Some who had sold foreign cloth were asked to pay the amount of profits realised by them from the sales plus a small sum of Re. 1 or Rs. 5 by way of penalty. On their refusal to pay the amount they were picketed till they paid up or consented to pay (P. Ws. Nos. 2, 7 and 14). The picketing consisted in locating in front of the shops of the defaulting parties volunteers who by supplication induced the customers to turn away from the shops. The evidence shows that the picketing was directed by the Bazaz Committee and was supervised by Hanmantrao. Hanmantrao and Bhaiyalal are not themselves dealers in cloth. Being educated men they were taken as members of the Bazaz Committee and helped in recording its proceedings. It is probable that Hanmantrao was instrumental in bringing the Committee in existence. The evidence fails, in my opinion, to prove that Bhaiyalal acted otherwise than as the scribe of the Committee or; that he had any substantial part in the Committee's proceedings or in the direction and supervision of the picketing. On the evidence, I do not think that a sufficient case for taking security is made out against Bhaiyalal. The order of the Magistrate with regard to him must be confirmed.

As regards the case against Hanmantrao the following contentions have to be considered:—

It is said that the picketing was the work of the Committee of which the persons picketed were themselves members and, therefore, no extortion can be said to have been committed against them. What was done in their case, it is contended, was what they had agreed should be done under certain circumstances. This argument can have no application to the cases where persons were compelled to sign the fresh agreement by means of picketing. As to the realisations of fines it is clear that the original agreement did not provide that the fines were to be realised by means of picketing and I do not think a mode of exaction of the fines subsequently decided upon by the Committee can be said to have been consented to by the memebers who had not actually agreed to it. In any case, where the signature by way of assent to the subsequent agreement to extend the time was brought about by picketing, no assent to the picketing for the realisation of the fines can be inferred. I am, therefore, of opinion that the action of Hanmantrao in getting the agreement signed and in realising fines by means of picketing was extortion within the meaning of section 383, Indian Penal Code.

It is next contended that, assuming that a few instances of extortion are proved, the non-applicants cannot be said to be habitually committing extortion. It is said that the words "by habit" and "habitually" means inclined by nature, and that section 110 (d), Criminal Procedure Code, refers to persons whose inclination by nature is such that they must commit a particular offence and are, therefore, likely to be dangerous to society. It is said that persons like the non-applicants who commit certain acts in the carrying out of a particular political object cannot be said to be habitually inclined to commit those acts and, therefore, cannot be classed as persons dangerous to society. I do not think that the narrow interpretation contended for by the non-applicant's Counsel should be put upon the words "by habit" or "habitually". It would be difficult to prove "habit" in the sense of inclination by nature. The Legislature must be taken to have used the word "habit" as meaning persistence in doing an act, a fact which is capable of proof by adducing evidence of the commission of a number of similar acts. "Habitually" must in my opinion be taken to mean repeatedly or persistently.

Reference is made to Hari Telang v. Queen-Empress (1) and it is contended that section 110 is not applicable as it cannot be said that the non-applicants are in the habit of committing extortion as individual members of the community for it was only during their employment by the Bazaz Committee that they committed the acts and not from any personal interest. It is also said that at the time that the non-applicants were called upon to give security picketing had ceased and it cannot be said that the habit was then continuing and there was a likelihood of the picketing being repeated. I am not pressed by these arguments. It is not proved that the movement against the sale of foreign cloth is dead and the Bazaz Committee had ceased to exist or that Hanmantrao has severed his connection with it. Picketing for the purpose of preventing the sale of foreign cloth is not a thing which the non-applicant is interested in doing only so long as he is employed by the Bazaz Committee. He may be likely to resort to it just as much out of personal inclination as by the direction of the Committee. The case Hari Telang v. Queen-Empress (1) is distinguishable.

The prosecution witnesses generelly admits that both the non-applicants are respectable persons and held in esteem by the community for their unselfish services to the public. It is argued that this shows that the non-applicants will not personally repeat the acts complained of. The non-applicant may be of unimpeachable respectability and moral character but there is no guarantee that he will not repeat acts which, though prohibited by the law, he personally believes are necessary in the interests of his country, vide his written statement.

Picketing, in the circumstances referred to above, amounts to extortion. The number of instances of extortion proved in this case is, in my opinion, sufficient to prove habit, that is, persistent use of picketing whenever occasion for its use in the non-applicant's opinion has arisen.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the Magistrate discharging Hanmantrao and direct the Magistrate to bind him over for the remaining period of the year commencing from 11th September 1922, he date when the Magistrate should have passed the order under section 118.

It has been urged that the District Magistrate refused to move this Court against the Magistrate's order of discharge and that this shows that it is not necessary to bind over the non-applicant. The District Magistrate has not agreed with the reasons of the Magistrate but, so far as I can gather, he has given no specific reasons for not proceeding further in the matter. I am, therefore, unable to attach that weight to his refusal which it would have been entitled to if accompanied by reasons. It will be open to the non-applicant to move the District Magistrate under section 125, Criminal Procedure Code. I confirm the order of the Magistrate discharging Bhaiyalal.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Murder by father of newly born illegitimate child—Mitigating circumstances—Sentence.

In the murder of her newly born illegitimate child by a woman there are mitigating circumstances sufficient to reduce the appropriate penalty of death very much below a sentence of transportation for life.

Most of these circumstances apply, though certainly in a less degree, to the case of the father of such a child, more especially where the mother is his own sister.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—If the evidence given in this case is to be believed, it proves the following facts. Kachri Kunbin, a widow, aged about 23, gave birth to a live female child begotten on her by her brother, the appellant Dhania, whose age is recorded as about 30. He was present at the birth of the child and immediately took hold of it and killed it by doubling it up and twisting it in his hands. We are not only unable to find any reason for doubting the truth of the considerable body of evidence given in proof of these facts, but we find it impossible to disbelieve it. The conviction for murder must, therefore, be maintained. The murder was certainly deliberate, and the intention to kill the child as soon as it was born was probably formed some time before its birth, on the failure of the attempts to procure an abortion which have been proved.

In re GARAPATI KOTAYYA.

For this offence Dhania has been sentenced to death. It has invariably been held in all the Courts in India that in the murder of her newly born illegitimate child by a woman there are mitigating circumstances sufficient to reduce the appropriate penalty very much below a sentence of transportation for life. Without discussing the principles underlying and justifying that proposition, we think it can safely be said that most of them apply, though certainly in a less degree, to the case of the father of such a child, more especially where the mother is his own sister. For these reasons we maintain the conviction but alter the sentence by reducing it to one of transportation for life.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 353—Execution of warrant after expiry of time fixed by Nazir—Obstruction to Amin—Offence.

An Amin who executes a warrant before the expiry of the time fixed by the Munsif for its return but after the time given by the Nazir, acts in the proper discharge of his duty within the meaning of section 353 of the Penal Code, since he derives his authority to execute the warrant in virtue of his office from the Court and the fact that the Nazir directs an earlier return, as a matter of office routine, does not affect the Amin's authority.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Ellore, in Criminal Appeal No. 33 of 192., preferred against an order of the Court of the Sub-Magistrate, Chintalapadi, in C. C. No. 126 of 1921.

Messrs. P. Narayanamurthy and K. Kamanna, for the Petitioners.

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The first point taken is that the warrant had become time-expired when it was sought to be executed by the Amin, and, therefore, he could not be treated as having acted in the proper discharge of his duty. The time fixed by the Munsif for the return of the warrant had, however, not expired; only the time given by the Nazir had expired. The Amin derives his authority to execute the warrant in virtue of his office from the Court, that is, the Munsif. The Nazir could not and did not take away that power. He only directed an earlier return as a matter of office routine and that did not affect the Amin's authority. The same view is taken in Sabed Ali v. Emperor (1). Following that ruling I must overrule the first objection.

It is next argued that there is no evidence of any assault under section 353, Indian Penal Code, against the first accused. The prosecution witnesses prove that the first accused left the place where the disturbance was and came back with a stick in his hand, and, as they apprehended that he would attack them, they disarmed him I think the evidence is enough to justify the inference of both the lower Courts that first accused on coming back to the scene armed with a stick, was making preparations to use criminal force to the Amin and the constables. That they apprehended such a result is clear from the evidence and from their action in disarming him. The second ground also fails. As against second accused there is clear evidence that he pushed the Amin and thus committed assault.

The convictions under section 353, Inidan Penal Code, are correct and are confirmed.

As regards the sentences, I am inclined to think that, in the circumstances of this case, considering that no serious violence was used, it is not necessary to give the accused rigorous imprisonment. I set aside the sentences of two months' rigorous imprisonment passed on the accused and substitute a fine of Rs. 50 against each of the accused in default one month's rigorous imprisonment.

ORDER.—The facts of this case are exactly those discussed in Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, 6th Edition, at page 771, under O. XLVI, r. 7, Civil Procedure Code.

A suit cognizable by a Court of Small Causes has been tried by a Munsif under his ordinary jurisdiction without objection to his jurisdiction and a decree passed for plaintiff. The defendant appealed to the District Judge without any reference to the question of jurisdiction. The District Judge reversed the decree of the Munsif and the plaintiff applies to this Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Judge.

There are severa conflicting decisions of the High Courts on the subject. The Allahabad High Court, in Ram Lal v. Kabul Singh (1), refused to interfere as the question of jurisdiction was not raised before the Small Cause Court. That case was the converse of the present case, as the case was tried as a Small Cause Court suit, when it was not so. The High Court held that parties should not be assisted to set aside decrees on points which they did not raise before the Court which tried the matters in issue, and of which they gave no notice to the opposite party.

The Calcutta High Court took the same view in Suresh Chunder Maitra v. Kristo Rangini Dasi (2) which was a case very similar to the present. The High Court held that both parties having submitted to the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts it was not competent to either of them in second appeal to plead the want of jurisdiction so as to render the proceedings taken in the suit void.

A contrary view was, however, taken by the Madras High Court in Ramasamy Chettiar v. Orr (3), which is also a case similar to the present. All the proceedings were set aside and the plaint returned for presentation to the proper Court.

In the Full Bench case of Kollipara Seetapaty v. Kankipaty Subbaya (4), the Madras High Court while approving the decision in Ramasamy Chettiar v. Orr (3) set aside the decision of the Appellate Court and restored that of the Munsif. It is not clear from the decision whether the Munsif in that case had Small Cause Court powers; but as he was a District Munsif and the suit was only for Rs. 45, presumably he had, and this would appear from the reference made in the judgment approving the Bombay case of Shankarbhai v. Somabhai (5). In that case the Subordinate Judge who had Small Cause Court jurisdiction tried a Small Cause Court suit under his ordinary jurisdiction. It was held that the character of the suit was not altered by the mode in which the Subordinate Judge had exercised his jurisdiction and that his decree being final was not appealable to the District Court. This is not the case here. The Munsif of Saugor had no jurisdiction to try the present suit which was of a Small Cause Court nature and valued at Rs. 400.

This distinguishes the present case from those in 33 Madras and 25 Bombay [Kollipara Seetapaty v. Kankipaty Subbaya (4) and Shankarbhai v. Somabhai (5).] in which the decision of the lower Appellate Court was set aside and that of the Munsif restored, because he had jurisdiction to try the suit as a Small Cause suit although he did not exercise it.

Having thus distinguished these two cases there remain 25 Allahabad, 21 Calcutta and 26 Madras [Ram Lal v. Kabul Singh (1), Suresh Chunder Maitra v. Kristo Rangini Dasi (2) and Ramasamy Chettiar v. Orr (3).] In all these cases the Munsif exercised a jurisdiction which was not vested in him by law. In the Allahabad case which is the converse of the present case the Munsif tried the case as a Small Cause Court suit when it was not so. Presumably, the Munsif could have tried it under his ordinary jurisdiction, and, under the Bombay ruling above quoted, the character of the suit could not have been altered by the mode in which he exercised his jurisdiction. There was no first appeal in that suit and the High Court refused to interfere in revision for reasons above given.

The facts in the 21 Calcutta and 26 Madras cases [Suresh Chunder Maitra v. Kristo Rangini Dasi (2) and Ramasamy Chettiar v. Orr (3)] are the same as the present case. I may say that the question of setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restoring that of the Munsif does not, in my opinion, arise in the present case, because the cases in which that course was followed were cases in which the first Court had jurisdiction to try the suit although it failed to exercise it.

In the present case the Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the suit and the question is, therefore, whether I should decline to interfere on the ground that the parties have submitted to the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts, which is the view taken by the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts, or whether the whole of the proceedings should be set aside and the plaint returned for presentation to the proper Court as was done in 26 Madras [Ramasamy Chettiar v. Orr (3)]. There is no ruling of the Bombay High Court exactly on the point in issue, as I have already explained, and the balance of authority is in favour of the former course, the latter view being taken by the Madras High Court alone.

In this case the parties have had a full trial before the Munsif and an appeal to the District Judge without objection on the point of his jurisdiction, and I respectfully agree with the view of the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts. I, therefore, decline to interfere and dismiss the application with costs.

RAM NATH v. RAM HARAKH.

N. 225; 10 Bur. L. T. 177; 43 I. A. 249 (P. C.), referred to and relied upon.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 31st July 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, Partapgarh, dated the 30th June 1921.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Radha Kishen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are as follows:—Rajapal Singh, defendant No. 1, is a member of a joint Hindu family consisting of his father, his sons, his brother and his brother's sons. All these persons are defendants to the suit out of which these appeals have arisen. On the 31st October 1907 he executed a deed of mortgage in favour of the plaintiff's father for a sum of Rs. 150 carrying interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem. This suit is brought for the purpose of enforcing that mortgage by sale of the mortgaged property. The other defendants are prior and subsequent transferees of the property in suit. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance but on appeal the District Judge has reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and decreed the suit. This is an appeal from the last-mentioned decree. In the decree of the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff's costs of both the Courts are directed to be paid by the defendants. Amongst these defendants are included defendants Nos. 4 and 5, who were impleaded as prior mortgagees. Appeal No. 278 is by them and the only ground urged before me to-day by the learned Pleader for the appellants is the question of costs. The learned Pleader for the respondents accepts the invalidity of the objection by the appellants as against the decision of the Court below in the matter of costs. That appeal will, therefore, be allowed and the appellants will be discharged from any liability to pay the costs of any other party to the suit. I am not prepared to go further than that and award costs to the appellants as against the other parties.

The property mortgaged is admittedly the joint family property and the decree with which I am now concerned raises the question as to whether the loan for the security of which the mortgage was executed or any part of it was incurred by Rajapal Singh for legal necessity. The details of the entire sum of Rs. 150 may be gathered from the deed of mortgage to be as follows:—

(1) To meet the expenditure of the suit in re Ram Singh v. Kandha Singh in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh.....Rs. 25;

(2) Price of grain seed taken from the mortgagee for the purpose of the cultivation of the sir and khudkasht of Ram Singh, the father of the executant .....Rs. 500;

(3) Taken in cash on the date of the execution of the land for the purpose of paying the Pleader's fee in the case mentioned above.....Rs. 75.

It was admitted that the defendant No. 1 had paid Rs. 300 through Chandrapal Singh, defendant No. 7, who is a subsequent transferee, as stated before, to the plaintiffs towards the debt due under the bond in suit (vide paragraph 7 of the plaint) and it is common ground between the parties that this payment was made on the 14th October 1916. The plaintiffs have given credit for this amount to the mortgagee.

As to the first item, the Court of first instance held that no legal necessity with reference to it was established and it declined to treat the recital in the deed as sufficient evidence of legal necessity in the particular circumstances of this case. As regards the second item, that Court came to the conclusion that a sum of Rs. 60 out of Rs. 75 was for legal necessity as having been paid to the Pleader in the case mentioned in the deed towards the payment of his fee. As regards the third item, that Court held that there was no reliable evidence aliunde the deed to prove that that amount was taken for the purposes mentioned in the deed. In conclusion, it held that the only part of the money borrowed under the mortgage in suit was the sum of Rs. 60 paid to the Pleader in the case which is mentioned in the document. But in view of the fact that the plaintiffs had already received a sum of Rs. 300 towards the satisfaction of the debt in suit which amount was more than was validly binding on the family property it dismissed the plaintiff's suit altogether The plaintiffs appealed to the Court of the District Judge of Rae Bareli. That Court has held that the whole of the amount borrowed under the mortgage in suit was for legal necessity.

As regards item No. 1, that is, the sum of Rs. 25. I am of opinion that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that it was borrowed for legal necessity is correct. Exhibit 2 is the plaint of the suit mentioned in the document. It was filed on the 25th June 1907 and the recital in the mortgage-deed is that this item was borrowed on the 23rd June 1907. It is, therefore, reasonably probable that this sum of Rs. 25 was borrowed for the purpose of the suit which began by the plaint of the 25th June 1907 and the recital contained in the deed with reference to this sum is true.

As regards item No. 2 it is admitted before me that the sum of Rs. 60, borrowed for the object of paying the Pleader's fee, was borrowed for legal necessity and, therefore, it is effective as against the family property. But it is contended that there is no evidence outside the recital in the deed in suit to prove legal necessity with reference to the remaining sum of Rs. 15.

As regards the third item of Rs. 50, it is contended that, apart from the recitals, there is no evidence whatsoever to justify the finding that this sum represents the price of grain seed utilised in the cultivation of the family sir and khudkasht lands. The decision of the learned District Judge in respect of the two points just now mentioned is exclusively based on the recitals contained in the deed. The learned Pleader for the plaintiffs-respondents attempted to support the finding with reference to the evidence of a witness as well. That witness is Chandrapal Singh (P. W. No. 2). The Court of first instance rejected his evidence on this part of the case as unreliable and gave excellent reasons for doing so. The judgment of the learned District Judge makes no reference to that evidence except in the sentence: "The story of accounting for the grain debts, whether true or not, does not affect the question of the grain purchased for sowing sir and khudkasht as set forth in the recital of the mortgage-deed." The story referred to in this quotation is the one which was narrated by the witness Chandarpal Singh. The Court of first instance disbelieved this story and the inference from the observation of the learned District Judge is, that he was not prepared to believe it either. I must, therefore, not allow that evidence to be used in second appeal before me.

The point of law in which this appeal resolves itself is this:—Has the lower Appellate Court properly applied the rule of law allowing the recitals in the deed of mortgage to be used as evidence against the other members of the family? In the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) Lord Shaw made the following observation in respect of the powers of the manager and head of a joint family with regard to the joint family property:—"The principle in regard to this is analogous to that of the power vested in the head of a religious endowment or muth or of the guardian of an infant family. In all of the cases where it can be established that the estate itself that is under administration demanded, or the family interest justified, the expenditure, then those entitled to the estate are bound by the transaction." On the question of the onus of proof, his Lordship quoted the following passage from the judgment of Lord Justice Knight-Bruce from the well known case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (2):—"The presumption proper to be made will vary with circumstances and must be regulated by and dependent on them. Thus, where the mortgagee himself, with whom the transaction took place, is setting up a charge in his favour made by one whose title to alienate he necessarily knew to be limited and qualified, he may be reasonably expected to allege and prove facts presumably better known to him than to the infant heir, namely, those facts which embody the representations made to him of the alleged needs of the estate and the motives influencing his immediate loan."

The rule of law, therefore, is that the creditor must prove facts which embody the representations of the alleged needs of the estate and the motives influencing the immediate loan. The question in this case is:—"Has this onus been discharged by merely reading the recitals in the deed in suit?" I am clearly of opinion that a recital is not a substitute for evidence of the facts which a creditor must prove under the dictum of Lord Justice Knight-Bruce quoted above. If it were not so, the principle of the protection of the joint family property enunciated by the Mitakshara will become wholly illusory for it will be always possible for a creditor to prepare the deed charging the family property in a manner so as to make it contain both the representations and the motives influencing the loan and thereby be entitled to the verdict of having discharged the onus that the law placed on him. In the case of Brij Lal v. Inda Kunwar (3) Mr. Ameer Ali, in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, made the following observation:—"The onus of supporting a sale from a Hindu widow is undoubtedly on the purchaser. In the present case the appellant has adduced no evidence to prove legal necessity as would bind the husband's estate. He has relied simply on the recitals in the schedule attached to the sale-deed. Recitals in mortgages or deeds of sale with regard to the existence of necessity for the alienation have never been treated as evidence by themselves of the fact. And it has been repeatedly pointed out by this Board that to substantiate the allegation there must be some evidence aliunde." At the best, such recitals may serve as an aid in the determination of the question of legal necessity provided that there are circumstances or direct evidence aliunde the deed in suit supporting the truth of the recitals. In cases where "time goes by, and all the original parties to the transaction and all those who could have given evidence on the relevant points have grown old or passed away, a recital consistent with the probability and circumstances of the case, assumes greater importance, and cannot lightly be set aside:" per Lord Buckmaster in the case of Nanda Lal v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya Chowdhuri (4). No party can be asked to prove the impossible, and when proof of the facts justifying legal necessity or representations in respect of such a necessiy has become impossible by lapse of time the recitals will be sufficient evidence to support the deed provided that there are independent circumstances which are such as would justify a reasonable belief in the truth of the recital.

In the present case the only reason pointed out is that the mortgagee is dead. That, in my opinion, is not enough to attract the application of the rule laid down by Lord Buckmaster in the case just now referred to. Not only that there is no justification for a presumption that no direct evidence bearing on the transaction in question is available but, on the other hand, the plaintiff adduced direct evidence in support of their case but it has been disbelieved. If the plaintiffs have a money-lending business, which they seem to have, they should presumably be possessed also of account-books relating to the business. No such account-book has been produced nor any explanation given as to their non-production. I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the sums of Rs. 15 and Rs. 50 were borrowed for legal necessity. I also agree with the Court of first instance that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs have received a sum of Rs. 300 towards the discharge of the debt in suit, and as that sum is more than what will be due to them in respect of the loan of the two items of Rs. 25 and Rs. 60, that is, Rs. 85 in all, together with the interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the execution of the deed in suit to the date of the payment of the sum of Rs. 300 they are entitled to no decree in this suit. The result is that the appeal is allowed the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. The plaintiffs will bear the costs incurred by the defendants Nos. 1, 2, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 14 in all the Courts.

Under Hindu Law the ordinary gains of science are divisible when such science has been imparted at the family expense and acquired while receiving a family maintenance; but it is otherwise when the science has been imparted at the expense of persons who are not members of the acquirer's family. [p. 777, col. 1.]

By the "gains of science" is meant the special training for a particular profession which is the immediate source of the gains, and not the general elementary training which is the stepping stone to the acquisition of all science. [p. 777, col. 1.]

There is no authority in the Mitakshara for the contention that acquisitions made personally and without the aid of joint funds by a member of a joint family, who received an ordinary education suitable to his position as a member of the family to which he belonged, should in law be regarded as partible and not as his self-acquired property. First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Simla, dated the 10th April 1919.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., and Lala Balvant Rai, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. N. Kapur, for Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, and Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Simla, declaring Dina Nath, plaintiff-respondent, to be entitled to Rs. 10,000 deposited by his deceased uncle, Sham Lal, in the Alliance Bank of Simla, together with interest, and directing the said Bank to pay the total amount due, found to be Rs. 12,310-8-4 on the date of the decree, to the plaintiff. Musammat Uttam Devi, defendant-appellant, is the widow of Sham Lal, deceased.

In her appeal she asks that the declaratory decree to the effect that the money belongs to the plaintiff be set aside. She has not appealed against that part of the decree which directs the Bank to pay the sum found due to the plaintiff. She has stamped the memorandum of appeal with Rs. 10 stamp only, and a preliminary objection has been raised by Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent to the effect that the appeal is insufficiently stamped. It is contended that it should have been stamped ad valorem on the amount found to be due. Lala Badri Das on behalf of the appellant contends, on the other hand, that there was really no necessity for the plaintiff, in the first instance to pay Court-fees on the amount alleged to be due by the Bank and that it would have been sufficient for him to sue for a declaration that the money was due to him, and not to Musammat Uttam Devi. It is pointed out that the Bank was perfectly willing to pay the amount to any one adjudged by the Court to be entitled thereto. He also points out that all that the widow now wants is that the decree declaring the plaintiff to be entitled to the money should be set aside. He refers to Kirpal Singh v. Sant Singh (1). In that case the plaintiffs, two members of a joint Hindu family, sued defendant for recovery of Rs. 17,000 principal and Rs. 5,585 interest due on a bond in which the above plaintiffs alone were named as obligees. Defendant admitted execution of the bond and liability thereunder, but pleaded that the money was due to all the members of the joint family and also that he paid the other members of the family Rs. 10,400 on account. The First Court held that the other members of the joint family were not necessary parties and payments made to them need not be accounted for by plaintiffs and decreed the whole amount claimed. Defendant appealed to the Chief Court on a Rs. 10 Court-fee stamp alleging that the value for purposes of Court-fees could not be determined. It was held that, as regards the claim to have the decree of the First Court reduced by the payments amounting to Rs. 10,400, the appellant must pay ad valorem duty, but as regards the claim for a declaration as to who was entitled to receive the balance due, a Rs. 10 stamp was sufficient under Art. 17 VI, Schedule II, Court-Fees Act, In our opinion, though the facts are somewhat different from the present case, this authority is in point and the appellant, considering the nature of the appeal, has paid a sufficient Court-fee stamp. We, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection.

The plaintiff based his claim on the allegation that he and his uncle were members of a joint Hindu family and that his uncle adopted him as his son some thirty years before suit. He further alleged that the deposits made by Lala Sham Lal were made by him as a manager of the joint Hindu family out of the joint funds and that, therefore, he was entitled to the deposits as the surviving male member of the family and also on account of his adoption by Lala Sham Lal, the widow being entitled to maintenance only. It should be noted that the deposits were made by Lala Sham Lal in the Bank jointly in his own name and that of Musammat Uttam Devi, and were payable to either or to the survivor. Having regard to this, the Bank refused to pay the deposits, after the death of Sham Lal, to the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that Lala Sham Lal and the plaintiff were members of a joint Hindu family, and that plaintiff was adopted by Lala Sham Lal, and further that Lala Sham Lal did not, by making the deposits in the joint names of himself and his wife, intend to make a gift of the money to Musammat Uttam Devi.

These findings are traversed by Musammat Uttam Devi in her appeal. Lala Sham Lal was in Government service; and at the time of his death, on the 13th June 1914, was a Tahsildar under the Punjab Government. Dina Nath, the plaintiff, was living with his father-in-law in Ludhiana and was carrying on money-lending business there. He and his uncle were, therefore, living apart, and there was no commensality, and there would, therefore, be no strong presumption that they were joint. It was probably on this account that the onus of proving that they were members of a joint Hindu family was placed upon the plaintiff.

The learned Subordinate Judge has referred to the evidence, oral and documentary, at great length and it is not necessary for us to do the same. Counsel for the appellants has relied strongly upon the following facts:—

(1) that Lala Sham Lal built himself a house at his own expense at Solan on the Simla Hills;

(2) that Dina Nath carried on a money-lending business at Ludhiana, and

(3) that uncle and nephew lived apart.

Having regard to the fact that Lala Sham Lal was in Government employ and constantly had to move about, there is nothing very remarkable in the fact that his nephew (the plaintiff) did not live with him but preferred to live with his father-in-law. Lala Sham Lal enjoyed a separate income by reason of his official position, and the mere fact that he used a part of that in building a house at Solan would not go very far to show that he and his nephew were not members of a joint Hindu family. Similarly, we do not attach any importance to the fact that Dina Nath carried on a separate money-lending business at Ludhiana. There is ample evidence on the record to show that the uncle and nephew were on the most affectionate terms and that Lala Sham Lal got his nephew married. The letters referred to by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment at pages 64 and 65 of paper-book "A," (the original paper book) are very strong evidence in support of the plaintiff's contention that he and Lala Sham Lal formed a joint Hindu family. It is unnecessary for us to refer in detail to these letters. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that they show in a most conclusive manner that the uncle and nephew were joint.

The second point is, whether it is proved that Lala Sham Lal adopted Dina Nath as his son. As to this the learned Subordinate Judge says: "I find but with less certainty that plaintiff was adopted by Lala Sham Lal." There is no direct evidence of the adoption. The only evidence really is that of Rai Sansar Chand and of Bawa Sant Singh as to statements made by Lala Sham Lal to the effect that he had adopted Dina Nath. We think that it would be unsafe, merely on this evidence, to hold the adoption proved, especially in view of the fact that in none of the correspondence which passed between the uncle and the nephew did Lala Sham Lal refer to Dina Nath as his son; nor did he refer to his wife as the mother of Dina Nath; on the contrary, he referred to her as his aunt. Moreover, Dina Nath was the only other member of the family and, therefore, Sham Lal's heir and there was no necessity to adopt him. We have no hesitation in holding that the alleged adoption is not proved.

The history of the deposits in suit is given by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment at pages 67 and 68 of paper-book "A". The account of Sham Lal with the Bank of Upper India will be found in the supplementary paper-book "B" at page 74 et seq. This shows that the account began in April 1892. In October 1896 the credit side of the account totalled Rs. 3,338-11-8, and the debit side Rs. 1,136-2-7. In December 1898 the credits totalled Rs. 8,447, and the debits Rs. 1,136; in other words, there was a credit balance in Sham Lal's favour exceeding Rs. 7,300. In 1900 he made a further deposit of Rs. 500 and in May 1901 he deposited Rs. 1,000 and adding interest thereto there was a credit balance in his favour of Rs. 10,000 in July 1902. From that time on, the account remained about the same and on the 2nd of January 1914, Rs. 10,000 was transferred to Sham Lal's floating account. On the 8th of January 1914 he paid Rs. 10,000 by means of a cheque into the Alliance Bank of Simla and ordered it to be deposited in two accounts in the joint names of himself and of his wife. These are the deposits in dispute in the suit. It is admitted that Lala Jai Gopal, the father of Sham Lal, and the grandfather of Dina Nath, did not die until the year 1900. There is no presumption, much less proof, that during Jai Gopal's lifetime Lala Sham Lal was manager of the joint family or that he was able to handle the family money. There can be no presumption, in our opinion, that the deposits made by him during his father's lifetime in the Bank of Upper India were made out of the joint family money. After his father's death he may very well have added to his deposits out of his official income. He always kept this account separate and did not carry the amounts to his credit to the credit of the joint family funds. In Lakshman Mayaram v. Jamnabai (2) it was held that the acquisition of a distinct property by a member of an undivided Hindu family without the aid of joint funds is his self-acquired property, and is not subject to partition. Hindu Law texts regarding gains of science established it as a rule of Hindu Law that the ordinary gains of science are divisible, when such science has been imparted at the family expense, and acquired while receiving a family maintenance; but that it is otherwise when the science has been imparted at the expense of persons who are not members of the acquirer's family. When the Hindu texts speak of the "gain of science," they intend the special training for a particular profession which is the immediate source of the gains, and not the general elementary education which is the stepping stone to the acquisition of all science. Consequently, the property acquired by a Subordinate Judge who had received elementary education at the family expense, but a knowledge of law and judicial practice without such aid, is impartible. Now, in the present case there is no contention that Lala Sham Lal was specially educated at the family expense or that he received any different education from his brother, Sukhram Das, who was a Subordinate Government official. In accordance, therefore, with the 4 Bombay ruling [Lakshman Mayaram v. Jamnabai (2)], we hold that Sham Lal's acquisition, which he made as a Government servant, and which he kept quite separate from the joint family funds, is impartible and that he could deal with it as he chose. Similarly, in Metharam Ramrakhiomal v. Rewachand Ramrakhiomal (3), it was held that there is no authority in the Mitakshara for the contention that the gains made personally, and without the aid of the joint funds, by a member of a joint family, who received an ordinary education suitable to his position as a member of the family to which he belonged, should in law be regarded as partible, and not as his self-acquired property. We, therefore, hold that the deposits in question were the self-acquired property of Lala Sham Lal and cannot be regarded as joint family property. He was, therefore, authorised to deal with them as he thought fit and we see no reason to doubt that, at the time when he made these deposits in the Alliance Bank of Simla in the joint names of himself and of his wife, and made them payable to either or to the survivor, he intended that they should be a provision for his widow in case he died. We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to these deposits but that Musammat Uttam Devi is so entitled. We, therefore, accept the appeal and set aside as much of the lower Court's decree as declares plaintiff to be entitled to the amount of the deposits in suit with interest, and we direct that the plaintiff should pay Musammat Uttam Devi's costs in both the Courts.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), ss. 267, 180, 184—Building, construction of, with sanction—Power of Municipality to order demolition—"Estoppel," meaning of.

A Municipal Board is not debarred from taking action under section 267 of the U. P. Municipalities Act in the interests of public health solely because it has previously given sanction to the construction of a building under section 180 of the Act. Under section 184 no sanction operates as an estoppel or confers or extinguishes any right or disability. The term 'estoppel' used in section 184 is not confined to an estoppel against a plea of title to property, but also includes estoppel raised against a Municipal Board on the ground of its having granted any sanction under the preceding sections. [p. 778, col. 2.]

Municipality of Sholapur v. Abdul Wahab, 61 Ind. Cas. 428; 45 B. 797; 23 Bom. L. R. 244, distinguished.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Farrukhabad, dated the 2nd August 1921.

BABU LAL v. MUNICIPAL BOARD, FARRUKHABAD.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two connected appeals raise a question whether a Municipal Board has power, under section 267 of the U. P. Municipalities Act, to order the removal of a latrine for the construction of which it had previously given permision. The plaintiff's latrine is of the kind known as sandas. It originally opened on the east side of the house and was cleaned from that side. In January 1919 he applied for permission to re-construct it so that it should open on the south side of the house. This application was made under section 178 of the U. P. Municipalities Act and permission was granted by the Public Works Committee on 15th February 1919. The proposed alterations were thereupon carried out. About eight months afterwards, a complaint was made to the Municipal Board that the latrine, as altered, gave forth a very unsavoury smell and constituted a public nuisance and a danger to the health of the persons living in the neighbourhood. The Board were satisfied after inspection by the Health Officer that this was the case and they thereupon issued notice to the plaintiff under section 267 of the Act to close the latrine. This suit was then instituted by the plaintiff praying for a declaration that the resolution of the Municipal Board ordering his latrine to be closed was not authorised by law, and for an injunction restraining the Municipal Board from taking any steps in respect of it.

The suit has been dismissed by the Court below. The plaintiff appeals and pleads that the action of the Municipal Board was ultra vires. The appellant relies on a decision of the Bombay High Court in Municipality of Sholapur v. Abdul Wahab (1), and argues on general grounds that very great injustice may result if it is held to be within the competence of a Municipal Board to order the demolition of a building or part of a building the erection of which it has previously sanctioned. The Bombay case is not quite on all fours with the present case as the Municipality formally revoked a sanction to build which it had previously granted. The case was, moreover, decided on a construction of section 96 of the Bombay Municipal Act the provisions of which, though generally similar to those of the U. P. Municipalities Act, are not identical.

As regards the second plea, there is no doubt that great hardship might be caused if the Municipal Board abused its powers under the Act. This must necessarily be the case whenever a public body is entrusted with wide statutory powers. At the same time, very grave public inconvenience might equally arise if a Municipal Board is held to be debarred from taking action against what is undoubtedly a nuisance because, on some previous occasion, it had sanctioned the erection of the building from which the nuisance proceeds. The case must be decided, not on general considerations but on a construction of the Municipalities Act in force in these Provinces. It is impossible to point to any provision in this Act which debars a Municipal Board from taking action under section 267 in the interests of the public health solely because it has previously given sanction to the construction of the building in question under section 180 of the Act. On the contrary, there is an express provision in section 184 that no sanction shall operate as an estoppel or confer or extinguish any right or disability. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the reference to estoppel refers only to an estoppel against a plea of title to property, but the words used are very wide and, taken in their ordinary meaning, certainly do provide that no estoppel shall be raised against a Municipal Board on the ground of its having granted any sanction under the preceding sections. It may be added that the lower Appellate Court finds as a fact that the latrine as it now exists does amount to a nuisance, and, therefore, the order complained of was in fact a proper order, though the Municipal Board acted without sufficient care in originally granting sanction for the alteration of the latrine. I agree with the Court below that the notice issued by the Municipal Board was within its statutory powers and I accordingly dismiss the appeals with costs.

Although the Lohars of Jagadhari, in the Ambala District, do not observe the Muhammadan Law in all matters of inheritance, and among them a widow is not competent to alienate except for necessity, there are no restrictions on the powers of alienation by male proprietors.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 25th July 1922, confirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Ambala, dated the 16th and 19th April 1922.

Mr. W. B. O'Connor, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs have sued to contest the sale of a shop effected by their father and uncle, who were Lohars of the town of Jagadhari in the Ambala District. The suit has been dismissed, the Court's finding being that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the power of a male proprietor among Lohars of Jagadhari to alienate ancestral property is a restricted one. The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal, having obtained a certificate from the District Judge on the questions of custom.

There are also cross-objections by the vendee with regard to his costs in the First Court which were not allowed.

I agree with the learned District Judge that, although the Lohars of Jagadhari do not observe the Muhammadan Law in all matters of inheritance, and although it appears that among them a widow is not competent to alienate except for necessity, it does not follow that the custom prevailing among the agriculturists is applicable to alienations by male proprietors, and the onus is on the plaintiffs to prove that male proprietors have not an unlimited power of alienation. That being so, the suit must clearly fail. There is only one piece of evidence which lends support to the claim of the plaintiffs, namely, a judgment given by Mr. Hurry, Divisional Judge, on the 3rd September 1901, in which he held that the Lohars of Jagadhari followed the custom by which a proprietor could not alienate ancestral property except for necessity. That decision, however, is of practically no value as it proceeded solely on the ground that custom was shown to be followed in respect of alienations by widows and in matters of inheritance. A judgment of Major Roe, District Judge, given in 1915, in which he held that an alienation by male proprietors could not be contested, is of greater weight though that decision was an obiter dictum. At any rate, the plaintiffs have entirely failed to discharge the onus which lay upon them, and the appeal must fail. There does not appear to be any reason for not allowing the defendant Fateh Muhammad the costs incurred by him in the First Court, I accordingly dismiss the appeal, and accepting the cross-objections direct that the plaintiffs shall pay Fateh Muhammad's costs in all the Courts.

Appellate Court—Judgment of reversal, contents of.

Where the judgment of an Appellate Court reverses the judgment of the Trial Court, it is absolutely necessary that good grounds should be shown for coming to any finding of fact. There ought, at any rate, to be sufficient material in the judgment to show that the evidence, and the reasons given by the Trial Court, have been duly considered in coming to a contrary decision.

Second appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Manbhum, Sambalpur, dated the 18th September 1920.

Messrs. S. N. Dutta, S. K. Mitter and S. C. Mitter, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. C. Mozumdar, for Mr. Joturmoy Chatterji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit giving rise to this second appeal was a suit for recovery of certain lands which previously had been the jote of one Moheswar Banerji. In execution of a decree against Moheswar, the lands were sold and purchased by one Punchanan in 1899. Punchanan sold the lands to the wife of Moheswar; and, according to the plaintiffs, Biseswari made the purchase farzi on behalf of one of the three sons of Moheswar, namely, Ramsadai. According to the plaintiff's story, Ramsadai having obtained a deed of relinquishment from Biseswari surrendered the lands to the plaintiffs, his landlords, in 1325. The plaintiffs took possession but were subsequently dispossessed by the defendant. "The defendant admitted the case of the plaintiffs up to the point where Biseswari Debi purchased from Punchanan; but, according to his case, Biseswari bought as farzidar for her husband Moheswar and the lands devolved, after Biseswari's death, to the three sons of Moheswar. It was asserted that Ramsadai, therefore, had no power to surrender the entire lands and contended that the lands in suit were not the lands which had been transferred to Biseswari.

The learned Munsif in a careful judgment held that the lands in suit were the lands transferred as alleged by the plaintiffs and were included within jote Kachulong. He held further that the purchase by Biseswari was a purchase on behalf of Moheswar and that, therefore, Moheswar's three sons would inherit the lands and Ramsadai would not have any power to surrender them to the landlords. He expressed grave doubt as to the bona fide character of the surrender by Ramsadai, thinking it possible that the landlords, knowing that they should not obtain the lands by sale, had invented a means of obtaining them by getting a release from one of the three brothers.

The learned Subordinate Judge has agreed with the Munsif with regard to the identity of the lands; but, having come to that finding, he proceeds to discuss the other points in the case and that part of his judgment which deals with law. He has taken a view on very scanty, if any, reasons for disagreement. In fact he merely states that, from evidence adduced in the case, there cannot be any doubt that the disputed land became the property of Ramsadai by virtue of these transfers. But he does not tell us what that evidence is and why that evidence had a different effect in his opinion to the effect which it had in the opinion of the Munsif. He says, "Bepin admits in his evidence that whoever will get kobala will be sole owner." I cannot see how this affects the case. The kobala was in the hands of Biseswari. Then, later, he says "Bepin's statement proves plaintiff's case." He does not tell us what that statement of Bepin is or whether it is to be found in the evidence. Further on he says: "But it has been satisfactorily proved that the other sons had no interest in the rent-paying lands which came to Ramsadai alone by virtue of the deed of release by his mother." The Munsif had found to the contrary and the learned Subordinate Judge has not shown us how the evidence satisfied him in this direction. Further, he says that "no fraud or collusion has been proved in respect of the surrender." Here, too, he does not give any reasons for differing from the Munsif. The portion of his judgment which deals with the points in dispute is, in my opinion, not a judgment in accordance with law and is certainly of no help to this Court to come to any finding whether the decision he has come to, in short sentences is correct in law. In a judgment of reversal it is absolutely necessary that good grounds should be shown for coming to any finding of fact. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge may be right but there is not sufficient material in his judgment to show this Court that he has considered the evidence and duly considered the reasons given by the Munsif in his judgment for coming to a contrary decision.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and the case must be remanded for a re-hearing of the appeal and for judgment according to law. The appellant will get costs in this Court.

Parties—Suit by assignee of bond—Assignor whether necessary party—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Party not necessary for decision of suit, joinder of, after limitation, effect of.

The assignor of a bond, who has received consideration for the transfer, is not a necessary party to a suit brought by the assignee to recover on the bond. If the presence of a party, who is added after the prescribed period, is not necessary to enable the Court to award such relief as may be given in the suit framed by the plaintiff, and he is joined ex majore cautella, the suit is not barred merely because limitation had expired at the time when he was impleaded.

Petition for revision of a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Gurdaspore, dated 27th July 1922.

Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the assignee of a bond executed by Hari Ram, defendant No. 1, on the 2nd November 1915, in favour of another Hari Ram, defendant No. 2. Now, it is beyond dispute that the suit as brought against these two defendants was within limitation; but the Subordinate Judge, dissenting from the Munsif, held that, as the bond was executed in favour of defendant No. 2 in his capacity as the agent of Musammat Dhan Devi, and as that lady was impleaded after the expiry of the period of limitation, the suit was barred by time. The learned Judge has, in my opinion, entirely misunderstood the case as presented by the plaintiff in the Court of first instance. He never asked the Court to implead Musammat Dhan Devi, his contention on the other hand was that Musammat Dhan Devi was not a necessary party. The learned Vakil for the plaintiff argues that the suit as brought by him should have been dismissed if the Court was of opinion that the non-joinder of Musammat Dhan Devi was a fatal defect. Considering that Musammat Dhan Devi admits that she had authorised her agent to transfer the bond in favour of the plaintiff and that she had received consideration for the transfer, I have no hesitation in holding that she was not a necessary party and that the suit was rightly decreed by the Trial Court.

Section 22 of the Indian Limitation Act does not lay down that a joinder after the period of limitation shall in all cases necessarily involve a dismissal of the suit. If the presence of a party added after the prescribed period is not necessary to enable the Court to award such relief as may be given in the suit framed by the plaintiff, and he is joined ex majore cautella, the suit is not barred merely because limitation had expired at the time when he was impleaded. Further, this section provides that the suit shall, as regards the added party, be deemed to have been instituted when he was so impleaded. Now, the plaintiff does not claim any relief against Musamma Dhan Devi, and I fail to see why his action against the executant of the bond should be held to be barred by time.

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge

Dr. H. S. Gour, Messrs. M. B. Niyogi and P. N. Rudra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Vithoba, who died in 1899, adopted Daulat, the defendant, in this case. Plaintiff's story is that his mother Rukhma was the pat wife of Vithoba and that he was born after Daulat's adoption. Before he came of age he lived sometimes with his maternal uncle and sometimes with the defendant and after attaining majority the same continued; that in 1916 the defendant denied the plaintiff's right to share in his father's property and hence the present suit.

It was pleaded for the defence that Rukhma had been divorced by Vithoba before the birth of the plaintiff and that the plaintiff was not the son of Vithoba.

In the First Court the plaintiff won his case and obtained a decree for four-fifths of the property of Vithoba in the possession of the defendant. On appeal the lower Appellate Court has, after a very careful consideration of the evidence on record and the probabilities of the case, found as established the following facts:—

"(1) that the mother of the plaintiff, before the birth of the plaintiff, left her husband's home and since then neither she nor her subsequently born son, the plaintiff, ever went and lived with Vithoba and his family;

(2) that the plaintiff lived and was brought up in his maternal grandfather's house;

(3) that the plaintiff was married from the house of his maternal relatives and that Vithoba did not take the plaintiff to his house and marry him;

(4) that the plaintiff was married to the daughter of a poor labourer much beneath the station in life of Vithoba;

(5) that the admittedly legitimate son of Vithoba born after the plaintiff named Sonaji, which was the name of the plaintiff."

The Judge held that these facts, combined with other evidence, lead to the inference that plaintiff was never recognised and treated by Vithoba as his son; that though the boy was born some 12 years before Vithoba's death, neither he nor his mother were taken to Vithoba's house and the fact of two sons reputed to be of the same father bearing the same name was impossible. The suit was dismissed and against that dismissal the present appeal is filed.

The first point urged for the appellant is, that the first issue wrongly throws on the plaintiff the task of establishing his legitimacy. This is true and the burden of proof has been wrongly laid. But where the parties have led evidence and the Court has, on that evidence, material to go upon for deciding any disputed point the question of the burden of proof is not very pertinent. As their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked in Seturatnam Aiyar v. Venkatachela Gounden (1): "The controversy had passed the stage at which discussion as to the burden of proof was pertinent; the relevant facts were before the Court, and all that remained for decision was, what inference should be drawn from them." Dealing with this question the Judges in Krishna Kisor De v. Nagendrabala Chaudhurani (2) state:—"Where evidence has been adduced by both the parties and the relevant facts are before the Court, the question of burden of proof, as pointed out by Viscount Haldane in Kundan Lal v. Begam-un-nisa (3), and by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Seturatnam Aiyar v. Venkatachela Gounden (1), become immaterial, and importance should not be attached to the question on whom the initial onus lay; in such circumstances, the question of the burden of proof is really not pertinent."

Objection is taken to the finding of the lower Appellate Court as regards the document, Exhibit P-1, executed by Vithoba on 6th February 1893. In that document he names Daulat and gives him certain property because its executant had a son born to him. The defence story is that that son is Maroti while the plaintiff says that the son referred to in that document is himself. The defendant produced in Court the Vaccination Register. That shows an entry No. 15, of the vaccination of a child by name Maroti, son of Vithoba, aged 10 months. The Judge writes as regards this: "On which date the vaccination was made does not appear from the register. Under the entry No. 17 the date of vaccination is shown to be 18th May 1894. From this date it is stated that the plaintiff is the son referred to in the document, Exhibit P-1. Vithoba had admittedly other sons born to him and the age in the Vaccination Register is given by andaz and if the age of the boy is considered to be 16 months, then he must be in existence in February when the deed of gift was executed. So it cannot be said that it refers to the plaintiff and not to the other son."

The argument for the appellant is based on the fact, if the child was Maroti, he could not have been born on the date of the document taking the date 18th May 1894 as the starting point. That date does not refer to the vaccination of Maroti but to another vaccination and there is little force in the argument advanced on this point.

Objection was also taken to the Court having taken into consideration the statements made by persons now deceased in the mutation proceedings. But it seems to me that the statements were rightly admitted and it is pointed out that the Judge, writing of P. W. No. 2's evidence, made a mistake because the witness did not say that Rukhma lived with Vithoba all the time, and arguments have been based on the misquotation in the judgment of the evidence of P. W. No. 9. These mistakes do not vitiate the judgment of the lower Appellate Court who has considered the evidence on record with care and has drawn proper inferences therefrom.

The facts found, as stated early in the judgment, make the story of the plaintiff extremely improbable. The fact that a subsequent son of Vithoba's was called by the name as the plaintiff unquestionably shows that the plaintiff was not looked on by Vithoba as his son. Two sons of the same father, as far as my experience goes, are never given the same first name. The material findings upon which the decision of this case turns are pure findings of fact and as there is nothing to vitiate them they will stand. The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellant will pay the respondent's costs.

Lala Faqir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Subordinate Judge has set aside a sale of land effected in execution of a decree without any inquiry into the objection which was made to the sale. This he was not competent to do. A sale may be set aside under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, on the ground of a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it, but the irregularity or fraud must be proved, and the Court must also be satisfied that the person applying to have the sale set aside has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity or fraud. The objection put forward in this case was that there had been no sale at the spot and Mr. Faqir Chand contends that there was, as a matter of fact, no sale and that the bids were fictitious. This objection must be inquired into before the sale can be set aside.

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Shahjahanpur, dated the 22nd August 1921.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the redemption of a mortgage effected by the plaintiffs, Badri and Kidar, in favour of the defendant on the 23rd of December 1915. The mortgage was effected for a sum of Rs. 135, which was re-payable with interest at 2 per cent. per mensem compoundable with monthly rests. The plaintiffs pleaded that they never agreed to pay interest at 2 per cent. per mensem with monthly rest, and that the above term was entered in the bond without their knowledge. They further pleaded that the interest claimed was, in any case, hard and unconscionable. The Trial Court found that there was no proof of undue influence exercised by the creditor and that the terms entered in the bonds were binding on the plaintiffs. It decreed the entire claim of the plaintiffs accordingly. The lower Appellate Court, however, refused to allow interest at the stipulated rate with monthly rests. It observed that the plaintiffs were illiterate persons and ignorant of the technicalities of law or legal expression, and that they could not be expected to have fully realised the stipulation entered in the mortgage in regard to the payment of compound interest with monthly rests. The stipulation was undoubtedly unusual, hard and unconscionable; and probably had its effect been fully realised by the plaintiffs at the time the mortgage-deed was written they would not have agreed to the transaction. It can not be said that the debtor entered into it with open eyes, for the lower Appellate Court finds, that he was, by reason of his illiteracy and ignorance of legal technicalities, unable to realise the effect of the same. A Court of Equity may, therefore, relieve him and grant such relief as the circumstances of the case may require. The decision in Ghansham Singh v. Bhola Singh (1) does not apply, because the question here is whether the executants understood and realised the effect of the terms entered in the mortgage-deed, the finding on which is against the plaintiffs. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Where joint ancestral property has passed out of the joint family either under a conveyance executed by the father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debtor or under a sale in the execution of a decree for the father's debt, the sons cannot recover that property unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes and the purchaser had notice that they were so contracted.

Want of legal necessity is not a sufficient ground to defeat an auction-purchaser or his assignee of the rights acquired by virtue of the auction-sale. [p. 786, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 13th of January 1922.

Mr. Kamuda Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. K. Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to a portion of plot No. 44 khasra situated in the village Pipri. That portion belonged to a joint family consisting of Salik Pande and his sons Ram Jag and Gajadhar. Salik Pande was the manager of the joint family. On the 2nd of July 1890 he and his son Ram Jag made a simple mortgage of the said property in favour of Jagannath. Subsequently, on the 31st of Janaury 1900, he and his co-sharers mortgaged their entire plot No. 44 khasra with Mangru and gave him possession. In 1903, Jagannath filed a suit for the recovery of the money due on his mortgage and obtained a decree in execution of which he purchased the mortgaged property. The other son and grandsons of Salik Pande were not made parties to that suit. Jagannath sold the share purchased by him to Jadubir Pande who got mutation of names effected in his favour in the revenue papers in respect of the same.

The present suit was filed by one of the sons and some of the grandsons of Salik Pande for a declaration that the mortgage and auction-sale aforesaid were not binding on them and for the maintenance of their possession over the same. Their allegation was, that the mortgage in question was made without any legal necessity and that they had since acquired the rights of Mangru by paying the money due to him on the subsequent mortgage of the 31st of January 1900. The defendant Jadubir Pande opposed the claim on the ground that he had purchased the property in question in satisfaction of a prior mortgage which was made for a valid family necessity. He denied that the plaintiff was in proprietary possession of the disputed property and pleaded that the claim was barred by limitation and section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The Courts below repelled those contentions and decreed the claim.

They found that the plaintiffs were in possession of the disputed property by virtue of their redemption of the subsequent mortgage and that the contesting defendant-appellant had failed to establish that the mortgage of the 2nd of July 1890 was made for a legal necessity.

They, however, overlooked the fact that the mortgaged property had already been sold in satisfaction of that mortgage, and rights of a third party had come into existence, which could not be displaced unless the sons and grandsons of Salik Pande, the mortgagor, were prepared to establish that the mortgage in question was made for illegal or immoral purposes. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lal (1), where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt the sons cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted. In Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) their Lordships re-affirmed that view The sale was a public sale, which could have been prevented by the plaintiffs, had they taken steps in time, by an assertion of their rights. They took no such steps and they cannot now be permitted to defeat the rights acquired by a third party by simply questioning the transaction entered into by the head of the family, of which they were members. The Courts below erred in throwing the onus on the defendants, as if no sale had taken place, and the rights of the third party had not come into existence. It is no use sending the case back for disposal because in the plaint there was no allegation that the debt in question was incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. All that was said was, that the mortgage was not taken for family necessity, but that ground is not enough to defeat the auction-purchaser or his assignee of the rights acquired by virtue of the auction-sale. The subsequent redemption made by the plaintiffs of the puisne mortgage cannot give them any higher title. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the claim of the plaintiffs dismissed with costs here and hitherto.

Injunction to restrain arbitration—Award filed in Court, effect of.

An injunction cannot be granted where the thing sought to be prevented has been done and cannot be undone. For instance, an injunction cannot be granted restraining the opposite party from proceeding with an arbitration, where it is found that the arbitration proceedings have already been held, and an award has been made and filed in Court. In such a case the Court is entitled to take into consideration events which have happened pending the suit or appeal.

First appeal from a decree of the Sub-Judge, Delhi, dated the 28th January 1920.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellants.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the plaintiffs stated that the defendants, professing to act in terms of a contract between the plaintiffs and defendants, had given notice to the plaintiffs threatening to appoint arbitrators to decide alleged disputed questions under the contract. They asserted that there was in fact no contract; and in the alternative that, if a contract had been entered into, it was bad on account of fraud or misrepresentation. They asked (a) for a dec aration that the defendants had no right to appoint arbitrators, there being no contract or the contract being void, and (b) for an in junction restraining the defendants from nominating an arbitrator on behalf of the plaintiffs and from proceeding with the arbitration.

The lower Court held that no injunction could be granted in view of section 56 (i) of the Specific Relief Act, and that the plaintiffs being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration, i. e., cancellation of the contract, were not entitled to the declaration prayed for. On these preliminary points the suit was dismissed and the plaintiffs have appealed.

The first thing which we have to consider is, the effect of events subsequent to the judgment under appeal. The arbitrators have been appointed, arbitration proceedings have been held, an award has been delivered and it has been filed in Court under section 11 (2) of the Indian Arbitration Act. So far, therefore, as the injunction is concerned, the p aintiffs-appellants can have no relief now. The thing sought to be prevented has been done and cannot be undone.

As regards the declaration, the plaintiffs, after delivery of the award in January 1921, filed a second suit for cancellation of the award which is of a very comprehensive character and in which all questions relating to the existence and validity of the contract have been placed in issue. This suit was decided by the learned Subordinate Judge, Delhi, upon certain preliminary issues but we have set aside his judgment on appeal [Jai Narain-Babu Lal v. Narain Das-Jaini Mal (1), Civil Appeal No. 2216 of 1921] and have remanded the case for a fresh decision on the above-mentioned questions. In these circumstances, it appears to us useless to send the present suit back for re-trial. The plaintiffs did ask for a consequential relief, i. e., an injunction, and when they alleged that the contract did not exist, they were not bound to ask, simultaneously, for it to be cancelled. Thus, the lower Court was probably wrong in dismissing the prayer for declaration for the reasons stated by it. At the same time, in view of the altered situation, we are not prepared to complicate matters further by reversing the decision under appeal. The plaintiffs can secure in the subsequent suit all relief which they could possibly obtain on their claim now under consideration, and it is unnecessary for them now to ask for the discretion of the Court to be exercised in their favour in the first suit

We dismiss the appea , but order parties to bear their own costs, since it is doubtful whether the lower Court's decision was correct and our order is based on the change of circumstances.

The period of limitation for a suit against a sipurd-dar, or temporary Officer of the Court in charge of attached property, for the return of the property by the successful objecting owner of the property is thirty ye rs under Art. 145 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and commences to run from the date when the Court orders the return of the property to the owner, as the relationship of depositor and depositary is created between the owner of the property and the sipurd-dar on that date. [p. 788, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Appeal No. 152 of 1921, decided on the 28th January 1922.

LAKSHMICHAND v. DULICHAND.

Messrs. M. B. Kinkhede, R. B., and M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. K. Padhye, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts with which we are concerned in this case are as follows: On the 28th of November 1914 certain standing crops belonging to the plaintiff-appellant Lakshmichand were attached in execution of a decree against another person who was originally a defendant in the suit but has by this time rightly been allowed to drop out of it. On the same day, under the provisions of rr. 44 and 45 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, these crops were put in the custody of the defendant-respondent Dulichand, on behalf of the Court and were subsequently garnered by him. Lakshmichand put in an objection in the Court which had made the attachment and that Court passed an order on the 15th of January 1916 that the attachment should be raised, finding that the crops were the property of the objector Lakshmichand. This, of course, necessarily included an order on Dulichand, the sipurd-dar, or temporary officer of the Court in charge of the attached property, to return it to Lakshmichand.

2. Lakshmichand, however, took no immediate steps to enforce the order, and the decree-holder who had obtained the attachment, filed a suit on the 8th of March 1916 for a declaration that the crops were the property of his judgment-debtor and liable to be sold for the satisfaction of his decree. He succeeded in the First Court but the decree was set aside in appeal and that appellate decree was confirmed by this Court. Now Dulichand, the temporary officer of the Court who was in charge of the property, was very strongly and very naturally in sympathy with Dulichand, the attaching creditor, who not only bore the same name but was the same person. Confusion of thought arising out of this dual personality is very common in cases of this nature and traces of it are to be found here. Out of his natural sympathy with the decree-holder the sipurd-dar retained the property, and through his inability to realise that the sipurd-dar and the decree-holder were two different persons the owner of the property refrained from enforcing the order for its return against the latter till he filed the present suit on the 27th of April 1921.

3. Lakshmichand seems all along to have laboured under the impression that the order for restoration was not enforceable against the sipurd-dar till the suit filed against him by the decree-holder had been decided in all the three Courts through which the majority of suits in India pass, and that suit was not finally decided in this Court till the 30th of April 1920. The plaint he did eventually file certainly does not make it perfectly clear that he is suing the sipurd-dar and not the attaching creditor, especially as the judgment-debtor was joined as a defendant, though no relief was claimed against him. Perusal of the plaint, however, shows that it was in essence a suit against the sipurd-dar, and it only requires very slight verbal amendments, which would have to be allowed if they are necessary, to make this perfectly clear.

4. The reason given by the learned District Judge for repelling the contention that Art. 145 of the Limitation Act governed the case is that the crops passed into the possession of the Court when they were attached and the possession of Dulichand was on behalf of the Court and "no relationship of depositor and depositary was created between plaintiff and defendant No. 1 on the appointment as sipurd-dar of the attached property." That relationship was, however, created between them when the Court ordered the return of the property to Lakshmichand on the 15th of January 1916. In this view, it becomes apparent that the period of limitation for the suit is that stated in Art. 145 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act, which is thirty years, and that that period began to run on the 15th of January 1916. The suit has been decided in both the Courts below on the preliminary plea of limitation, as the defendant reserved all his pleas on the merits till that had been decided. It must, therefore, be remanded for a fresh decision on the merits. The costs so far incurred in this and the lower Appellate Court will be treated as costs in the suit.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XLI, r. 6 (2)—Execution of decree—Stay of sale—Order, nature of—Appeal, whether lies—Court, duty of.

An order relating to the stay of sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree made under O. XLI, r. 6 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, falls within the purview of section 47 of the Code and is appealable.

Subramania Pillai v. Kumaravelu Ambalam, 33 Ind. Cas. 66; 39 M. 541 relied on.

When an application to stay a sale is made under O. XLI, r. 6 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, it is incumbent on the Court to stay the sale on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as the Court thinks fit. An order directing that the sale be stayed on condition that the decretal amount is deposited and paid to the decree-holders who are not required to furnish security, is against the spirit of the rule as it is tantamount to an order refusing to stay the sale.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 1st August 1922.

Lala Fakir Chand, for Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Appellants.

Lala Anant Ram Khosla, for Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—An order having been made for the sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree, the judgment-debtors, whose appeal from the decree is pending, applied to the Executing Court under O. XLI, r. 6 (2), Civil Procedure Code, for the stay of the sale. That Court has ordered that the sale be stayed on condition that the decretal amount is deposited and paid to the decree-holders who are not required to furnish security. The judgment-debtors have appealed from the order.

It is contended for the respondents that no appeal lies, and Janardan Trimbak Gadre v. Martand Trimbak Gadre (1) is cited in support of this contention It is also pointed out that the words "stay of execution," which occurred in section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, have been omitted in the corresponding section 47 of the present Code. But the words may have been omitted because they were regarded as superfluous, as was remarked in Subramania Pillai v. Kumaravelu Ambalam (2), and in that case the learned Judges said that they were not satisfied that the omission of the words in section 47 of the present Code was any indication that matters relating to stay of execution were not within the section. I do not see how the question whether execution of a decree should be stayed can be said to be not a matter relating to the execution. I hold that matters relating to stay of execution fall within section 47, and that the lower Court's order is appealable.

It was incumbent on the lower Court, under O. XLI, r. 6 (2), to stay the sale on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as the Court thought fit until the appeal was disposed of. The order which the lower Court has passed is clearly against the spirit of that rule, as it is tantamount to an order refusing to stay the sale.

Counsel for the respondents urges that on an application of the appellants an interim order was passed by this Court on the 9th February 1922 staying the sale on condition that they paid into Court the decretal amount, which was not paid to the decree-holders till further orders unless the latter gave security, and that that interim order was discharged on the 6th July because the condition laid down in it had not been complied with. But the appellants failure to fulfil the condition laid down in the interim order is immaterial because the sale of the property had not been ordered when that interim order was made. As soon as the sale was ordered, the appellants had the right, under O. XLI, r. 6 (2) of the Code, to have it stayed.

I accept the appeal and direct that the sale of the immoveable property attached be stayed until the appeal is disposed of on condition that the appellants furnish

Under section 34 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, the date of the adjudication is the point with reference to which it should be determined whether the recovery of a debt is barred by time or not. [p. 794, col. 1.]

When a debt is held to be provable within the meaning of the foregoing section, it is still open to the Court to reject the application for entering the name of the creditor on the schedule, on grounds other than that of the debt being barred by limitation.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 21st February 1923.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

Wazir Hasan, A. J. C.—(July 2, 1923.)—This is an appeal against an order passed in an insolvency proceeding under Act V of 1920 by the District Judge of Lucknow. The respondents held a decree for a sum of Rs. 10,727 11-7 against one Agha Saiyed Mujtaba Khan, who died during the pendency of the proceeding in the Court below. They applied for the execution of their decree against the assets of the deceased Agha Saiyed Mujtaba Khan. The Court seized of the execution refused to proceed with the application on the ground that the decree-holders had not obtained permission for execution of the decree under section 16 of Act III of 1907, that is, the Provincial Insolvency Act before it was re-placed by the subsequent Act V of 1920

On the 3rd October 1922 the respondents applied to the Insolvency Court for permission to proceed with the execution of their decree under section 28, clause (2), of Act V of 1920. This application was disposed of by the learned District Judge by his order dated the 21st February 1923, which is the subject-matter of appeal in this Court. The appellants, who are the sons of the deceased insolvent, objected to the permission being granted or to the entry of the respondents in the schedule of creditors on the ground that the application for execution was barred by limitation. The learned District Judge has, by his order already mentioned, rejected the objection lodged by the appellants The argument in appeal is that the decree being barred by limitation no permission to proceed with its execution should have been granted nor should the respondents have been entered in the schedule of creditors of the deceased insolvent.

It is obvious that the subject-matter of dispute between the parties is the decree which the respondents hold as against the assets of the deceased insolvent and the value of that decree is over ten thousand rupees. This being so, this appeal should originally have been fixed for hearing before a Bench of two Judges In any event, I think it is a fit case to be so heard. I certify accordingly.

Messrs. Niamat Ullah and Ghulam Husain Naqvi, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Bisheshar Nath Srivastava and Mahesh Prasad, for Respondents No. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under the Provincial Insolvency (Act V of 1920) from an order of the District Judge of Lucknow, dated the 21st of February 1923. So much of the facts as are necessry for the disposal of this appeal are stated in the order of reference made by one of us on the 2nd July 1923 Two points were urged in support of the appeal:—

(1) that the debt was not provable within the provisions of section 34, sub-section (2) of the Act, and

(2) that even if provable, the names of the creditors should not be entered in the schedule.

As regards the first point, it was urged that the recovery of the judgment-debt was barred by limitation; in other words, that an application for execution of the decree awarding the debt under consideration would be barred by limitation if it were made in a Court of civil jurisdiction. We think that the point of time with reference to which the question as to whether the recovery of a debt is barred by time or not should be determined is the date of the adjudication. The language used in sub-section (2) of section 34 is, in our judgment, perfectly clear on this point. It says: —"All debts and liabilities, present or future, certain or contingent, to which the debtor is subject when he is adjudged an insolvent shall be deemed to be debts provable under his Act." It is admitted that the recovery of the debt was not barred on the date of the adjudication. We, therefore, overrule the first point of the argument.

As regards the second point, it may be said that when a debt is held to be provable within the meaning of section 34, sub-section (2) of the Act it is still open to the Court to reject the application for entering the name of the creditor on the schedule. It would not, however, be possible to reject it on the ground that the recovery of the debt is barred by limitation. There may be grounds other than that on which the application may be rejected, and it will still be open for the learned Judge of the Insolvency Court either to accept or reject the application on grounds other than that of the debt being barred by limitation. We express no opinion on that point. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Execution of decree—Sale—Stay of sale pending appeal—Property to remain under attachment—Stay of sale, whether justified.

Civil appeal under O. XLI, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code, for stay of execution proceedings.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These are two applications for stay of execution proceedings under O. XLI, r. 5 of the Civil Procedure Code. It appears that on the 26th May 1920 the decree-holders, Manphul Singh and others, obtained a decree for Rs. 10,000 against certain judgment-debtors who are now represented by defendants No. 8 to 10 from the Court of Senior Subordinate Judge, Hissar. In execution of this decree they attached certain property which the plaintiff says is his and that it is consequently not liable to attachment and sale. He filed certain objections which were disallowed. Thereupon, he brought the present usual declaratory suits that the property should not be sold in execution of the decree obtained by the decree-holders against the judgment-debtors. The suits were dismissed. Appeals have been lodged against these decrees and are now pending in this Court. The decree-holders have, in the meantime, applied for the execution of the decree.

In my opinion, the execution proceedings ought to be stayed. If the plaintiff succeeds in his appeals and the property is sold away and passes out of his hand before the appeals are decided, it will become very difficult, if not impossible, for him to recover it back. The case is fully covered by the case reported as Radha Balab v. Singh v. Sewa Ram (1). The decree-holders will have sufficient security in the property itself which will remain under attachment. I confirm the order passed on 27th October 1922, and direct that the property in suit shall not be sold pending decision of the appeals in this Court, and that it shall remain under attachment. The decree-holders shall, however, be at liberty to execute their decree as to costs. An early date should be fixed for the disposal of the two appeals.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Azamgarh, reversing that of the Munsif, Hawali.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad for the Appellants.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The two Appeals Nos. 1333 and 1334 are connected, inasmuch as they arise out of one suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants to pre-empt certain property conveyed by Moti Saran and Musammat Sona Kunwar to the contesting defendants. The claim was resisted on the ground, among others, that the custom of pre-emption alleged in the plaint did not obtain in the village in which the property sold was situate. In support of the alleged custom of pre-emption the plaintiffs-appellants produced the wajib-ul-arz of the village. The learned Munsif accepted the recital in the wajib-ul-arz as evidence of the custom stated in the plaint and decreed the claim. On appeal by the vendees, the learned District Judge construed the clause relating to the transfer of a share by a co-sharer in the village differently. He was of opinion that the phraseology of the clause upon which reliance was placed by the pre-emptors negatived their allegation as regards the custom of pre-emption. The appeal was, therefore, allowed and the decree of the First Court was set aside and the claim of the pre-emptors was dismissed.

In appeal before us it is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants, the pre-emptors, that the learned District Judge has not interpreted the clause of the wajib-ul-arz relating to the transfer of property by a co-sharer correctly. The clause upon which reliance is placed is to the effect that in case of a transfer by a co-sharer of his share by sale or mortgage he must gave preference to his co-sharers over a stranger. It further goes on to say that in case a mortgage given by a co-sharer has matured and the mortgagor is unable for want of funds to redeem the mortgage, any of his co-sharers can pay off the mortgage and retain the share so redeemed until the original mortgagor is in a position to pay his co-sharer. Wajib-ul-arz of this kind have come up before this Court more than once, and it has been held that the terms that we find in the present wajib-ul-arz do not go to show that they are a record of custom. A reported case on this point is that of Surajbali Singh v. Mohammad Nasir (1). The wajib-ul-arz in the reported case was also in similar terms to the one before us. In the reported case, on interpreting the wajib-ul-arz before them, the learned Judges of this Court held that the entry in the wajib-ul-arz on the very face of it disproved the existence of the custom. The clause relied upon by the plaintiffs-appellants, when read as a whole and examined closely and carefully, goes to show that it mentions matters which the co-sharers had agreed upon and does not mention a custom. We agree with the conclusion arrived at by the lower Appellate Court, and hold that the plaintiffs-appellants have failed to prove their allegation of custom. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

MISCELLANEOUS FIRST CIVIL APPEAL
NO. 2779 OF 1922.

BAJRANG DAS—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPELLANT

versus

DONGARSEE DAS—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Appeal—Order declining to accept security, whether appealable.

An order declining to accept the security offered by a judgment-debtor before granting him an injunction staying the execution of a decree against him, is not appealable. Such an order is merely interlocutory, and it is well settled that an appeal lies only from a decree which conclusively determines the rights of the parties with respect to all or any of the matters in controversy.

Miscellaneous First appeal from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Hissar, dated the 6th October 1922.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings. One Dongarsee Das, a Mahajan of Sirsa, obtained an ex parte decree for Rs. 9,631-6-6 against one Bajrang Das from the High Court of Calcutta in November 1921. He obtained a transfer certificate and proceeded to execute his decree in the District of Hissar. Certain objections were filed by the judgment-debtor which were overruled. Thereupon the judgment-debtor brought a suit for setting aside the ex parte decree on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Hissar. This suit was also dismissed. An appeal against this decree is now pending in the Court of the District Judge of Hissar. Along with this Memorandum of Appeal the judgment-debtor filed an application for the issue of a temporary injunction that the execution of the decree which was pending in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Hissar, be stayed. The District Judge granted that application and ordered that the judgment-debtor should file security before execution could be stayed. The judgment-debtor thereupon offered to hypothecate his immoveable property by way of security. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, refused to accept this security as sufficient and allowed two week's time to the judgment-debtor to produce some other person as surety. It is against this order that the present appeal has been lodged.

A preliminary objection has been raised that no appeal lies. In my opinion, this objection must prevail. It is well settled that every interlocutory order passed in the course of execution proceedings is not appealable, and that an appeal lies only from a decree and a decree must conclusively determine the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy. The order attacked in the present case determines no rights of the parties that are in controversy. The District Judge ordered that execution should be stayed on condition that security should be given. The security was given, but the Executing Court was not satisfied with it. I do not think that this order can possibly be regarded as an order determining any rights of the parties or can be treated as a decree and be the subject of an appeal.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 86—Non-transferable holding—Transfer by occupancy tenant—Landlord, whether entitled to eject transferee—Incumbrance, meaning of.

A surrender of a non-transferable holding by an occupancy raiyat to his landlord, where the raiyat has previously transferred a portion of the holding to another person, entitles the landlord to enter upon the whole holding and eject the transferee or to settle it with another tenant.

Per Miller, C. J.—The transfer of a non-transferable holding is not binding upon the landlord in the sense that it imposes upon him any obligation to recognise the transferee as his tenant. [p. 797, col. 1.]

Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhury 27 Ind. Cas. 61; 42 C. 172; 20 C L. J. 52; 18 C. W. N. 971 (F. B.), referred to.

The word "incumbrance" in section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act implies a subsidiary interest charged upon or carved out of a parent estate such as a lease, mortgage, charge, easement or other interest limiting the full rights of ownership in the estate to which it appertains. It is something which affects the quality of the parent estate making it something less than it was before the encumbrance was created. [p. 800, col. 2; p. 801, col. 1.]

Per Mullick, J.—The proper interpretation of section 86 of the Act is that, upon the surrender of an entire holding, the landlord is entitled to eject every occupant on the land except those protected by clause (6) of the section. [p. 802, col. 1.]

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—The sale of a portion or of an entire holding is not an incumbrance within the meaning of clause (6) of section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 809, col. 2.]

In a non-transferable holding the tenant has no right to transfer without the consent of the landlord and the transfer of the whole or part of it is invalid so far as the landlord is concerned. [p. 810, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—The plaintiff in the year 1913 took Settlement from the landlord of a holding measuring about 2½ bighas of land. The holding in question had previously been in the occupation of Badar Ahir, but had been surrendered by him to the landlord in the year 1911. Some seven years before the surrender, namely, in the year 1904, Badar Ahir had, by a registered sale-deed, transferred a portion of the holding, measuring 9 cottahs 11 dhurs, to Musammat Sheoraji Kuer, the defendant No. 1. The holding was not transferable by custom, and the transfer created no privity between the transferee and the landlord. The defendant No. 1 refused to give up possession to the plaintiff of the part transferred to her by Badar Ahir in 1904. The present suit is brought by the plaintiff to eject her. The landlord is also impleaded as defendant No. 2 in the suit.

The defendant No. 1 challenges Badar Ahir's right to surrender the portion of the holding transferred to her and disputes the landlord's right to settle it with the plaintiff after surrender. The plaintiff has paid rent for the whole holding to the landlord since he took settlement in 1913. The Revisional Settlement Records show the entire holding entered in the plaintiff's name, but the defendant No. 1 is entered in the remarks column as in possession of the portion transferred by virtue of purchase. The defendant No. 1 was never recognised by the landlord as a tenant and her name is not entered in the landlord's sherishta which records the plaintiff as the tenant of the whole holding. There is no suggestion of any collusion between the landlord and Badar Ahir when the latter surrendered his holding in 1911, nor is it shown that at that time the landlord was even aware of the transfer.

SHEORAJI KUER v. DHANI MIAN.

The Munsif before whom the case came for trial found in favour of the plaintiff and gave the plaintiff a decree for possession after ejectment of the defendant.

The defendant appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who affirmed the Munsif's decision and dismissed the appeal.

The defendant then preferred a second appeal to the High Court. In view of the recent Full Bench decision of the High Court at Calcutta in Mohsenuddin v. Bhagaban Chandra Sutradhar (1), which is in conflict with certain earlier decisions of the same Court, and, having regard to the general importance of the question involved, the case was referred to a Full Bench for determination.

The question for determination is, whether, in the circumstances above-mentioned, a surrender of a non-transferable holding by an occupancy raiyat to his landlord, where the raiyat has previously transferred a portion of the holding to another person, entitles the landlord to enter upon the whole holding and eject the transferee or to settle it with another tenant.

In approaching this question it is necessary to bear in mind the peculiar features of occupancy rights in land and the extent to which protection is given by legislation to those deriving title from the occupancy raiyat. Occupancy rights in land have long been sanctioned by custom in this part of India, but it was not until 1859 that any attempt was made by the Legislature to define the rights of an occupancy raiyat. Act X of 1859, by section 6, gave every raiyat who has cultivated or held land, not being the landlord's zerait or private land, a right of occupancy in the land so cultivated or held by him, whether held under a patta or not, as long as he pays the rent payable on account of the same. The section, however, did not apply to sub-lessees from the raiyat holding on lease from him for a term or year by year. The 7th section provided that nothing contained in the last preceding section should affect the terms of any written contract for the cultivation of land entered into between a land-holder and a raiyat when it contained any express stipulation contrary thereto. The raiyat was liable to ejectment for non-payment of arrears of rent, but a raiyat, having rights of occupancy, could only be ejected in execution of a decree or order under the provisions of the Act. Section 19 gave the raiyat the unfettered right to relinquish his holding after notice to the landlord, and no provision is made in the Act protecting the interest of sub-lessees or other incumbrancers deriving title from the raiyat. No mention is made in the Act of the rights of transfer. This was left then, as now, entirely to custom. Apart from custom, a transfer without the consent of the landlord was tantamount to abandonment entitling the landlord to re-enter and eject the transferee as a trespasser. The question in all such cases was, whether there was or was not a custom of transferability: See Ajoodhya Pershad v. Musammat Imam Bandi Begum (2), Palakdhari Rai v. Manners (3). Although no restriction was placed by the Act upon the raiyat's right of surrender it was held by the Calcutta High Court in 1866, in Kashee Singh v. Onraet (4), that a raiyat holding under a lease for a fixed term did not come under section 19 and could not without his landlord's consent relinquish the tenancy during the term. It was also held in Heeramonee v. Gunganarain Roy (5) that where a tenant, who held land for a fixed term underlets the land, he parts with his interest therein to the extent of the interest created by the under-lease and cannot, therefore, determine the interest of his sub-lessee by surrendering his own term to the landlord. These cases, however, impose no obligation upon the landlord to recognise any incumbrance or transfer created by an occupancy raiyat, who by the Act has a right of surrender. The acquisition of occupancy rights by a raiyat gave him a permanent interest in the holding, which was recognised and protected by the Act, but the right of the landlord to ignore alienations made by the raiyats, in cases where there was no custom of transfer, was always jealously maintained. Although the occupancy raiyat acquired for himself and his heirs a permanent interest, he could not, by transfer, impose upon the landlord a tenant not of his own choosing unless there existed by custom a right of transfer. The raiyat might surrender but, if he did so, the surrender was complete and the landlord could re-enter and take free of alienations or incumbrances created by the raiyat. In the case of tenure-holders, as in the case of raiyats holding for a term, the law was different. They could not surrender without the landlord's consent. See Heera Lall Pal v. Neel Monee Pal (6), Judoonath Ghose v. Schoene Kilburn & Co., (7). But if the landlord in such a case accepted the surrender, he was in no better position than an assignee of the tenure-holder and presumably would be bound by incumbrances effected before the surrender.

The Act of 1859 was repealed by Act VIII (B. C.) of 1869, but no substantial improvement was made in favour of incumbrances created by the raiyat until the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 was passed. That Act recognised and confirmed the right of the raiyat to surrender, notwithstanding any contract between him and his landlord to the contrary, but it also conferred upon the landlord, who could not object to the surrender, certain reciprocal rights including the right to re-enter upon the holding and either let it to another tenant or take it into cultivation himself. The tenant's right to surrender was, therefore, firmly established and he could not contract himself out of the right even by a written agreement with his landlord. But if he did surrender, then the landlord's right to re-enter and take possession was also confirmed by the Act. At the same time, some protection, limited in extent, was given to sub-lessees and other incumbrancers deriving title from the raiyat. The framers of the Act would appear to have striven to give a measure of protection to sub-lessees and other incumbrancers, whilst avoiding the risk of converting such interests into permanent transfers which would defeat the landlord's rights in cases where no transfer was permissible by custom. Section 178 (3) provides as follows :—

"Nothing in any contract made between a landlord and a tenant after the passing of the Act shall.....

"(c) Take away the right of a raiyat to surrender his holding in accordance with section 86."

Section 86 provides, by clause (1), as follows :—

"A raiyat not bound by a lease or other agreement for a fixed period may, at the end of any agricultural year, surrender his holding." Clause (2) makes the raiyat liable to indemnify his landlord for the loss of rent for the next agricultural year unless three months' notice of the intention to surrender is given. Clause (5) provides that when a raiyat has surrendered his holding the landlord may enter on the holding and either let it to another or take it into cultivation himself. Clauses (6) and (7) are the only clauses which protect incumbrancers in the case of surrender. They are as follows :—

"(6). When a holding is subject to an incumbrance secured by a registered instrument, the surrender of the holding shall not be valid unless it is made with the consent of the landlord and the incumbrancer."

"(7). Save as provided in the last foregoing sub-section, nothing in this section shall affect any arrangement by which a raiyat and his landlord may arrange for a surrender of the whole or a part of the holding."

It seems to me that the result of these provisions of the Act is that the raiyat has an absolute right of surrender subject to clause (6) of section 86. By that clause, where there is an incumbrance secured by a registered instrument, either the landlord or the incumbrancer can defeat the raiyat's right to surrender, but in other cases it would seem clear that neither the landlord nor the incumbrancer can object to the surrender, and the only ground upon which either of them could object is the ground mentioned in clause (6). Nor will it avail the landlord that the raiyat had expressly agreed with him in writing not to exercise his right of surrender.

(6) 20 W. R. 383.
(7) 9 C. 671; 12 C. L. R 343; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 1096.

I apprehend that, under clause (7), the landlord and the raiyat might enter into a valid arrangement for surrender as between themselves, but this would not affect the rights of a registered incumbrancer whose interest the landlord would be bound to recognise. Under clause (7) the consent of the landlord is necessary, and he would, therefore, be in no better position than an assignee of the tenancy, who could claim no greater rights than those of his assignor. In all cases, however, not governed by clause (6) the landlord would be bound to accept the surrender. But where he is bound, his rights are clearly stated in clause (5). He may enter on the holding and either let it to another tenant or take it into cultivation himself. Section 87 provides for cases of a voluntary abandonment by the raiyat. By that section, if the raiyat voluntarily abandons his residence, without notice to his landlord and without arranging for payment of his rent as it falls due, and ceases to cultivate his holding either by himself or by some other person, the landlord may, at the end of the agricultural year, enter on the holding and let it to another tenant or take it into cultivation himself. Provision is also made for recovery by the raiyat of possession of the land within a limited period when he can show that the abandonment was not voluntary; and by clause (4) where the whole or part of a holding has been sub-let by registered instrument the landlord, before entering, must offer the whole holding to the sub-lessee for the remainder of the term of the sub-lease at the rent paid by the raiyat who has abandoned. The sub-lessee must also, if he accepts the offer, pay up all arrears due from the raiyat. If he refuses to accept the offer the landlord may avoid the sub-lease and enter on the holding. No provision is made in the Act protecting the interest of the transferee of a part of the whole of a non-transferable holding in cases either of surrender or abandonment. It must be conceded, I think, that the transfer of a non-transferable holding is not binding upon the landlord in the sense that it imposes upon him any obligation to recognise the transferee as his tenant. The transfer of a portion of the holding does not confer upon the landlord any right of re-entry as long as the tenant continues in possession of the remainder and pays the rent. The question was considered by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in 1914 in the case of Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhury (8) where it was laid down as follows:—

"The transfer is operative as against the landlord in all cases, in which it is operative against the raiyat, provided the landlord has given his previous or subsequent consent. Where the transfer is a sale of the whole holding, the landlord, in the absence of his consent, is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding; but where the transfer is of a part only of the holding, or not by way of sale, the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding, unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act or, (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy."

According to that decision, where there has been a transfer of a portion of the holding and a subsequent relinquishment by the raiyat, the landlord is entitled to enter and this appears to me to be in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and, but for the later decision of the same High Court in the case of Mohsenuddin v. Bhagaban Chandra Sutradhar (1), I should have had no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff was entitled to eject the defendant in the present case. In that case the Full Bench, without reviewing the previous decisons on the subject, decided that an occupancy raiyat, who has transferred part of his non-transferable holding is not competent to surrender to his landlord the portion so transferred either by surrender of that portion alone or by surrender of the whole inclusive of such portion. The Court considered that this follows from the principle that no one is permitted to defeat or derogate from his own grant. The Court also considered that the raiyat's power of surrender had been extinguished by his own previous dealings with the property in transferring a portion of his holding to another person, and they applied the doctrine of the English authorities applicable to powers, which provides that where the donee of a power deals with the estate so as to create an interest inconsistent with the exercise of the power his option of exercising it becomes extinguished.

The English rule appears to be based either upon the doctrine that a person cannot derogate from his own grant or upon the principle that the power having been in fact exercised there is no property left upon which it can operate. The principles relied on are undoubtedly sound and salutary principles of law, but, in applying them, one must be certain that the circumstances are such as to attract their operation. It is necessary to consider, in the first place, what was transferred in the present case. The transfer was certainly not an assignment of the whole interest of the raiyat even in the portion transferred. It created no privity between the landlord and the transferree, the holding being of the description known as non-transferable. The right of surrender, one of the incidents of a raiyati interest, was not transferred. The landlord would not have been bound to accept a surrender from the transferee. That right remained with the transferor. The short question is, can the raiyat by a contract with a third party defeat the landlord's statutory rights in the event of a surrender? Both parties to the transfer knew the limitation of the raiyat's powers of transfer. Both parties knew the landlord's rights in the event of a surrender or abandonment. No express covenant was made agreeing not to surrender, although in the present case it would make no difference, in my opinion, whether the covenant were expressed or merely implied. The result of enforcing such a covenant so as to bind the landlord would be, as it seems to me, to permit the raiyat by a contarct with a third party, in effect, to bring about that which by law he can only do with his landlord's consent and the transferee must be taken to have known that without the landlord's consent, he could acquire no interest in the property which would be in derogation of the landlord's rights. The Act limits the raiyat's powers of surrender only in a certain specified case, namely, that mentioned in clause (6) of section 86 and by implication affirms it in all other cases. It seems to me to follow from this that unless the case falls within clause (6) the landlord is bound to accept the surrender and cannot object on the ground that the raiyat has created incumbrances or otherwise dealt with the land in a manner not contemplated by clause (6). But if the landlord is bound by the surrender his rights, under clause (5), come into operation and entitle him to enter on the land and eject any one not protected under clause (6). To hold otherwise would, in my opinion, place the landlord entirely at the mercy of the raiyat in compelling him to recognise a transfer where by custom no transfer is permissible. If the surrender is not valid the landlord can only look to the raiyat unwilling any longer to remain on the land, for his rent. He cannot eject the transferee or even claim rent from him as he is not his tenant. He may even have strong objections to him as a tenant. But to accept rent from him is to recognise him as a tenant. It may be argued that if the rent is not paid a rent suit can be brought and the property can be sold with power to annul incumbrances or other unprotected dealings with the land, but it would appear to follow as a corollary of the appellant's argument that there is also an implied covenant by the transferor to pay the rent and perform all acts necessary to keep alive the tenancy, and that the occupancy raiyat, who has transferred a portion of his non-transferable holding is no longer entitled in law either to surrender or abandon or to fail to pay his rent or perform any of the other obligations the failure to perform which would entitle the landlord to re-enter, or, after decree, to sell the property with power to annul incumbrances. If the argument is pushed to its logical conclusion I doubt very much if a raiyat, being the last of his line with no one to succeed him, would even be entitled to die. Certainly, the question would arise if he voluntarily put an end to his own life. There is, in my opinion, no good ground for applying the doctrine applicable to assignees in the case of English leases to a case of surrender under the Bengal Tenancy Act. In England the law is that, a lessee can only give title to his lessor by a surrender to the same extent that he could give it to another person by his assignment. [Walter v. Yalden (9).] If he has created under-leases or incumbrances upon his own interest, they remain notwithstanding the surrender, the reason being that he cannot convey to his landlord, any more than to any one else, that which he had already parted with to another. In England the landlord is in no different position from a third party in this respect. The incidents of an English lease are the creation of contract between the landlord and his tenant and the landlord's consent is necessary to a surrender. The incidents of an occupancy holding in this country are the creation of Statute based on custom, and the consent of the landlord is not necessary to validate a surrender. In England a landlord may or may not accept a surrender but, if he does, he takes an assignment only of that which the tenant has not already parted with. An occupancy raiyat in India can create no incumbrances which a landlord entitled to re-enter is bound to recognise, except as provided by the Statute. He cannot legally transfer at all so as to compel the landlord to recognise the transferee unless the landlord consents or unless the transfer is sanctioned by custom. Even in the case of sub-lessees protection is only given to those created by registered instrument and by section 85 of the Act sub-leases for a term of more than 9 years cannot be admitted to registration. It would be a strange result if a transfer which is not recognised by the Statute at all, and which the raiyat cannot bind his landlord to recognise, conferred a permanent interest upon the transferee and gave him rights even greater than those of incumbrancers protected by the Statute. There is obviously a difference between the effect of a surrender within clause (1) of section 86 and the arrangement contemplated in clause (7) of that section. The latter requires the consent of both landlord and raiyat and is a mutual arrangement in their general interest upon terms agreed between them. It cannot affect the rights of third parties. It is analogous to a surrender in English Law which is really an assignment to the landlord of the rights remaining in the tenant, and the English doctrine may well apply to such a case. The former depends solely on the will of the raiyat. The landlord has no say in the matter, and the tenant's motives are, apart from fraud or collusion, immaterial. But once it is conceded that the tenant cannot legally transfer that which by custom is not transferable so as to bind his landlord and, in effect, limit the rights given to the latter by Statute, the Court, should, in my opinion, be slow in such cases to give binding effect to such transfers by applying doctrines which, although applicable to surrenders in favour of a landlord whose consent is a necessary condition of the surrender, appear to have no application in the case of a landlord, who is bound. If it is a question of which of two innocent parties must suffer, I think the equities are all in favour of the landlord, who is bound by the surrender rather than of the transferee who takes what he knows must be a precarious interest depending, largely upon future circumstances or even upon the good will of his transferor. In such a case, I consider that the transferee's remedy should be confined to such compensation as he may be able to obtain from his transferor.

Moreover, if a transfer of a portion of a non-tranferable holding by the raiyat prevents him and his heirs ever afterwards from making a valid surrender it must be conceded, I think, that a sub-lease or a mortgage or any other dealing with the property creating an incumbrance, even by an unregistered instrument, would have the same effect. If that be so, it was quite unnecessary for the Legislature to enact clause (6) of section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as, even without legislation, no surrender would be valid, so as to entitle the landlord to re-enter without the consent of the incumbrancer in the case contemplated in the clause; nor, indeed, in any case where an incumbrance, registered or unregistered, existed.

It must be remembered that in the present case no question arises of collision between the landlord and the raiyat with a view to defeating the rights of the transferee. The surrender was made 7 years after the transfer, and it may be presumed that the tenant had good reasons for wishing to surrender. It was made after due notice within the meaning of section 86 (2). The landlord is not shown to have been aware even of the transfer and no objection could be made by him entitling him to refuse to accept it. There was no question of an arrangement under the provisions of clause (7) of section 86. The facts were not exactly similar to those in the case of Mohsenuddin v. Bhagaban Chandra Sutradhar (1). In that case the tenants transferred a portion of their holdings and, shortly afterwards, when sued by the landlord for arrears of rent, refused to pay the rent of the entire holding on the ground that they had transferred a portion. This was no defence to the suit but the parties came to an arrangement whereby the tenants surrendered to their landlord the land they had sold and took a fresh settlement of the remainder at a lower rent than that which was payable for the whole holding, and a decree in the rent-suit was passed for a smaller sum than that which had been claimed. The landlord then instituted a suit to eject the transferee from the plots in his possession. It was in that suit that the Court refused to give the landlord a decree ejecting the transferee. Whether, in the circumstances of that case, the Court was justified in dismissing the landlord's suit for the reasons given, it is unnecessary for the purposes of the case to determine. The case was very like one of an arrangement under clause (7) of section 86, but if the Court meant to lay down that in no case could the raiyat surrender where he had transferred a portion of his non-transferable holding, I find myself, with great respect to the learned Judges who decided that case, unable to follow their decision.

The only other point was, whether the transfer in the present case was an incumbrance within the meaning of section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. If the sale was not an incumbrance it can make no difference that it was effected by a registered instrument.

The term 'incumbrance' is defined in section 161 of the Act, but the definition there given is declared to be for the purposes, of Chapter XIV only, which does not include section 86. The definition, therefore, is not applicable to the word incumbrance as used in section 86. At the same time, the meaning attributed to the word in section 161 is of wide import and includes, in addition to any lien, sub-tenancy or easement, any other right or interest created by the tenant on his tenure or holding, or in limitation of his own interest therein, and not being a protected interest as defined in section 160.

A Full Bench of this Court in Mahadeo Lal v. Langat Singh (10) unaninmously decided that a purchaser from a raiyat of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding without the landlord's consent is not an incumbrancer and the majority of the Bench considered that he had not an interest within the meaning of that section. In so far as this Court is concerned, I think we are bound by that decision.

The question has also been considered by the Calcutta High Court on more than one occasion. It is sufficient to refer to the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in Abdul Rahman Chowdhari v. Ahmadar Rahman (11). The question there related to a sale of a portion of a tenure, but the grounds of the decision apply with equal force to a holding. The learned Chief Justice there points out that an incumbrance would not ordinarily mean or include an absolute assignment nor would an assignment be a right or interest created in the tenure. He then considered whether the transferee's interest would fall within the definition in section 161, and held that it would not.

In my opinion a sale of the whole or a portion of an occupancy raiyati interest creates no incumbrance on that interest. The interest remains unimpaired; the ownership alone has changed. No sub-tenancy is created between the vendor and vendee. Both the part transferred and the part retained remain whole and unincumbered. The word "incumbrance" implies a subsidiary interest charged upon or carved out of a parent estate such as a lease, mortgage, charge, easement or other interest limiting the full rights of ownership in the estate to which it appertains: It is something which affects the quality of the parent estate making it something less than it was before the incumbrance was created. A division of the estate between two or more owners does not, in my opinion, impair its quality or incumber it in any way. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Mullick, J.—I am of the same opinion as the learned Chief Justice but I think it will be useful to examine the history of the legislation relating to the sale and surrender of occupancy rights and to the protection of derivative titles and also to refer to the case-law on the subject

Although occupancy rights in land were sanctioned by custom long before the accession of the East India Company to the Dewani the first legislative enactment which affirmed and defined the right in respect of agricultural tenancies was Act X of 1859. The occupancy raiyat was thereby permitted to sublet for a term or year by year and the determination of the tenancy by reason of forfeiture or any other cause carried with it the determination of the sub-tenancy also.

With regard to the transfer by sale or mortgage of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom without the consent of the landlord, the Act was silent; but it was then, as now, settled law that such a transfer was an abandonment and that it entitled the landlord to eject the transferee as a trespasser.

As to surrender, section 19 of the Act empowered a raiyat to relinquish the land after notice to the landlord who was thereupon entitled to re-enter and to eject all sub-tenants, incumbrancers and other transferees. It was apparently not then thought necessary to protect persons who held under derivative titles from the raiyat and no such transferees had any right to remain upon the land as against a landlord who has re-entered.

But, although Act X of 1859 did not place any restriction upon the right of a raiyat to relinquish his lease, it was held in 1866 by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Kashee Singh v. Onraet (4) that a raiyat who had taken a lease for a fixed term could not, under section 19 of the Act, throw it up during its currency.

Two years later it was held in Heeramonee v. Gunganarain Roy (5) that a tenant who holds and for a term and underlets it, cannot determine the interest of his under-tenant by surrendering his own term to the landlord. It is necessary to observe that Sir Barnes Peacock in that case was careful to speak of a tenant and not a raiyat; a tenure-holder, according to the law as it stood and as it stands now, could not surrender without the consent of his landlord nor could he in any event prejudice the rights of subordinate tenure-holders holding under him: See Heera Lall Pal v. Neel Monee Pal (6). To the same effect is Judoonath Ghose v. Schoene Kilburn & Co. (7) where the law was stated as follows by Field, J.: "Of course, the zemindar may, if he chooses, accept the relinquishment of the patni but by doing so he is in no better position than an assignee of the patnidar." And referring to Kowla Kant Mukherji v. Ram Mohun Gosain (12) the learned Judge further observed: "This case certainly does not shew that either by the law or the custom of the country a patnidar has any right of his own option to relinquish his tenure and thereby free himself from future liability for rent."

These last two cases were decided after Act X had been repealed by Act VIII (B. C.) 1869 and no substantial improvement was made in the rights of transferees till the enactment of Act VIII of 1885.

Section 85 of that Act made it competent to any raiyat to sub-let either orally or by unregistered instrument with the consent of his landlord and to sub-let by registered instrument for a term not exceeding 9 years without the consent of his landlord. Section 86, while re-affirming the provisions of the old law with regard to surrender by a raiyat not bound by a lease or other agreement for a fixed period, provided that when a holding is subject to an incumbrance secured by a registered instrument, the surrender of the holding shall not be valid unless it is made with the consent of the landlord and the incumbrancer. Clause (5) provided that when a raiyat surrenders his holding the landlord may enter upon the holding and either let it to another tenant or take it into cultivation himself; and section 178 introduced a most important change, namely, that a raiyat could not contract himself out of the right of surrender.

(12) 2 Sel. Rep. 325; 6 Ind. Dec. (o. s.) 675.

In my opinion the proper interpretation of section 86 of the Act is that, upon the surrender of an entire holding the landlord is entitled to eject every occupant on the land except those protected by clause (6) of the section.

The view is supported by Nilkanta Chaki v. Ghatoo Sheikh (13) where an occupancy raiyat sub-let without a registered lease and without the consent of his landlord and the Court held that upon the surrender of the whole holding the landlord was entitled to eject the under-raiyat without notice. So, again, in Badan Chandra Das v. Rajeswari Debya (14) it was held that section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not cover a case of surrender and that under section 86 whether the surrender was of a whole or a part, the landlord's right of re-entry was undoubted and the learned Judges distinguished Amirullah Mahomed v. Nazir Mahomed (15) on the ground that a landlord taking by assignment from the raiyat was bound by the contracts made by the raiyat but that he was not so bound after a surrender. To the same effect were Rajendra Kishore Adhikari v. Chandra Nath Dutt (16), Gagan Chandra Choudhury v. Alak Chand Saha (17) and Ram Udar Singh [Raghunath Singh] v. William Cox (18). In this last mentioned case it was held that the landlord after surrender by the raiyat could not by letting out the land to another raiyat eject a registered mortgagee holding under the former raiyat; and, although reference was made to Walter v. Yalden (9) and to the doctrine in English Law that a lessee cannot effect by surrender anything that he cannot do by assignment to a third person the learned Judges certainly did not say that the protection could, in the face of the provisions of section 86, be applied to any but registered incumbrancers.

What, then, is the position of the purchaser of a portion of an occupancy holding?

If he is not an incumbrancer within the meaning of section 86, then section 86 does not protect him. It was held in Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (19) that such a purchaser was not an incumbrancer and that upon the raiyat's surrendering the transferred portion the landlord was entitled to re-enter. That case was followed in Ramoni Mohan Roy v. Sheikh Kalimuddi (20) but a note of warning was sounded for the first time in Asgar Ali v. Gouri Mohan (21). There, although the transferee was maintained in possession because the surrender to the landlord was collusive, the correctness of the decision in Tamizuddin's case (19) was questioned but on grounds other than the ground that a grantor could not derogate from his grant.

In the following year came the Full Bench decision in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhury (8) where it was laid down in clear and unmistakeable language that upon a transfer of a part of an untransferable occupancy holding the landlord is not ordinarily entitled to re-enter unless there has been (a) abandonment under section 87, or (b) relinquishment of the holding, or (c) repudiation of the tenancy.

Next, on the footing that the Full Bench had re-affirmed the old law, it was held in Kunya Kesori Pal v. Bama Sundari Dasya (22) that where a tenant declined to pay rent for the whole holding after transferring a portion thereof the landlord was entitled to re-enter and take possession of the holding.

But shortly before this a precisely opposite view had been taken in Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhury v. Gurudayal Saha (23). In that case D. Chatterji, J., held that as the Full Bench had decided that a transfer of a portion was binding between the transferee and the transferor and that the landlord could not sue to eject the transferee so long as the contract between him and the raiyat subsisted and also as clauses (5), (6) and (7) of section 86 were not applicable to the surrender only of a part of the holding, there was no provision of law under which the landlord could eject the transferee. The learned Judge further held that the raiyat could not derogate from his grant and that the surrender was in fact an assignment. In 1917 that decision was affirmed in a Letters Patent Appeal the judgment in which runs as follows: "We think this case was rightly decided by Mr. Justice D. Chatterji. The appeal must, therefore, be dismssed with costs."

In the following year the question again came up for decision in Tamiz Munshi v. Bisweswari Debya (24). In that case there was a sale of a part of the holding, then a surrender by the raiyat of that part and then the taking of a new settlement of the balance of the holding; and it was contended that these operations had resulted in a surrender of the whole and that the landlord was entitled to eject the transferee from the portion which he had purchased. Mr. Justice D. Chatterji again adhered to his former view while Mr. Justice Newbould was of opinion that Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (19) and Ramoni Mohan Roy v. Sheikh Kalimuddi (20) were correcrly decided. The case finally went in appeal before a Bench of three Judges and Mr. Justice Newbould's view was affirmed, it being held that the relinquishment of a part of a holding and the taking of a new settlement of the remainder operates as a surrender of the whole, expressly as to the former and impliedly as to the later.

The controversy, however, was not ended and shortly afterwards in Dastur Ali v. Ram Kumar Gope (25) there was a difference of opinion between Teunon and Richardson, JJ., the former relying upon Ananda Mohan Ray Chowdhury v. Gurudayal Saha (23) and being also of opinion that the sale of a part of a holding was an incumbrance within the meaning of section 86, and the latter relying upon Tamiz Munshi v. Bisweswari Debya (24). The latter learned Judge's opinion prevailed as it agreed with that of the lower Court.

Two years later the question again came up for consideration in Mohsenuddin v. Bhagaban Chandra Sutradhar (1) and was referred to a Full Bench of five Judges who held that a raiyat who had transferred a part of his holding was not competent to surrender either the whole or a part. The learned Judges in arriving at the result did not consider it necessary to refer to the previous case-law on the subject and decided the case on the sole ground that a grantor cannot be permitted to derogate from his grant.

Now, in the case before us there is no dispute as to the facts and unless the transferee who is the purchaser of a part of an untransferable occupancy holding and who holds under a registered deed of sale can be considered to be an incumbrancer within the maning of section 86, Bengal Tenancy Act; or unless we can apply the rule of equity upon which the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court have proceeded, his appeal must fail and the plaintiff must succeed.

Assumng for a moment that the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Mahadeo Lal v. Langat Singh (10) as to the meaning of the word incumbrance in Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies also to section 86, it seems to me that we ought not to disregard the whole course of previous legislation and the decided cases simply bgcause they appear to conflict with an established rule of equity.

It may be asked at the outset, does section 86 admit of the application of the rule at all or has it by expressly including incumbrances in clause (6) by implication excluded all other forms of transfer? I think an examination of the previous legislation and case-law leads to the conclusion that the answer is in the affirmative.

It is, however, said that the odinary rule of construction does not apply to section 86, that the Bengal Tenancy Act is not exhaustive and that in the absence of any special provisions regarding a purchaser of a portion of an occupancy holding the general principles of contract which are of universal application must prevail.

Even if we assume that the maxim expressio unius est exclusion alterius is not intended to be applied to section 86, I do not think the equities here are in the transferee's favour.

(24) 46 Ind. Cas. 862; 22 C. W. N. 967.
(25) 50 Ind. Cas. 567; 22 C. W. N. 972.

In the first place, the section itself forbids the application of the rule to incumbrances which are not registered and to that extent modifies it; and if the law is not disposed to regard unregistered incumbrancers with any great tenderness, why then is it necessary to credit it with a more benevolent disposition towards transferees by sale?

In the next place, both the occupancy right and the right to surrender are creatures of Statute. Ordinarily, the landlord here has no opportunity of protecting himself against assignments and in the circumstances it would be unfair to strengthen the position of the assignee.

In the third place, unless there is the strongest necessity, the equitable doctrine that a grantor cannot derogate from his grant ought not to be applied here against an innocent third party. The transferee can compensate himself by an action for damages against his transferor and to hold that the surrender is invalid is to go even further than is contemplated by the analogous provisions of section 115 of the Transfer of Property Act.

In the fourth place, the transferee was fully aware of the title he was buying.

It is true that the doctrine was applied by Sir Baanes Peacock in Heeramonee v. Gunganarain Roy (5) in the case of a tenant holding for a term, but it has, so far as I am aware, never been applied to the case of an occupancy raiyat.

A reference to section 115 of the Transfer of Property Act also clearly shows the deliberate intention of the Legislature to discriminate between agricultural and non-agricultural tenancies. That section provides not that the surrender shall be invalid but that it shall not prejudice the rights of an under-lessee who, unless the surrender is made for the purpose of obtaining a new lease, shall hold the land under the contracts which were binding upon his lessor. It expressly makes a difference between surrender and forfeiture and directs that upon forfeiture unless the forfeiture has been procured by the lessor in fraud of the under-lessees, the under-lease shall be annulled. With regard to agricultural lands, the law has already gone as far as it can; it has affirmed the rule that tenures effected by the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot be surrendered except by agreement with the landlord and, apart from section 86, it has provided for the protection of under-raiyats against abandonment and distraint. Having regard to the jealousy with which the law has looked upon the sale of occupancy holdings, I do not think we should extend the protection given to vendees without a clear and unequivocal expression of its intention.

To test the applicability of the rule it is only necessary to enquire what will be the position of the landlord if the rule is so enforced. In the absence of any fraud or collusion, (of which there is no question in the present case), it may be presumed that the raiyat has surendered because he finds himself unable to cultivate the remaining portion of the holding. If the law declines to allow him to surrender, he will leave that part of the holding uncultivated and the landlord's only remedy will be to sue him for the rent of the whole holding and to take possession in execution of his decree. It may be wrong to allow the transferor to derogate from his grant but it is no less inequitable that the landlord should be put to the harassment of a civil suit instead of being able to avail himself of the more summary process of section 86. It must also be remembered that since the days of the Permanent Settlement the object of tenancy legislation has been to promote the cultivation of waste land so that landlords might be enabled to realize to the fullest extent the income of the lands settled with them and might meet with punctuality their engagements with Government: nor should it be forgotten that the rules regarding transfer, surrender and abandonment which have their origin in special local and financial conditions can never be expected to correspond closely with those applicable to English tenures. It was never intended that, simply because he has sold a portion of his land, the landlord must be forced to keep an unwilling raiyat upon his holding; nothing could be more detrimental to good husbandry.

Applying yet another test we may ask what is to be the position of the landlord if the tenant wilfully defaults in payment of rent or incurs forfeiture by a breach of covenant or abandons the land? If the rule is to be applied logically, the landlord would have no right even in those cases to re-enter so as to destroy the right of the transferee, a result which, apart from fraud, would be in the highest degree inequitable.

Or, to take an extreme course, suppose again that the tenant dies intestate and without heirs and by his own hand, is the landlord to be deprived of his right of reversion in that case also?

The truth is that, like all equitable maxims, the rule has its limitations and to apply it in the present connection would be to produce evils far greater than those it is sought to remedy.

The result then is that, when a raiyat of an occupancy holding surrenders the entire holding after having sold a part of it the landlord is entitled to re-enter and eject the transferee for the following among other reasons:—

(1) the transferee does not acquire the status of a tenant and the landlord is not bound to recognise him;

(2) the transferor continues to be the sole tenant of the landlord for the purpose of ejectment under section 84 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, enhancement under section 30, suits for rent under section 65, acquisition of land under section 84, abandonment under section 87, distraint under Chapter XII and sale proceedings under Chapter XIV;

(3) to deny the landlord the right to re-enter is tantamount to compelling him to recognise the transfer of a part;

(4) the provisions of clauses (6) and (7) of section 86 of the Act make it clear that the purchaser of a part of a holding is not protected and that the raiyat may come to any arrangement he likes with his landlord even though it be to the purchaser's detriment.

With regard to the surrender of a part of the holding, section 86 shows that the right of surrender in this case is conditional on the landlord's consent; but once the landlord does consent the position is the same as in the case of the surrender of the entire holding. In effect the surrender of a portion of the holding, whether it be of the portion already transferred or of the other portion, entails a surrender of the entire holding and the creation of a new holding and, therefore, the landlord's right to eject the transferee remains unaffected. The position is very similar to that where an occupancy raiyat sells a part of his holding to one man and the rest to another. The landlord's right of re-entry is based upon the view that the transfer of the entire holding by sale constitutes abandonment. I take it that the sale of a portion and the surrender of the rest has the same result.

In this view of the matter, it is not necessary to devote much discussion to the English cases on the subject of powers.

It is an established rule that where a person is possessed of a power (other than a power coupled with a trust) to dispose of property, he will not be permitted to exercise that power if he has by his own act disentitled himself from such exercise. But the rule has special reference to powers created by deed or Will; it is not based on estoppel but on the principle that the power having been in fact exercised there is no property left upon which it can operate and in Foakes v. Jackson (26) approving In re Hancock (27) the rule is stated by Farwell, J., as follows: "any dealing with the estate by the donee of a power inconsistent with the exercise of the power must put an end to it."

On the other hand, in Nottidge v. Dering (28) it was held that, in the circumstances of that case, the donee's power to appoint persons had not been released by his concurrence in a disentailing deed.

In this connection, the question also frequently arises whether the power of a tenant for life to consent to a sale is affected by the alienation of or incumbrances upon his life estate. It has been held that, ordinarily, the power cannot be exercised so as to prejudice the rights of the alienee but that, where the deed contains an actual or implied recognition of the liability of the property to conversion, the power of the tenant for life in unaffected in cases of mere equitable powers: Hurst v. Hurst (29).

In my opinion it is not possible to apply these technical rules relating to settlements to tenants' rights created by Statute.

Moreover, I think that in the present case the raiyat has done nothing inconsistent with or in derogation of his grant. The alienee knew that the law gave the raiyat the power of surrender by which his own interest was liable to be determined. In truth there is here no derogation at all from the grant and if it were necessary to refer to any legal maxim, I would be inclined to say that the more appropriate rule is "cessante statu primitivo cessat derivativus." That rule applies not only to remainder men and reversioners of estates defeasible on the death of the life tenant (unless confirmed by the remainder men or reversioners) but also to titles derived from estates which are limited by conditions and which are liable to be defeated by the acts of their owners, as by the marriage of a "tenant durante viduitate" or by the resignation of the person who has leased the glebe lands or tithes belonging to the living. The principle is not different from that applicable to service tenures in India and I can see no reason why the result which follows when a service tenure-holder relinquishes his service after alienating a part of the tenure should not follow when an occupancy raiyat surrenders after selling a portion of his holding.

I think, therefore, that it would be inequitable to apply the English Law in a country where the law of agricultural tenancies has been evolved out of conditions peculiar to itself, where free transfer is not ordinarily permitted and where statutory rights unknown in England are conferred on the landlord; and I take it that this aspect of the matter would not have been overlooked by the learned Chief Justice, Sir Lawrence Jenkins, and his collegues in Dayamoyi's case (8) when they laid down the rule that the landlord is ordinarily entitled to re-enter if the occupancy raiyat relinquishes his holding after transferring a part of it. It may be said that the learned Chief Justice was perhaps not considering the case of surrender and that the decision does not show whether this was the precise question referred to the Full Bench, and that, rather than weaken its authority in any way by further discussion, it would be wiser to accept the English rule. Apart from the general consideration that the English rule cannot be applied here, I think that the language of the learned Chief Justice was guarded and deliberate and that it was intended to cover the case of surrenders.

In so far as the transferor has by his surrender damnified the tansferee by committing a breach of any implied covenant, the obligation may be viewed as one personal to the transferor and capable of being discharged by payment of damages. It is not necessary for the protection of the transferee to declare that the surrender itself shall be inoperative.

There remains the question whether the transferee in the present case can be considered to be an incumbrancer within the meaning of section 86, of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It may be contended that, for the purposes of section 86, the term incumbrance has a wider meaning than that given to it by definition in Chapter XIV. The contention is arguable, but I doubt whether, in view of the Full Bench decision of this Court in Mahadeo Lal v. Langat Singh (10) which followed the decision of Jenkins, C.J., in Abdul Rahman Chowdhuri v. Ahmadar Rahman (11), it will serve any useful purpose to re-open the controversy. The majority of the Judges in both the above cases held that, with reference to a tenancy, the term incumbrance connotes an interest subordinate to and different in quality from the parent interest and does not connote merely a difference in quantity. For the sake of finality, I would be inclined to accept this view.

It follows, therefore, that the transferee in the present case has no right to remain in possession as against the landlord and the landlord's lessee; therefore, the appeal should be dismissed.

dhurs of it to defendant No. 1 by a registered kabala, dated the 11th June 1904. In 1911 (1318) he surrendered, through Civil Court, his entire holding in favour of the thicadar of the proprietor, the then landlord. The landlord settled the entire holding with the plaintiff whose land was recorded in the Revisional Settlement. The plot in dispute, Survey No. 486 (9 kathas 7 dhurs), which was purchased by defendant No. 1 was recorded as being in his possession. The plaintiff, therefore, could not get possession of this disputed plot and accordingly he commenced an action in the Court of the Munsif of Champaran for ejecting the defendant No. 1 and succeeded in both the Courts below in obtaining a decree in his favour for khas possession with mesne profits. The defendant No. 1 came to this Court in second appeal. The appeal was heard by a Division Bench of the Court by which an order of 12th February 1923 referred the case for decision by a Full Bench inasmuch as the decision of the appeal depended upon a question of law of general importance and upon which there was no previous decision of this Court.

The holding in question is a non-transferable one. The tenant of the holding first tranfserred a part of it to defendant No. 1 and subsequently surrendered the entire holding in favour of the landlord. The question, therefore, raised in the order of reference is, where an occupancy raiyat has transferred a part of his non-transferable holding, is he competent afterwards to surrender to his landlord the whole holding as to entitle the landlord under clause (5) of section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to enter on the holding inclusive of the portion previously transferred by the tenant and either to let it to another tenant or take it into cultivation himself, to use the words of the clause?

The Calcutta High Court, after a good deal of conflict of decisions, has recently in the Full Bench case of Mohsenuddin v. Bhagaban Chandra Sutradhar (1) answered the question in the negative. The decision of the case has been based upon the well known principle that no one can be permitted to derogate from his own grant and that a person vested with a power must extinguish that power if he has dealt with his estate and created interests inconsistent with the exercise of that power. Applying these principles, the learned Chief Justice Mookerjee, J., held that an occupancy raiyat by transferring a part of his non-transferable holding renders himself incompetent to exercise his right of surrender under section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act with respect to the portion so transferred either by surrender of that portion alone or by surrender of the whole inclusive of such portion.

My Lord the Chief Justice has shown in his judgment that the doctrine applicable to assignees in the case of English leases does not apply to a case of surrender under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and my learned brother Mullick, J., has come to the same conclusion by going into the history of the legislation and the growth of the law regulating the agricultural tenancies in this country. I shall, therefore, briefly discuss the question with reference to the Bengal Tenancy Act by which the holding in question is governed.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant relies upon the aforesaid decision of the Calcutta High Court and upon clause (6) of section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which runs as follows :—" When a holding is subject to incumbrance secured by a registered instrument, the surrender of the holding shall not be valid unless it is made with the consent of the landlord and the incumbrancer ". His contention is that the sale to his client of a part of the holding was an incumbrance within the meaning of the word used in the clause, and it having been secured by a registered instrument the subsequent surrender of the holding not having been made with his consent was wholly invalid. This contention would be unanswerable if the sale of a part of a holding were an incumbrance within the meaning of the term used in the clause.

The term 'incumbrance' has been defined in section 161 of the Act for the purpose of Chapter XIV only, and that definition, therefore, is limited in its application to that Chapter only. It says: "The term 'incumbrance' used with reference to a tenancy, means any lien, sub-tenancy, easement or other rights or interest created by the tenant on his tenure or holding or in limitation of his own interest therein, and not being a protected interest as defined in the last foregoing section."

The Special Bench of this Court in the case of Mahadeo Lal v. Langat Singh (10) held that the words "any other right or interest created by the tenant on his holding or any limitation on his own interest therein" refer to some right which is ejusdem generis with the words "lien," "sub-tenancy", "easement" in the same section. This interpretation saves, to my mind, a sale either of a portion or of an entire holding from being an incumbrance so far as Chapter XIV is concerned. It is not a lien, it is not an easement, it is not a sub-tenancy for the vendee does not hold the land under the vendor tenant of the land, nor is he liable to pay rent to the vendor for the portion sold to him. The vendor has not reserved to himself any right in the land and there is no reversion to him in any case. The vendee may pay rent through the vendor but that will not make him a tenant under the landlord unless his purchase is recognised. The original tenant when compelled by the landlord to pay rent for the entire holding may realise his quota of the rent payable by the transferee as a co-owner of the holding under the general law of contribution, but a co-owner is not a tenant.

"Tenant" under the Bengal Tenancy Act, section 3, clause (3), means "a person who holds land under another person, and is, or but for special contract would be, liable to pay rent for that land to that person." A vendee of a portion of a holding is not a tenant of the vendor under this definition.

Therefore, the sale of a portion of a holding does not create a sub-tenancy and is not an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Act, and, as held in the Patna case, it need not be annulled under section 167 of the Act before a purchaser in execution of a rent decree is entitled to take possession of the property vide Abdul Rahman Chowdhury v. Ahmadar Rahman (11) and Fazarali Mahaldar v. Poroo Mian (30). In the former case it was contended before Sir Lawrence Jenkins at page 1225*, that the language used in section 161 extends the meaning of the term "incumbrance" beyond its ordinary significance so as to include any disposition of the tenancy even of absolute assignment or sale of the entirety or a portion thereof. In overruling this contention his Lordship observed as follows:—"It is difficult to understand why the inferior interests of a lien, sub-tenancy and easement alone should have been mentioned, if the intention was that the superior interest involved in an assignment was to be included in the general words. It runs counter to the first principles of construction. An incumbrance would not ordinarily mean or include an absolute assignment nor would it be a right or interest created on the tenure. Can it be said to be any limitation of a tenant's interest? I think not; These words appear to me to refer not to the area but to the quality of the tenant's interest. This view preserves the essential characteristic of a lien, sub-tenancy or easement, for the idea inherent in these leading words is that of a graft on a subject-matter which is not destroyed but still continues, though in a modified form. The more general words that follow are at least as susceptible of an ordinary meaning which would give effect to that idea as the wider but less appropriate one for which the respondent contend".

According to Sir Lawrence Jenkins, therefore, an absolute assignment of a whole or a part of a holding is not an incumbrance within the ordinary significance of the term. If the sale or assignment of a part of a non-transferable holding does not come within the definition of the term used in section 161 of the Act, far less will it be covered by the ordinary significance of the term used in clause (6) of section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

An incumbrance in law is a "liability resting on an estate, a legal claim or a lien on an estate for the discharge of which the estate is liable, any right to or an interest in an estate to the diminution of its value but not impeding the passing of the fee by conveyance, as a mortgage, a lien for taxes, a judgment, a right of way, synonyms; load, burden, clog, impediment, check, hindrance". The sale of a part of a holding extinguishes the right of the vendor to pass the fee by conveyance or in any other way and is, therefore, not an incumbrance but is a total extinction of his rights. He cannot, in any circumstances, claim the land back by discharging the burden of the sale upon it. In the absence of any statutory definition of the word in the Act, the word must be taken to have been used in its etymological meaning and in the sense it may have acquired as a term of art in law. Therefore, the word 'incumbrance' in section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not embrace a sale of a part of a non-transferable holding. This was the view taken in the case of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda NewazKhan (19); that decision was based upon the ground that an incumbrance implies a limitation of the rights of the tenant and not a total extinction of them as in the case of an out an out sale whether of a portion or of an entire holding. The principle was accepted in the following cases: Mahanti Lal Sahu v. Harkissen Jha (31), Abdul Rahman Chowdhuri v. Ahmadar Rahman (11) and Fazarali Mahaldar v. Paroo Mian (30). The decision in the case of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Newaz Khan (19) was commented upon though not expressly disssented from, in the case of Asgar Ali v. Gouri Mohan (21). The decision of that case, however, turned upon the surrender having been found to be collusive. Undoubtedly, if the surrender be collusive, the tenancy will subsist and so long as the tenancy subsists, the landlord is not entitled to eject the transferee of a portion of the holding. This is not the case here.

The case of Chundra Sakai v. Kalli Prosanno Chuckerbutty (32) impliedly took a contrary view when it held that an exchange of land is an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161, but this view was practically dissented from by N. Chatterjea, J., at page 1220* of the case referred to above Abdul Rahman Chowdhury v. Ahmadar Rahman (11). While doubting the correctness of the decision in Chundra Sakai v. Kalli Prosanno Chuckerbutty (32), N. Chatterjea, J., said that in any case it ought not to be extended further. Sir Lawrence Jenkins, commenting upon this case in Abdul Rahman Chowdhury v. Ahmadar Rahman (11) at page 1226,* observes: "The ratio decidendi is to be found in these words:—'The exchange by which this land was acquired by the defendant was in limitation, if not in fact in destruction, of the original tenant's right in the holding.' A distinction was thus recognised between limitation and destruction and presumably it was considered an exchange was a limitation, for section 161 does not extend to that which is a destruction of a tenant's right. Whether this be a true view of the effect of an exchange may have to be reconsidered in the future, does not arise now. I am concerned only with an absolute sale and that, in my opinion, is not in limitation but in destruction of the interest to which it relates. On the question referred, therefore, I hold that the interest of an unregistered purchaser of a portion of a patni tenure is not an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act."

In my opinion the definition of the word as given in the case of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Newa Khan (19) and the view taken therein that the word "incumbrance" in clause (6) of section 86 does not embrace the sale of a part of a non-transferable holding remain unshaken. I, therefore, hold that the sale of the part of the holding in question in favour of the appellant was not an incmbrance within the meaning of clause (6) of section 86.

The question, then, remains as to whether the surrender of the entire holding in the present case under section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is valid so as to give the landlord the right of re-entry on the portion of the holding sold to the appellant prior to the surrender and to let it to the respondent or to take it into cultivation himself under clause (5) of the section. In the Full Bench case of the Calcutta High Court the surrender was with respect to a part of the holding under an arrangement between the landlord and the original tenant and it was held that the surrender was invalid with respect to the portion of the holding previously sold.

SHEORAJI KUER v. DHANI MIAN.

Surrender consists in the yielding of the term to him who has the immediate estate in reversion in order that the term may merge in the reversion. After the surrender of the holding the liability of the tenant towards the landlord to pay rent, etc., ceases. This may be by mutual agreement or by operation of law. Section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act codifies the principles of surrender and prescribes rules for effecting the same. Clauses (1) to (4) deal with surrender by operation of law. The first clause confers upon a raiyat not bound by a lease or other agreement for a fixed term a right to surrender his holding at the end of any agricultural year. Clauses (2) to (4) prescribe the way in which this right is to be exercised, that is, by causing a notice to be served upon the landlord. Clause (7) recognises a surrender by mutual agreement between a landlord and a tenant with respect to the whole or a part of the holding. In the Full Bench case of the Calcutta High Court the surrender was with respect to a part of the holding under a mutual agreement between the landlord and the original tenant. Therefore, it was a surrender under clause (7) of the section. The surrender in such a case is in the nature of an assignment by the tenant to his landlord of the whole or a part of the holding. The tenant is required to disclose to the landlord the condition of the tenancy and his previous dealings thereof such as transfer of a part of the holding. The landlord also is required to acquaint himself with the condition of the tenancy and the previous transfers, if any of a portion of the holding. The change of possession which is essential to a valid surrender must in such a case take place by mutual agreement, and the tenant must be in a position to transfer immediate possession of the property. The dealing between the parties must be fair and the transaction must be bona fide, and if the mutual dealing between the parties by way of surrender have the effect of destroying the rights of third parties the transaction may be tainted with fraud or dishonesty and it is possible then to apply the principle upon which the decision of the Full Bench case has proceeded, namely, that a person cannot derogate from his own grant. It must be remembered that a surrender by mutual arrangement may be for consideration and that neither the tenant nor the landlord is exercising his rights which would arise under the earlier clauses of section 86 when a tenant as a matter of right surrenders his holding by a notice to the landlord. By mutual agreement the landlord can accept the surrender with respect to the part of the holding when the other part has already been sold to a third person. In that case he will have to recognise the transfer of a part of a non-transferable holding which he can very well agree to do and for which he can take proper compensation while entering into the mutual arrangement with the tenant. Clause (7) has simply recognised the principle of the English Law that a surrender implies a mutual agreement between the landlord and the tenant and can be with respect to the whole or part of a holding Oastler v. Henderson (33). The Bengal Tenancy Act does not restrict a surrender to a mutual agreement between the parties but confers upon the tenant a statutory right to yield up the term of his tenancy and to put an end to his liabilities to the landlord for holding the land under him, whether the landlord does or does not like it. In other words the tenant has a right to surrender his holding against the Will of his landlord. Therefore, the landlord must have the right to take the land free from any incumbrance which under the law he is not bound to recognise. In a non-transferable holding the tenant has no right to transfer without the consent of the landlord and the transfer, therefore, of the whole or a part of it is invalid so far as the landlord is concerned. Where the transfer is of the whole of the holding the landlord has the remedy provided for by the law under section 87 of the Act and to treat the holding as abandoned. Where the tenant transfers a part of the holding the landord is not bound to recognise the transfer and has a right still to hold the tenant liable to him for the rent of the entire holding and such other rights that he may have against the tenant.

SHEORAJI KOER v. DHANI MIAN.

Now, the surrender in the present case is through the Court by means of an Istifa (Exhibit 2) under clause (4) of the section. The tenant here has, therefore, exercised his right conferred by clause (1) of the section to surrender the holding. This is the statutory right conferred upon the tenant and there is nothing to prevent his surrendering the holding on account of his having previously transferred a portion thereof. The section does not curtail his right of surrender of the whole holding on previous transfer of a portion thereof. If the surrender were tainted with fraud or dishonesty section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act may perhaps invalidate the surrender, but in this case no fraud or dishonesty has been imputed to the surrender. It is conceivable that a tenant may after transfer of a part of a holding find himself by change of circumstances independent of the transfer, such as, his change of profession and inability to carry on the cultivation of the land, unable to continue to hold the land without serious inconvenience to himself. The surrender in such a case may be a bona fide one. His Lordship Mookerjee, A. C. J. in the Full Bench case of the Calcutta High Court, says that by transferring a part of a holding the tenant has dealt with his property in such a manner as to render himself incompetent to exercise the power or right of surrender which he had and hence he cannot be permitted to derogate from his own grant. That the aforesaid principles are not of universal application, particularly in the case of a tenant under the Bengal Tenancy Act is obvious from the fact that the tenant by transferring the remaining portion of his holding to a third person can by his Act cause an abandonment of the holding under section 87 and thereby confer an immediate right in the landord to enter upon the holding and to avoid both the transfers including the previous one. Thus, a tenant can by his act destroy the right previously created by him in the transferee of a part of the holding. It has never been suggested that by transferring a portion of a holding the tenant is debarred from transferring the remaining portion inasmuch as that has the effect of extinguishing the right acquired by the pervious transferee and thus has the effect of a derogation from his previous grant. The principles upon which the decisions of the Full Bench case of the Calcutta High Court is founded cannot affect the rights of the landlord to re-enter on the holding acquired under the statutory provisions contained in clause (5) of section 86 of the Act for he was not a party to the transfer of the portion of the holding by the tenant. The cases relied upon in the Full Bench case of the Calcutta High Court as laying down to the principle that a person cannot be permitted to derogate from his own grant, do not seem to go so far as to affect the right acquired under the Statute on account of the exercise of a right of surrender conferred upon the tenant by the Statute. The tenant's right to surrender given by section 86 of the Act is not, to my mind, affected in any way by his previous transfer of a part of a holding. This was recognised in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhury (8). If a tenant is not allowed to surrender his entire holding after transfer of a portion of the same, he will be deprived of a right which the Bengal Tenancy Act vests in him. The landlord will go on suing for arrears of rent and get decrees against him which may be executed against his person and other properties. Therefore, even when the surrender is bona fide the tenant will be harassed by his not being allowed to surrender the holding on account of the previous transfer of a portion thereof when he might not have anticipated the change in the circumstances beyond his control which compelled him to surrender the entire holding. The transferee of a portion of a holding takes the transfer with his eyes open, He fully knows that his transfer might be avoided in case the original tenant transfers the remaining portion of the holding or abandons it. He also knows that his interest is liable to be extinguished in case the landlord sells the holding in execution of a rent decree obtained against the original tenant. He must also know that by surrender the same consequence would happen.

Therefore, a person who takes a transfer from a person who labours under such limitations takes upon himself the inconvenience and the loss that might accrue to him on account of his transfer having become inoperative by the Act either of the transferor or the landlord who is not bound by the transfer. On the other hand, to take away the right of the landlord to re-enter on account of the surrender of the holding is to compel him, under certain circumstances, to recognise the transfer of a part of a holding and the splitting up of a holding. Therefore, with great respect to their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court, I am unable to subscribe to the view expressed in the Full Bench case of Mohsenuddin v. Bhagaban Chandra Sutradhar (1).

In the result, I hold that the transfer of a part of a holding is not an incumbrance, as already observed, under clause (6) of section 86 and that it cannot stand in the way of the landlord entering upon the holding and either letting it to another tenant or taking it into cultivation himself under clause (5) of section 86. I also hold that the tenant is not deprived of his right to surrender the entire holding under clause (1) of the section on account of his having previously transferred a portion thereof.

Recently I decided this point in the case of Ram Oraon v. Doman Kalal (34), in connection with a case arising under the Orissa Tenancy Act, the provisions whereof relating to a surrender are similar to those in the Bengal Tenancy Act with this exception that there is no provision corresponding to clause (6) of section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in the Orissa Tenancy Act. I adhere to the views expressed by me in the aforesaid case.

Therefore, in concurrence with my bord the Chief Justice, I answer the question referred to in the affirmative and would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Foster, J.—I agree with the judgment which has been delivered by my Lord the Chief Justice.

Macpherson, J.—Having had an opportunity of reading and considering the judgment which has just been delivered by my Lord the Chief Justice, I find myself in complete concurrence with the views expressed therein.

The misconstruing of evidence amounts to material irregularity and affords good ground for revision.

Civil revision against a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 15th May 1922.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Petitioners.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue for money due on book accounts, and the dispute is with regard to two items, one of Rs. 325 and one of Rs. 600, alleged to have been advanced to the defendants, who deny having received them. The First Court found that the plaintiffs had not proved their claim, but the Senior Subordinate Judge on appeal gave them a decree, finding that their books were regularly kept and that the entries were sufficiently corroborated, as the evidence of Shankar Das, who had been the plaintiffs' munim, proved the two disputed items.

The defendants have applied for revision, contending that Shankar Das's statement does not prove the items. This contention is correct, as Shankar Das distinctly says that the items of Rs. 325 and Rs. 600 were not paid in his presence and that he did not enter them in the books.

UDAL v. GULAB RAI.

He no doubt admits that he wrote the balances each day in the cash book, and apparently the items in dispute were included in the totals, but Shankar Das's evidence is no proof that those items were genuine and were actually paid to the defendants. The lower Appellate Court has thus misconstrued that evidence, and this is a material irregularity, which affords good ground for revision.

I accept this application, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and direct that Court to give a fresh decision in the appeal that was before it, after considering whether the items are proved by evidence other than that of Shankar Das. The costs in this Court will be costs in the case.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Budaun, dated the 18th February 1922.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this suit are sole proprietors of a parcel of waste land situated in a village called Singauli Purbea. The contesting defendants have constructed a house upon the parcel of land in question. The plaintiffs came into Court claiming the ejectment of the said defendants, with permission to the latter to remove the materials of their house before vacating the site if they should be inclined to do so. Facts were alleged in the plaint fully sufficient to warrant the plaintiffs in claiming the relief sought for. The difficulty about the case is that the lower Appellate Court has not found in favour of the plaintiffs on the questions of fact raised by the pleadings; nevertheless, the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that, on the facts found by him, the plaintiffs are entitled to the relief claimed. It is contended in second appeal that the learned District Judge was in error in taking this view. It seems advisable to give the facts found in the very words of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court.

"The evidence shows that one Chidu Bania purchased from Chidu Kahar a portion of the latter's house, consisting of a thatched room, about 25 years ago. The purchaser removed the thatch and built a mud house in which he has since kept a shop. Two years ago he re-placed the mud constructions by a masonry house without the consent of the zemindars."

Undoubtedly, Chidu Kahar, as the District Judge remarks, had no transferable right in anything except the materials of his house. He could not even convey to Chidu Bania a right of residence on the site in question. He did, however, purport to convey such right of residence, and some 25 years prior to the institution of the suit Chidu Bania, who seems to have been previously residing in the same village, occupied a portion of the house transferred to him and made structural alterations fitting it for use as a shop. No exception was taken to his proceedings by the proprietors of the site. It can scarcely be presumed that they were in ignorance of what had been done. At any rate, there is no finding that they were in ignorance, or continued in ignorance, up to any specified date anterior to the institution of the suit. They did not allege that a cause of action accrued to them when they came to know of the transfer by Chidu Kahar to Chidu Bania; they alleged a different state of facts altogether. If it be taken that Chidu Bania occupied this site without any title and against the will of the proprietors of the same, and that he proceeded to adopt the building previously standing thereon to his own use and occupied the same as a shop for more than twelve years, the inference, in my opinion, would be that he had acquired title by adverse possession against the proprietors of this site. The more correct inference seems to be that Chidu Bania did not occupy the site against the will of the proprietors, but with their consent, and on an express or implied understanding with them that he might have the use of the site for the construction of a shop. I may presume that, although Chidu Bania was not an agricultural tenant, yet he was a member of the village community and his keeping a shop in the village site may well have been a matter of convenience to the community as a whole. If it be presumed that his original possession was permissive, then his subsequent alteration of the premises constituting his shop, by converting the same into a masonry building would not, in my opinion, afford the plaintiff a cause of action. I refer on this point to the decision of a Bench of this Court in the case of Ghorey v. Shib Lal (1). No doubt, the defendant in that suit was an agricultural tenant, to whom a site was granted for the building of a house; but it does not appear to me that any different principles would apply to the case of a village shop-keeper to whom a site had been granted for the purpose of keeping a shop. Other considerations might possibly have arisen if the plaintiffs had come into Court with a true statement of the facts and had alleged that, under the existing circumstances, they were entitled to claim a small ground rent from the principal defendants; but that question does not arise. Accordingly, I allow this appeal, set aside the decisions of both the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit, with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 101, order under—Suit regarding title to property pending on the date of order—Separate suit, necessity of.

An order under O. XXI, r. 101 of the Civil Procedure Code against a person, unless contested by a suit filed within the time prescribed, becomes conclusive against him, and the fact that there was already a suit pending regarding the title to the property would not absolve him from the obligation of filing a suit under r. 103 if he intended to contest the order under r. 101.

Peela Yarakayya v. Kanumuri Venkata Krishnamraju, 41 Ind. Cas 684; 6 L. W. 281; 22 M. L. T. 232; (1917) M. W. N. 721, followed.

The doctrine of lis pendens has no application to a declaration by Court relating to possession of property under r. 101. Such a declaration is not a transfer of the right.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar at Palghat, in Appeal Suit No. 186 of 1919, preferred against a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Alatur, in Original Suit No. 497 of 1917.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasa Gopalachari, for the Appellant:—The plaintiff in this suit, while it was yet pending trial, in execution of a money-decree obtained by him against the defendant in another suit applied for re-delivery to him of the suit properties under O. XXI, r. 101. The defendant objected but was overruled and possession delivered to the plaintiff. The present suit remained undisposed off for over a year after the date of the said order. The plaintiff thereupon applied for additional issues to be framed on the point whether the failure of the defendant to file a suit within a year after the date of the order under O. XXI, r. 101 under Art. 11 (a) had not concluded the case against him. The present suit has been disposed off on the said issue alone, both Courts upholding the plaintiff' contention and decreeing the plains claim.

KUMARAM UNI ACHAN v. KUNHIKRISHNAN NAIR.

In second appeal, my submission is two-fold :—

(1) Article 11(a) is satisfied by the written statement filed by the defendant within a year of the order.

(2) The order in execution proceedings under O. XXI, r. 101 pending the present suit is vitiated by lis pendens.

The first point apparently seems to be concluded by the decision in Peela Yarakayya v. Kanumuri Venkata Krishnamraju (1). But that decision which purports to follow an earlier decision in Balur Krishna Rau v. Lakshmana Shanbhogue (2) has not been followed in other Courts and required to be re-considered.

The written statement has the same effect as a plaint in a claim suit. The subject of a suit under O. XXI, r. 103 and that of present suit are the same. The identical title to the identical property is in question between the same parties. Any further suit may have to be tried wit the present one. The result will be the same. It would be futile to insist on the formality of a fresh suit. The written statement makes exactly the same claim that a plaint would. There is no distinction in substance.

Further, unlike in Peela Yarakayya v. Kanumuri Venkata Krishnamraju (1) case, there was a suit pending here even on the date of the order under O. XXI, r. 10. In any case, that decision cannot apply here. Again a suit under O. XXI, r. 103 is merely in the nature of an appeal. Krishnappa Chetty v. Abdul Khader Saheb (3), Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (4).

Secondly, section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act, it has been held, is applicable not only to voluntary sales but also to execution sales as well as to revenue sales.

As to execution sales reference may be made to Fayyaz Husain Khan v. Prag Narain (5); Radhasyam Mohapattra v. Sibu Panda (6); Bollapragada Venkatalakshmana Garu v. Nenda Seetayya (7); and as to revenue sales to Har Shankar Prasad Singh v. Shew Gobind Shaw (8) and Mathura Prasad Sahu v. Dasai Sahu (9). It is submitted that the principle is the same whether the transfer is by act of parties, or in execution of a decree or by the machinery of the Court. Where the result of an act or order is to confer title on some person, if such act or order is pending a suit, it can only be subject to the decision in the pending suit. The order under O. XXI, r. 101 is, therefore, vitiated by lis pendens.

Mr. S. Ranganadha Aiyar, for the Respondent, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—We think the Subordinate Judge is right in the view he has taken in the case. That view is supported by the ruling of this Court in Peela Yarakayya v. Kanumuri Venkata Krishnamraju (1). The order under O. XXI, r. 101, Civil Procedure Code, having been against the defendant and he not having filed a suit in time to contest it, it has become conclusive against him. The fact that there was a pending suit regarding the title to the property and the defendant had filed a written statement in it claiming title did not absolve him from the obligation of filing a suit under r. 103 if he intended to contest the order under r. 101. That was what was held in the Law Weekly case. The fact that in the present case the suit was already pending when the order under r. 101 was made, whereas in the Law Weekly case the suit was one subsequently instituted makes no difference.

It was contended that the doctrine of lis pendens applies to the present case, but the short answer to it is that there was no transfer of any right here for that doctrine to apply. The Court merely decided that the plaintiff was the person entitled to the possession of the suit property under r. 101 and as the decision

*Mortgage—Crops still to be sown, hypothecation of—Transfer—Notice—*Bona fide purchaser, liability of.

A mortgage of a future crop still to be sown and cultivated is recognized in India. The transaction is not governed by the Transfer of Property Act or by the Indian Contract Act, in so far as it is neither a mortgage of immoveable property nor a pledge of existing moveable propery. It is in the nature of an agreement to mortgage moveable property that may come into existence in future, and as such it creates an equitable charge which is valid and enforceable.

Misri Lal v. Mozhar Hossain, 13 C. 262; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 674, followed.

A bona fide purchaser of such property without notice of the prior charge is not liable for the money due on such a charge.

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Bareilly, dated the 26th of November 1921.

Mr. S. C. Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. N. Malaviya, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A mortgage-bond was executed by Sukhraui, the first defendant, in favour of the plaintiff on the 25th of May 1917, whereby he hypothecated his future sugarcane crop for the years 1325 to 1327 Fasli. The dispute in the present appeal relates to the sugarcane crop of 1327 Fasli, which has been appropriated by the defendant-appellant No. 5, under a sale effected in his favour by defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, who are stated to have purchased the same from defendant No. 1. The question for consideration in this appeal is, whether the mortgage can be enforced against the defendant-appellant. A mortgage of a future crop, neither sown nor cultivated at the time, is recognised and enforced in this country as an executory agreement, binding on the parties to the transaction. The transaction is not governed by the Transfer of Property Act or by the Indian Contract Act, in so far as it is neither a mortgage of immoveable property nor a pledge of existing moveable property. It is, to use the language adopted in Misri Lal v. Mozhar Hossain (1), in the nature of an agreement to mortgage immoveable property that may come into existence in future and as such it creates an equitable charge which is valid and enforceable. But, as pointed out in Bansidhar v. Sant Lal (2) and Sreeram Narasiah v. Bammireddi Venkataramiah (3), a bona fide purchaser of such property without notice of the prior charge is not liable for the money due on such a charge, for the interest of the charge-holder is more or less of the nature of an equitable interest, which it would be undesirable to enforce against a person who was not a party to the contract and had no notice of the sale. The defendant-appellant denied that he had a notice of the charge and the question of notice must, therefore, be tried before any liability can be fastened on him in respect of the money due thereon. The defendant-appellant was added as a party on the application of the plaintiff after the institution of the suit. The circumstances in which he made the purchase are not quite clear. In fact the title-deed, if any, under which he purchased has not been produced. The lower Appellate Court is, therefore, directed to determine, after taking such additional relevant evidence as the parties may adduce, whether the defendant-appellant purchased the sugarcane crop in question or its juice, and had he any notice of the mortgage in suit at the time of such purchase?

Three months' time will be allowed for the return of the finding and ten days will be allowed after the receipt of the finding for the parties to file objections.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6—Partnership—Right to recover past profits—Mere right to sue.

The right to recover past profits of a partnership on taking accounts is not a mere right to sue under section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act but is an actionable claim which is capable of transfer.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 11th April 1923, in Civil Appeal No. 49 of 1923.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are that one Ramlal, a partner in a Ginning Factory at Khirkia, in the Harda Tahsil, sold his interest in the partnership to the plaintiff on 10th April 1922 and the plaintiff has brought the present suit to recover the profits on accounts being taken. It was contended by the defendants that, as regards past profits, the suit would not lie as, under section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, a mere right to sue cannot be transferred. The first Court framed various issues, but dismissed the suit holding that the sale of past profits was the transfer of a mere right to sue, and the other issues were not decided. On appeal the District Judge of Nimar held that the transfer was not one of a mere right to sue. He reversed the decree and remanded the suit for disposal on the other issues. The defendants prefer this appeal against that decision.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has relied on the decision of this Court in Second Appeal No. 736 of 1915, disposed of on 19th March 1917 [Lakhpat Sahai v. Tikaram (1)]. That was a suit by the assignee of a co-sharer for past profits of land, and it was held that the assignment of the right to profits prior to the sale was an assignment of a mere right to sue.

The present suit stands on rather a different footing. It is settled law that an execution creditor can attach and sell in execution of his decree the share of his debtor in a partnership business and that the share of the partner is liable to attachment and sale under old section 266, (present section 60) of the Civil Procedure Code: cf. Jagat Chunder Roy v. Iswar Chunder Roy (2).

In Churamoni Mondal v. Rajendra Kumar Singh (3) it was held that the right to recover money, which might be found due on taking accounts from an agent, is not a mere right to sue within the meaning of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, but is an actionable claim which is capable of transfer; and the transferee can maintain a suit in his own name against the agent for the recovery of such amount as might be found due on taking accounts from him. This principle would presumably apply to a suit to recover past profits of a partnership on taking account.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is vitiated by the Judge being under the impression that the present suit relates to a Company, whereas it is in fact one relating to a partnership. It is true that, under section 253 of the Contract Act, a new partner cannot be introduced into a firm without the consent of all the partners, and the transfer of his interest by Ramlal would have the effect of dissolving the partnership. That, however, will not prevent a suit by the assignee of a partner. In Juggut Chunder Dutt v. Raua Nath Dhur (4) it was held that the effect of clause (c) of section 243 of the Contract Act is not to render an assignment of a share in a partnership concern illegal or void as between the parties to the assignment, but only so far void as between those parties and other partners as to cause an immediate dissolution of the partnership. If no assent is given by the other partners to the assignment, the assignee is upon dissolution at liberty to sue for an account and for distribution, not as a partner, but as assignee of the right of his assignor in the partnership property. Inasmuch, therefore, as a suit by the assignee will lie for accounts and distribution of the share of his assignor in the partnership property, and the right to recover money which might be found due on taking accounts is not a mere right to sue within the meaning of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act but is an actionable claim which is capable of transfer, I am of opinion that the view of the lower Appellate Court is correct and must be upheld. The appeal is consequently dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 13th May 1922, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 11th April 1921.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Madan Gopal, for Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit by certain proprietors for the ejectment of certain persons who are recorded in the revenue papers as occupancy tenants. The full history of the dispute between the parties is given in the judgments of the two Courts below. For the purposes of this appeal it is not necessary to state all the facts stated in the judgment under appeal. A few relevant and salient facts must be stated.

The land in dispute is 13 kanals and 10 marlas in area. One Malok was admittedly its occupancy tenant. On his death his widow Musammat Radho succeeded to the occupancy tenancy and the land was mutated in her name. On the 11th of July 1890, Musammat Radho sold the land to one Gandoo. Sometime in 1890, Musammat Radho died. On the 23rd of March the land was mutated in the name of Gandoo. On the 12th of June 1901 the name of Parabh Dayal, the brother of Gandoo, was also entered in the revenue papers along with that of Gandoo as a joint tenant. In the jamabandi the land was shown in the actual cultivation of Mathru and others as non-occupancy tenants under the occupancy tenants Gandoo and Parabh Dayal. The latter served the non-occupancy tenants with a notice of ejectment. Mathru and others, the non-occupancy tenants, contested the notice by a suit and themselves claimed to be the occupancy tenants directly under the the proprietors, the plaintiffs in this suit. In support of their contention they relied on a deed executed by the proprietors conferring the rights of occupancy upon them. On the 6th of July 1917, their suit was dismissed on the ground that they had failed to prove that they were the occupancy tenants of the land. The result was that they were ejected in 1918 and the land came into the actual possession of the brothers Gandoo and Parabh Dayal. The plaintiffs then instituted the present suit for possession of the land on the allegation that the defendants Gandoo and Parabh Dayal were mere trespassers. The suit was resisted on the ground that the defendants were occupancy tenants and the suit was cognizable by a Revenue Court and the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. In addition to this plea of want of jurisdiction, the defendants raised various pleas on the merits also. They pleaded that Mathru and others were non-occupancy tenants under them; that they were put up by the landlords to defeat the rights of the defendants, and that the plaintiffs had accepted rent from the defendants and had by various acts admitted their right of occupancy in the land. The Trial Court decided in favour of the defendants, both on the merits and on the question of jurisdiction and holding that the plaintiffs were estopped from questioning the occupancy rights of the defendants dismissed the suit.

On appeal the lower Appellate Court reversed the decision of the Trial Court on the merits and held that the defendants were mere trespassers and had not succeeded in establishing their right to the occupancy tenancy. It expressed no opinion on the question of jurisdiction and, setting aside the decree of the Trial Court, decreed the plaintiffs' claim.

Parabh Dayal and his nephew Lal Singh, son of Gandoo, (now dead), have preferred this second appeal on various grounds set forth in the Memorandum of Appeal. Only one plea has been urged before me by the appellants' learned Vakil Mr. Faqir Chand, namely, that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court. The contention put forward by him is that, in view of the proviso (1) attached to sub-section (3) of section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, even if the suit as framed was cognizable by Civil Courts, the procedure prescribed by the Punjab Act III of 1912 should have been followed and the plaint ought to have been returned for presentation to the Collector. In support of this contention the learned Vakil has relied upon a Division Bench ruling in Wadhawa v. Musammat Hassi (1). In that case, as in this case, the landlords had filed a suit to oust from the land the defendants who were alleged by them to be trespassers, and the latter had pleaded that they had acquired occupancy rights in the land by succession to their ancestors. The First Court had decreed the suit and the appeal by some of the defendants had been dismissed by the Divisional Court which had refused to entertain the plea that the defendants were entitled to hold the land as occupancy tenants. A second appeal was presented and the learned Judges held that the suit should have been tried by a Revenue Court under Act III of 1912. They accepted the appeal, set aside the decree of the Divisional Court and, acting under section 100 of the Tenancy Act, directed the decree of the first Court to be registered as a decree of an Assistant Collector, First Grade, and sent the case back to the lower Appellate Court directing it to return the Memorandum of Appeal to be presented to the Collector. The learned Vakil also relied upon the case of Mihan Singh v. Bhagwan Kaur (2) in which the late Mr. Justice Shah Din, relying upon the proviso to sub-section (3) of section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, held that, though the suit was instituted in a Civil Court, the defence raised by the defendants brought the proviso into play and the procedure referred to therein ought to have been adopted by the Munsif. The learned Judge, after setting aside the decision of the Appellate Court, sent the case back to the Munsif with a direction to follow the provisions of the first clause of the aforesaid proviso.

Mr. Madan Gopal, holding the brief of Mr Badri Das, the learned Vakil for the plaintiffs-respondents, has contended that the proviso cannot apply to the facts of this case, inasmuch as the defendants are alleged to be trespassers. He relies in support of this contention on clause (d) under the second group of cases mentioned in section 77, and argues that a suit contemplated by that clause is a suit against a person who is admittedly a tenant and that it does not apply to a case of a person who being a mere trespasser claims a right of occupancy. In support of his contention he relies upon the case of Ghulam v. Jowala Singh (3). This is a decision by the late Mr. Justice Shah Din in which the learned Judge distinguished his previous decision in Mihan Singh v. Bhagwan Kaur (2). The following passage in his judgment is relied on by Mr. Madan Gopal:—

"It will be observed that in Mihan Singh v. Bhagwan Kaur (2) the defendants were admittedly 'tenants' holding under the plaintiffs as their landlords, and the sole dispute between the parties was as to whether or not the defendants were 'occupancy' tenants of the land on which stood the trees which they claimed to have a right to cut in case of need. The matter in dispute was, therefore, one which, under clause (d) of sub-section (3) of section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, could be heard and determined only by a Revenue Court, and upon that ground the 'proviso' to that sub-section was clearly applicable to the case. In the present case, on the other hand, the defendant, according to the allegations in the plaint, is not a tenant of the plaintiffs but is a mere trespasser; * * * * * * his claim clearly does not fall within clause (d) of sub-section (3) of section 77 of the Act."

I have examined the judgment in Mihan Singh v. Bhagwan Kaur (2) carefully and I am unable to find anything in it which may go to show that the defendants in that case were admittedly tenants or that the decision in the case proceeded upon that ground. In any case, the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Shah Din in Ghulam v. Jowala Singh (3) is clearly opposed to the decision of the Division Bench in Wadhawa v. Musammat Hassi (1). Therefore, although somewhat inclined to agree with the view expressed in Ghulam v. Jowala Singh (3) sitting as a Single Judge, I must follow the decision of the Division Bench. According to that decision this appeal must be accepted.

I accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, direct that the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, First Class, be registered as a Revenue Court decree under section 100 of the Punjab Tenancy Act and remand the case to the lower Appellate Court with the direction that the Memorandum of Appeal be returned to the plaintiffs-appellants to be presented to the Collector. Costs will abide the result. The Court-fee paid on the Memorandum of Appeal shall be refunded to the appellants.

Mr. S. Y. Deshmukh, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I accept as correct that the two ladies who represent the present plaintiffs were at Risod when Jaideo, the first respondent, died. He was related to them; they must have known of his death and this appeal against Jaideo has abated. It is pressed for the respondents that this is a fit case where it should be held that when the appeal abates against Jaideo it abates against the auction-purchasers; for their title to the houses comes from Jaideo who was the decree-holder in the execution proceedings in which the house was sold. It is argued that as the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court stand as regards Jaideo they would if they failed here, never be able to get back their purchase-money from Jaideo's representatives, because the plea taken by them would be that, as far as Jaideo was concerned, the house was rightly sold. I am referred to Hadu v. Lala (1). There seems to me force in the contention. As stated in that case a useful test is, could the suit ab initio have been institutad and prosecuted with Jaideo left out? The answer is in the negative.

But proceeding to the appeal on the merits it seems to me that the appellants have no case. The finding by the lower Appellate Court that the debt incurred by Kunjilal upon which Jaideo obtained the decree and attached the house was one incurred by the manager of a trading firm, the plaintiffs being members of that firm, is a finding of fact and it appears to me that it having been come to on a consideration of the oral and documentary evidence on record it cannot be successfully challenged in second appeal. Jaideo, (D. W. No. 10) who was separated uncle of the plaintiffs, tells us that the money was taken by Kunjilal on account of the firm and it seems to me that the finding that the debt was contracted for the purposes which bind the family is correct. It is settled law in the case of an ancestral business that all members of the family including minors are liable for debts incurred in the course of business to the extent of their shares in the family property: Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (2). It is admitted here that the family was joint and that Kunjilal was the manager of the joint trading family; but it is contended that the evidence does not sufficiently show that he contracted this particular debt in that capacity. But, as already stated, there is evidence on record to support the finding of the lower Appellate Court. The shares of the minor plaintiffs in the house are liable for the decree obtained by Jaideo. This appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by respondent No. 6, the purchaser of one of several properties mortgaged by one Barhamdeo Prasad Singh on the 24th July 1904, for amendment of a decree passed on appeal in the High Court in a suit on the mortgage. It appears that two of the mortgaged properties had been purchased by the mortgagee himself. The relevant portion of the judgment of this Court is as follows:—

"It appears that Chota Narain, one of the mortgagees, purchased two of the mortgaged properties, namely 3-annas 8-pies share in Mauzah Chakia, and 4-pies 3-karants share in Mauzah Nawada Kapur. It is argued on behalf of the defendnts that the integrity of the mortgage having been destroyed by the action of the mortgagee the mortgage-debt must be apportioned as between them in proportion to the value of the properties. The learned Subordinate Judge has dealt with the evidence and has recorded a finding that the contention of the defendants is entitled to succeed but that the plaintiffs have failed to put sufficient material before the Court for ascertaining the value of the various mortgage shares. Now, the learned Subordinate Judge concedes that there was evidence before him but he thought that the evidence was not sufficient. In my opinion he should have decided the point on the evidence good, bad or indifferent, that was placed before him by the parties. We direct, by the consent of the parties, that the learned Deputy Registrar of this Court when drawing up the decree do make the apportionment on the basis of the khewat that I understand are on the record. Let the decree be drawn up accordingly."

The decree as drawn up contains the following clause 3:—

"There shall be an apportionment on the basis of the khewat as between the mortgagors and the mortgagees for the properties purchased by Chota Narain, the original mortgagee."

In making this apportionment 3-annas 8-pies share of Chakia have been valued at Rs. 67-13 and 4-pies 3-karants of Nawada Kapur at Rs. 320-3 a total of Rs. 388. The contention on behalf of the respondent No. 6, who is the purchaser of 3-annas 8-pies share of Mouzah Assoya, one of the mortgaged properties, is that under the terms of the judgment of this Court each of the mortgaged properties has to be valued and the mortgage-debt apportioned among them according to their respective values. It is argued on his behalf that as the mortgagee himself split up the mortgage he is no longer entitled to claim that the mortgage should be redeemed in its entirety.

The application is contested by the mortgagee who claims to be entitled to all the remaining properties for the whole of the mortgage-debt except as reduced in proportion to the value of the properties that he himself has purchased.

It seems to me that on the language of the judgment the applicant is entitled to have the mortgage-debt apportioned between the defendants in proportion to the values of the several properties, if there is otherwise no objection to this course.

Section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, dealing with the right of the mortgagor to redeem, contains the following provision:—

"Nothing in this section shall entitle a person interested in a share only of the mortgaged property to redeem his own share only, on payment of a proportionate part of the amount remaining due on the mortgage, except where a mortgagee, or if there are more mortgagees than one, all such mortgagees, has or have acquired, in whole or in part the share of a mortgagor." This section seems to imply that where the mortgagee by his own act in acquiring one of the mortgaged properties has split up the integrity of the mortgage any person interested in a share of the mortgaged properties may redeem that share on payment of the proportionate amount of the balance of the mortgage-debt. The principle has been recognised in Debendra Nath Sen v. Mirza Abdul Samad

SAKHARAM v. GITABAI.

"As illustrations of exceptions to the general rule, it may be mentioned that an apportionment will be directed..... where the mortgagee himself has become the owner of a part of the equity of redemption or where by his own conduct there has been a break up of the entire security. Thus an apportionment has been directed where, as in Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Prasad (2), a mortgagee has acquired in whole or in part the share of the mortgagor in the equity of redemption or where, as in Nawab Azimut Ali Khan v. Jowahir Singh (3), a mortgagee has purchased the equity of redemption in one out of several properties comprised in the mortgage security..... The test to be applied in each case is, whether there has been a severance of the security at the instance or with the consent of the mortgagee, and an apportionment will not be enforced upon the mortgagee unless special equitable considerations are established." In the case in Nawab Azimut Ali Khan v. Jowahir Singh (3) an estate was subject to a mortgage in satisfaction of decrees against the original mortgagor or his representatives, in different parcels. One parcel was purchased by the plaintiffs and another parcel by the mortgagee. In a suit by the plaintiffs as owners of the equity of redemption in the parcel which they had purchased for redemption on payment of their rateable share of the mortgage-debt, the following observations were made by the Judicial Committee, "The appellant (that is, the mortgagee) does not, as their Lordships understand, contest the proposition of the plaintiffs, as purchasers of the equity of redemption in a portion of the mortgaged premises, are entitled to redeem that portion on payment of some proportion of the mortgage-debt." See also the decisions in Hari Kissen Bhagat v. Velat Hossein (4) and Surya Bibi v. Monindra Nath Roy (5).

In view of these authorities and of the actual language of the judgment, it seems to me that the contention of the petitioner is well founded.

The decree must be amended by apportioning the mortgage-debt between the defendants in proportion to the values of the properties held by each.

The petitioner is entitled to the costs of this application: hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Auction sale—Extent of property sold, test of.

The test determining the extent of the property sold at an auction is, to ascertain what the Court intended to sell and what the purchaser understood he bought. The question of what the Court could or should have sold does not arise. [p. 824, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Betul, dated the 4th March 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 6 of 1922.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The point which arises in this appeal is an unusual one. The facts are, that the defendant is the malguzar of a village and in execution of a decree against her 4-annas out of her share in the village was sold and purchased by the plaintiff. It so happened that, prior to the date of the sale one Govindrao, an occupancy tenant, died without heirs, and his land lapsed to the defendant. It measured over 66 acres. The plaintiff claims ¼th share in the land. His claim was awarded by the First Court, but the decision was reversed on appeal by the Additional District Judge, Betul.

It is clear that the land in dispute was not included in the sale, as it does not appear to have been known to the Collector that the land had lapsed to the defendant. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that as he purchased ¼th share in the entire village, he is entitled to all that the judgement-debtor possessed in the village. The test, however, as pointed out by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court, in such cases is, what the Court intends to sell and what the purchaser understands that he bought. This has been laid dawn by the Privy Council in Pettachi Chettiar v. Sangili Vira (1). That case lays down that the question of what the Court could, or should, have sold did not arise. All that required decision was what the Court had sold. This case is followed by the Privy Council in Abdul Aziz Khan v. Appayasami (2): cf. also Mahabir Pershad v. Moheswar Nath Sahai (3).

There can be no doubt whatever in the present case as to what the Court intended to sell and what the purchaser understood he bought. The Collector did not intend to sell the land now in suit, nor did the purchaser understand that he was buying it. The area of the sir and khudkasht lands mentioned in the sale proceedings was only 5·93 and 16·53 acres respectively, whereas the land in suit measures over 66 acres. If that had been included in the sale, it would probably not have been necessary to sell so large a share of the village or the purchase price would have been much greater. In these circumstances, as the Collector never intended to sell this land and the purchaser did not understand that he was buying it, and in fact did not buy it, the view of the lower Appellate Court that he is not entitled to one-fourth share in it is correct and must be confirmed.

It was admitted in argument that the plaintiff purchased 4 annas share in the village without rights in the sir and khudkasht lands, and this land became khudkasht on the death of the tenant without heirs: the plaintiff would have no right to it on that ground also.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is, therefore, confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. D. Kureshi, for Malik Muhammad Hussain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts that need be recited to decide this second appeal are but few and simple.

In the execution of a money-decree a house of the judgment-debtor Sukhu was attached on the 19th October 1915, and subsequently orders were made three times for its sale by auction, but it could not be sold as no bidders turned up to buy it. In the meantime, Sukhu applied to be adjudged insolvent, and notice of his application was sent as usual to the Court executing the decree. The next date of hearing in that Court was the 23rd of March 1916, and on that date the decree-holder Mayya Mal appeared and stated as below:—

"Misl filhal dakhil daftar ho jawe. Phir jari karaonga".

(The record may for the present be consigned to the record office. (I) will take out execution again.)

In accordance with the above prayer of his, the execution proceedings were struck off and the file was consigned to the record-office. Not long after that, that is, on the 3rd May 1916, the insolvency petition was dismissed, and on the 6th May, Mayya Mal put in a fresh application for attachment of the house and obtain an order to attach it. Accordingly, it was again attached on the 13th May. But on the same date Sukha mortgaged the house by a registered-deed to Lakhpat Rai for Rs. 1,500 and the latter eventually applied to the Court executing the decree that the house should be sold subject to his lien as mortgagee. This was allowed in spite of opposition by Mayya Mal, and the latter, therefore, brought a suit to declare that the mortgage was invalid because (1) it had been effected after attachment and was fictitious, and (2) the house belonged to Rolu, son of Sukhu, and not to the latter. (Rolu, too, was a judgment-debtor along with Sukhu). The Trial Court put these points in issue and decided them against Mayya Mal and dismissed his suit. The plea that the first attachment had not come to an end was not raised at all, nor was specially stated in the grounds of the appeal preferred from the order of the First Court. But it appears that it was raised in the course of arguments before the lower Appellate Court which decided (1) that the first attachment did not cease to exist, as the order consigning the file to the record-office was not tantamount to dismissal of the application for default within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 57, Civil Procedure Code, and could not have the effect of removing the attachment, and (2) that the mortgage was made with the knowledge of the second attachment. Upon these findings the mortgage was declared to be invalid and inoperative as against the attaching creditor.

In this further appeal by the mortgagee it is contended on his behalf, on the authority of Fateh Din v. Qutab Din (1), that the first attachment came to an end under O. XXI, r. 57 when the execution proceedings were struck off at the request of the decree-holder himself. In the case cited, a Division Bench of this Court accepted the view of the Allahabad High Court expressed in Dildar Husain v. Sheo Narain (2) that the word "default" used in O. XXI, r. 5, is not restricted to default of appearance but applies also to a failure to do what the decree-holder is bound to do, that is, to go on with his application and have the property sold. According to this ruling the first attachment in the present case came to an end when the decree-holder failed to carry on the execution proceedings and had them struck off.

It was not pressed before us that the second attachment had been made before the mortgage, as there is no material on the record to support that contention. On the other hand, it is clear that the terms of the mortgage must have been settled before the 13th May, because on the early morning of that date the parties to it started from their village for Phillour which is 10 kos or 15 miles therefrom, and there executed the deed of mortgage and presented it for registration at 11 A.M. It was not proved that the attachment had been made before 11 A. M. The decree-holder, therefore, could not avoid the mortgage. This being so, we accept the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the first Court dismissing Mayya Mal's suit with costs throughout.

In a suit for mesne profits it is for the person out of possession to prove what profits the man in possession of his property made out of it and the latter can be made to pay only so much of the profits as the ousted owner can manage to find evidence to prove in detail in the face of the opposition from the trespasser, but as soon as the plaintiff gives some evidence proving prima facie that the profits were somewhere about the sum alleged, the burden of proving that they were less shifts to the shoulders of the defendant.

Appeal from a decree of the Second Subordinate Judge, Raipur, in Civil Suit No. 108 of 1921, decided on the 26th September 1922.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. C. Dut and M. B. Kinkhede, R. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It took the plaintiff-respondent, who is a zemindar, three years after the expiry of the defendants' lease of one of his villages to obtain and execute a decree for their eviction, and in the present suit he claimed Rs. 5,310-2-8 as the mesne profits of those three years, with interest thereon at 12 per cent. per annum which brought the total claim to Rs. 6,500. The defendants pleaded that the rent recovered by them during the whole period was only Rs. 393-10-8, and that they had made and could have made no profits at all by the cultivation of the home farm or the collection of "siwai amdani," as all the three years were years of famine. It was admitted by the plaintiff that the actual amount collected as rent was only Rs. 393-10-8, but he alleged that with proper diligence much more could have been collected. The issues framed referred to the amount of the profits that were obtained or could with due diligence have been obtained under the three heads of rent, siwai amdani and home farm.

2. On these issues the plaintiff examined eight witnesses and the defendants gave no evidence at all. It was held in the lower Court that there was no siwai amdani and that the defendants had not left any rent unrealised through negligence and were, therefore, liable only for the amount actually collected. As the plaintiff has not appealed against either of these decisions we are not further concerned with them. As to the profits made by cultivation of the home farm, the learned Subordinate Judge starts by saying that the "plaintiff's evidence on this point is most unsatisfactory," but he holds finally that it proves that the defendants made a net profit out of their cultivation of this land of not less than Rs. 880 in each of the three years, or Rs. 2,640 in all. Adding to this the Rs. 393-10-8 collected as rent and Rs. 673 as interest he gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 3,706-10-8. Against this decree the defendants have appealed urging that it should be for no more than the Rs. 393-10-8 admitted by them.

3. It is very commonly supposed, and it was here certainly taken for granted by everybody concerned, that in cases of this nature it is for the person out of possession to prove what profits the man in possession of his property made out of it, and that the latter can be made to pay only so much of the profits as the ousted owner can manage to find evidence to prove in detail in the face of opposition from the trespasser, who is the only person who knows anything about it. Section 106 of the Evidence Act is, however, very clear on the point, and, as was held in Gopala Kunbi v. Ramkrishnapuri (1), as soon as the plaintiff has given some evidence proving prima facie that the profits were somewhere about the sum he alleges, the burden of proving that they were less shifts to the shoulders of the defendant.

4. The learned Counsel for the appellants was constrained to admit that these principles would apply in the case of a mortgagee in possession or of a Lambardar of a village, but attempted to urge that they would not apply to the case of a trespasser. The fact that his possession is wrongful seems to me to give them added force, and to increase the weight of the presumptions that can reasonably be made against him. In this case the plaintiff has given evidence proving at least prima facie that the profits were not less than the amount he claimed in his plaint, and in the total absence of rebutting evidence a decree for Rs. 6,500 would not have been improper. At any rate, it cannot be said that the evidence is not good prima facie proof of the profits being not less than Rs. 3,033-10-8 because it has been held in the lower Court that it is completely satisfactory proof of that fact. The appeal is dismissed and the appellants must pay all the costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 62—Novation—Hundi executed in lieu of prior hundi—Suit on subsequent hundi not maintainable—Creditor, whether can fall back on prior hundi—Cancellation, effect of—Negotiability, whether affects liability.

The question as to the negotiability or non-negotiability of an instrument is quite distinct from the question of a party's discharge from liability to the holder, and the liability of the drawer of a bill of exchange or of any subsequent party thereto is not in any way affected by the document being negotiable or otherwise. Nor can a mere cancellation of a bill of exchange have the effect of discharging a party from liability unless it is made with the express intention of discharging that party, for if it is made unintentionally or is made under a mistake it will be inoperative. [p. 829, col. 1.]

Where a hundi is executed in lieu of a prior hundi it is a question of fact in each case whether the parties intended the execution of the subsequent hundi as absolute or conditional discharge of the prior hundi, the presumption being that the debt is only conditionally discharged. [p. 829, col. 2.]

Where an insufficiently stamped hundi is given in renewal of a prior hundi and a suit on the basis of the subsequent hundi is held not to be maintainable, the creditor can fall back upon the prior hundi and section 62 of the Contract Act is not a bar to his doing so. [p. 828, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 24th November 1919, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Amritsar, dated the 23rd June 1919.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, for Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal against a decision of the District Judge of Amritsar, dated the 24th November 1919, upholding a decision of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 23rd June 1919, awarding plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 1,050 principal and interest on the basis of a hundi dated October the 9th, 1915. The facts of the case out of which the appeal has arisen are very simple, and are shortly these:—

On the 9th October 1915, the defendant borrowed a sum of Rs. 1,000 from the plaintiffs and executed a hundi in their favour for that amount. The hundi was payable after 150 days. It appears that the defendants were unable to make any arrangements for the retirement of the hundi on the due date and they consequently executed on the 5th March 1916 another hundi for the same amount in favour of the plaintiffs by way of renewal of the previous hundi of the 9th October 1915, and made an endorsement on the back of the latter hundi that another hundi for Rs. 1,000 had been executed in lieu thereof. On the 23rd June 1917 the plaintiffs brought a suit on the basis of this second hundi of the 5th March 1916, but it was dismissed on the ground that the hundi was not duly stamped. On appeal this finding was upheld by the District Judge, but it was further held that the plaintiffs could fall back upon the original transaction and sue on the previous hundi dated October the 9th, 1915, in lieu of which the second hundi was executed. An appeal was preferred against this decision to the Chief Court, but was dismissed by Mr. Justice Wilberforce by his order dated the 9th August 1918, who allowed amendment of the plaint, and confirmed the order of remand passed by the lower Appellate Court in favour of the plaintiffs. The plaint was accordingly amended, and the plaintiffs sued on the basis of the former hundi of the 9th October 1915. The defendants pleaded that the hundi was without consideration and further contended that it had been discharged and that, consequently, no suit could be maintained on the basis thereof. They also denied the right of the plaintiff to claim interest on this hundi. The following issues were framed:—

1. Has the hundi dated the 9th October 1915 for Rs. 1,000 been discharged ?

2. If discharged, can it now be sued upon ?

3. Did defendant not receive full consideration for the hundi dated 9th October 1915 ?

4. To what interest is plaintiff entitled on the hundi, dated 9th October 1915 ?

5. Is plaintiff entitled to costs on the suit as it now proceeds ?

The Trial Court found against the defendants on all these issues, and decreed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal the learned District Judge upheld the findings of the Trial Court, and dismissed the appeal preferred by the defendants. He further held that the plaintiffs were entitled to claim interest till realisation, and he accordingly accepted the cross-objections filed by the plaintiffs on this point.

The defendants have now preferred a second appeal against this decision through Mr. Manohar Lal, while Mr. Dalip Singh has appeared on behalf of the respondents. The sole question for determination involved in this appeal is, whether the previous hundi of the 9th October 1915 was completely discharged by the execution of the second hundi dated the 5th March 1916. On this question we have no hesitation in holding that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is right, and that the hundi was not discharged. In our opinion the giving of the second hundi would have operated as a discharge of the previous hundi only if the second hundi was legally enforceable. As already observed, a suit was brought on the second hundi but failed owing to its not being properly stamped. It could not have been contemplated between the parties, nor, as observed by Mr. Justice Chatterjee in Udho Shah v. Hira Shah (1), could plaintiffs have agreed that they were to take a piece of waste paper for a security legally enforceable and to place themselves entirely at the mercy of the defendants thereafter as regards the payment of their debt. In Kattayan Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (2) it was held that the giving of a hundi in payment of the price of goods sold operates as a payment, only if the hundi is honoured and that if the hundi is dishonoured the right to sue on the original cause of action is revived. In Sundar Das v. Puran Singh (3), which is a case exactly in point, it was held that where an insufficiently stamped hundi is given in renewal of the prior hundi and a suit on the basis of the subsequent hundi is not maintainable, the creditor can fall back upon the prior hundi, and that section 62 of the Contract Act is not a bar to his doing so.

It is urged by Mr. Manohar Lal that when the second hundi was given the stamp on the former hundi was cancelled, and that an endorsement was made on its back that the defendants had executed another hundi for Rs. 1,000 in its stead. It is contended that the effect of this cancellation and endorsement was that the hundi ceased to be a negotiable instrument any longer and that this circumstance alone was sufficient to indicate that the hundi had been completely discharged. We are unable to agree in this contention. In our opinion the question as to the negotiability or non-negotiability of an instrument is quite distinct from the question of a party's discharge from liability to the holder, and we do not think that the liability of the drawer of a bill of exchange or of any subsequent party thereto is in any way affected by the document being negotiable or otherwise. Nor do we think that mere cancellation can have the effect of discharging a party from liability unless it is made with the express intention of discharging that party, for if it is made unintentionally or is made under a mistake it will be inoperative. This rule is laid down in a series of cases in England, and being a rule founded on equity, justice and good conscience, must be held equally applicable to India.

Now, the only circumstances relied on by the defendants in support of this intention are the endorsement on the back of the hundi, to which reference has already been made, and the fact that another hundi was executed in substitution of the former; and the question for decision is whether these circumstances are sufficient to raise a presumption that the original contract was entirely put an end to and that it was re-placed by another contract which may or may not have been legally capable of enforcement. In the case of Cullianji v. Raghowji (4) Mr. Justice Chandavarkar, following the rule laid down in In re Romer & Haslam (5), held that the negotiable security by a debtor to his creditor operated as a conditional payment only and not as a satisfaction of the debt. In Jambu Chetty v. Palaniappa Chettiar (6), a case cited with approval in Culhanji v. Raghowji (4), it was held by the Madras High Court that whether it was a note or a bill, it was a question of fact in either case whether the parties intended the same as absolute or conditional payment, and the presumption was that the effect of giving or taking a bill or note was that the debt was conditionally paid. We are in entire accord with the view expressed in these authorities, and hold that there is nothing in the present case to rebut that presumption and that the giving of the second hundi only operated as a conditional satisfaction of the debt and not as a real discharge.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

A direction in a decree erroneous but in accordance with the judgment that the pre-emption price should be paid to a wrong person is not a clerical mistake apparent on the face of the decree so as to entitle a person to apply for review of the decree to the successor of the Judge who passed it. Application for revision of the order of the Munsif, Darwah, dated the 31st July 1922, in Miscellaneous Case No. 38 of 1922.

NAGIER v. KRISHNA CHETTIAR.

ORDER.—This is an application for revision of an order on an application for review of the judgment of the Munsif, Darwah, in Suit No. 191 of 1920. The plaintiff in that suit, Yeshwant Rao, a minor, and defendant No. 1 Vithu are brothers and owned pot hissa No. 2 of Survey No. 27 of Mouza Brahmi. Vithu acting for himself and the plaintiff sold the pot hissa to defendant No. 2 Dattoo on the 1st May 1920 for Rs. 500. Baliram Piraji, defendant No. 3, who owned pot hissa No. 1 filed through his uncle Champat as his next friend Civil Suit No. 90 of 1920 against Vithu, Yeshwant and Dattoo for pre-emption of pot hissa No. 2 and on the 27th October 1920 obtained a decree. The decree directed that, on Baliram depositing in Court on or before 31st December 1920, Rs. 428-12-0 for payment to Dattoo he should be put in possession of pot hissa No. 2. Baliram deposited the amount. It was paid to Dattoo and Baliram was put into possession of the pot hissa through the Court. Yeshwant Rao then brought the present suit Civil Suit No. 191 of 1920, through his mother as his next friend for pre-emption of half of pot hissa No. 2 ignoring the sale on his behalf by Vithu and treating himself as still the owner of the other half. In this suit he joined Vithu as defendant No. 1, Dattoo as defendant No. 2 and Baliram as defendant No. 3. Vithu and Dattoo did not appear and contest the suit. Ultimately, on the 21st April 1921, a pre-emption decree was passed in favour of Yeshwant Rao directing that he should be placed in possession by the defendants of a joint half share in pot hissa No. 2 on his depositing in Court Rs. 250 for payment to defendant No. 1 Vithu. Baliram, alleging that his guardian Champat had neglected his interest, applied through another uncle of his as his next friend for a review of the judgment on the ground that the judgment was, on the face of it, erroneous in that it directed the amount to be paid to Vithu and that the error was apparently a clerical one due to a slip of the pen. The Munsif has dismissed the application for a review and Baliram applies in revision. The judgment sought to be reviewed was delivered and the decree passed by Mr. Damle, Munsif. The application for review was, however, made to his successor Mr. Vaidya.

It seems to me that this application for revision must fail on the ground that the application for review could not have been entertained by Mr. Vaidya. It is clear that this is not a case of a clerical mistake apparent on the face of the decree referred to in r. 2, O. XLVII, First Schedule, Civil Procedure Code. The decree is in consonance with the judgment. What is sought to be corrected is the erroneous direction in the judgment that the pre-emption price should be paid to defendant No. 1 Vithu. It may possibly be argued that this is a mistake or error apparant on the face of the record such as is referred to in r. 1, O. XLVII, but it certainly is not a clerical mistake apparent on the face of the decree in the case of which an application to the successor of the Judge who passed the order is not prohibited. This application is, therefore, dismissed. I make no order as to costs.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER No. 332 OF 1922.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 145, O. XXI, r. 40—Arrest of judgment-debtor—Execution of security-bond—Non-appearance of judgment-debtor on day fixed—Application by decree-holder for execution of decree against sureties—Amendment adding prayer for production of judgment-debtor—Waiver—Legality of order of arrest.

NAGIER v. KRISHNA CHETTIAR.

In execution of a decree the judgment-debtor was arrested. He then paid a portion of the decree-debt and as regards the balance put in an application under O. XXI, r. 40, Civil Procedure Code, that he might be released from custody on security being given for re-appearance. A security-bond was executed by which the sureties undertook to produce the judgment-debtor on a day fixed, in default they were to be liable for the balance under the decree. The original execution application was thereafter treated as closed. On the day fixed, however, the judgment-debtor was not produced. The decree-holder thereupon applied by petition for warrants against the judgment-debtor and the sureties for the balance under the decree; but under the direction of the Court the decree-holder amended the relief into one directing the sureties to produce the judgment-debtor at a future date and in default to issue warrants against the sureties, stating at the same time that the sureties had committed default in producing the judgment-debtor and had rendered themselves liable for the decretal amount. The Court ordered the arrest of the sureties on the petition under section 145, Civil Procedure Code. On the application of the sureties thereupon to cancel the said order:

Held, (1) that the fact that the original execution petition was treated as closed did not put an end to the liability of the sureties under a later application; [p. 831, col. 2; p. 832, col. 1.]

Sundara Reddi v. Varadharaja Pillai, 34 Ind. Cas. 407; (1916) 2 M. W. N. 273, referred to.

(2) that the application for execution of the decree by the decree-holder by production of the judgment-debtor on a later date did not constitute a waiver or condonation of the right to enforce the security-bond already broken through non-production of the debtor on the previous hearing day; [p. 832, col. 1.]

(3) that the terms of the surety-bond for production of the judgment-debtor on a particular day, not having been complied with, the sureties had rendered themselves liable for the decretal amount and the order of execution against them as finally passed under section 145, Civil Procedure Code, was not open to any legal objection. Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Madura, in Execution Petition No. 118 of 1922 and Execution Appeal No. 292 of 1922 in Original Suit No. 174 of 1921, dated 24th August and 31st August 1922.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. S. Jayarama Iyer and R. Sethurama Sastri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant in Original Suit No. 174 of 1921 on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Madura was arrested upon an execution petition, Execution Petition No. 60 of 1922. After arrest he paid Rs. 1,750, and as regards the balance, there was an application (Execution Appeal No. 178 of 1922) under O. XXI, r. 40 that he should be released from custody on security being given for his re-appearance. The surety-bond executed by the appellants in this case provided that the defendant should be brought before the Court on the 4th of July 1922, and that the sureties would be responsible for bringing him before the Court on that date, and that in case of failure to produce him on the said date they agreed that they themselves, their heirs and other properties should be liable for Rs. 7,200, the balance due under the decree. It does not appear whether any proceedings took place in Court on the 4th of July 1922, but on the 20th of July 1922 the decree-holder presented a petition asking for warrants against the defendant and the sureties for the balance due under the decree. It appears from the manuscript execution petition that the relief asked for was altered in consequence of an office-note put up in the Subordinate Judge's Court, and that the relief as finally asked for was that the sureties be ordered to produce the defendant in Court and that, in default, warrants should be issued against the defendant and the sureties. The decree-holder amended the prayer as directed, noting at the same time that the sureties were bound to produce the judgment-debtor in Court on the 4th of July and that by failure to do so they had rendered themselves liable for the decree amount.

The present appeal arises out of an application under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, but wrongly described as an application under section 151, for cancellation of the Court's order directing arrest warrants against the judgment-debtor's sureties. The Subordinate Judge held that the order for arrest already passed was a proper order and dismissed the petition

Now it is argued, first, that as the Execution Petition No. 60 of 1922 had been treated as closed on the 29th April 1922, the liability of the sureties came to an end. In support of this argument, the decision in Lalji Sahoy v Odoya Sunderi Mitra (1) has been cited. That was a decision of the Calcutta High Court upon section 336 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. The authority of this decision has been questioned in Sundara Reddi v. Varadharaja Pillai (2), and as it deals with an application under section 336, which corresponds to section 55 of the present Code, a case of a judgment-debtor expressing his intention to apply to be declared an insolvent and furnishing security for appearing when called upon, this decision has not much bearing on the question now before us. In the present case, although Execution Petition No. 60 of 1922 was noted as "closed" there is no order dismissing the petition and it must be noted that the security was given in connection with Execution Appeal No. 178 which is not shown as disposed of at any time previous to the order directing warrant to issue against the sureties.

Then, it is argued that the effect of the decree-holder asking that the sureties should be produced in Court on a date subsequent to the 4th of July 1922 was that he condoned the default to produce the defendant on the 4th of July. The liability of the sureties to pay the decree amount in the present case is governed strictly by the terms of the bond which they gave. In that bond they distinctly promised to produce the defendant before the Court on the 4th of July and they agreed in default thereof to be liable for Rs. 7,200. The amendment in the execution petition presented on the 20th of July, Execution Petition No. 118, was made under the order of the Court under some mistaken impression that the surety-bond provided for the production of the defendant on any date subsequent to the 4th of July on which the sureties might be required to produce him, and that the bond had not already been broken when the execution petition was presented. If the execution petitioner's Vaki amended the prayer in the petition under the directions of the Court, that will not amount to any relinquishment or waiver of his right to enforce the surety-bond. Although the execution petition was in the proper form when first presented and the sureties were not liable by the terms of their bond to be ordered to produce the defendant at a date after the 4th of July, the order finally passed, against which they appeal, was, under section 145, for executing the decree against them, and is not open to any legal objection.

Lastly, Mr. Rajah Aiyar for the appellants argues that the sureties have not been given any notice that the decree-holder intended to proceed against them for default on the 4th of July and thus they have had no opportunity of showing that they did produce him on that date or of explaining their failure to produce him if in fact they did not do so; but in the grounds of Civil Miscellaneous Appeal it is not anywhere suggested that appellants in fact complied with the terms of their bond and that the lower Court should have found that in fact they produced the judgment-debtor on the 4th of July. The question before the lower Court and in the appeal was only whether the order to arrest the sureties for failure to comply with the terms of their surety-bond was correct and on this point we cannot come to any other conclusion but that the lower Court was right.

The Civil Miscellaneous Appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 10—Suit for value of grain agreed to be given for maintenance—Decree, form of.

Where in default of an agreement to deliver a certain quantity of grain as maintenance, a suit is brought to recover the money value of the grain, it is not incumbent on the Court under O. XX, r. 10 to decree the grain itself and that only on failure of delivery of grain should a cash payment be enforced. [p. 834, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Akola, dated the 23rd December 1921, in Civil Suit No. 187 of 1920.

Mr. D. W. Kathale, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. G. Hatvalne, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent in the present appeal is a widow of a dead brother of the defendant. After her husband's death she does not appear to have got on very well with her borther-in-law and, on 25th January 1913, an agreement was come to evidenced by a kararnama executed by each that the defendant should give the plaintiff certain maintenance. That document has been translated as follows:—

"You are my husband's younger brother. I have been living separate from you since the death of my husband. You have agreed to pay me every year 1 khandis 4 maunds of juar by a paili of four seers and besides Rs. 72 cash on Mitti Magh Shudhi 15 as maintenance during my lifetime., I will take (the same) accordingly. I have got two duaghters and I will manage by this to bring them and send them back. You are not responsible. I have hereafter no right to any of your property."

Plaintiff sues claiming Rs. 1,600 as arrears, money and value of grain for the years 1915-18 at Rs. 400 a year and for a declaration that plaintiff is entitled in future to recover Rs. 400 a year from the defendant as her maintenance. She also claimed to have her maintenance made a charge on the defendant's family property. The agreement of January 25th, 1913 has admitted but it was contended that, subsequent to that agreement plaintiff agreed to have her maintenance reduced to Rs. 25 a year and 10 maunds of juari, and that plaintiff has been paid at this rate for some years. It was denied that any arrears of maintenance were due, and the value of the juari claimed was disputed., It was further contended that the amount fixed by the agreement of 25th January 1913 included the maintenance of plaintiff's two daughters and, as these are no longer dependent on their mother, there is a cause for making reduction in the maintenance. It was urged that the maintenance should not be made a charge on the family property, plaintiff having reliniquished all her right to the property.

The case was tried on the following issues:—

"1. Whether plaintiff, subsequet to the agreement of 25th January 1913, agreed to receive Rs. 25 in cash and 10 maunds of juar a year as alleged by the defendant?

"2 Whether defendant paid Rs. 25 and delivered 10 maunds of juar a year to the plaintiff till last year since then?

"3. What was the rate of juar during the years in question?

"4. Whether there is an estoppel as alleged by defendant?

"5. Whether the allowance in the kararnama was fixed for plaintiff and her two daughters or for plaintiff alone?

"6. Whether any oral evidence to prove the same can be allowed?

"7. Whether there has been any change in the circumstances to justify a reduction in the allowance as agreed upon in the kararnama?

"8. Whether, in the absence of any such circumstances, defendant can be allowed to demand a change in the allowance?

"9. Whether a charge can be allowed, as asked for by the plaintiff?

"10. What are the correct Nos. and the acreage of the fields in possession of defendants?

"11. How much allowance should be fixed for the future?

"12. What relief is plaintiff entitled to?"

The findings of the Trial Court may be summarised as follows:—No subsequent agreement, as pleaded, was proved and it was not established that defendant had been paying plaintiff Rs. 25 and 10 maunds of juar yearly. The rate of juar was found to be one rupee a pali. No case of estoppel had been made out and the maintenance fixed in the kararnama was for plaintiff herself and not for her daughters. No oral evidence was permissible to change the contents of the written document, the kararnama, and there is no change in the circumstances so as to justify reduction of the allowance. Four years maintenance, at the rate of Rs. 360 a year, amounting to Rs. 1,440 was allowed being made a charge on the property and defendant was directed in future to pay to the plaintiff Rs. 72 and 24 maunds of juar on account of maintenance as settled by the original agreement. Against that decision the present appeal is filed.

I do not think that defendant's story that a subsequent agreement whereby the plaintiff agreed to reduce both her money and grain allowance has been proved. His witnesses do not support the defendant and it has been rightly held that this agreement is not established. So we have to go back on to the original agreement of 25th January 1913 (Exhibit D. 1) and it is very clear that the agreement come to was to settle plaintiff's maintenance and was independent of her daughters. It is true that the document states that the woman had two daughters but they were both married at the time and would live a great deal in their husband's families and the fact that the agreement states that the amount settled was to be maintenance during the plaintiff's lifetime effectively disposes of the contention that there was to be a reduction in the money and grain settled when it was no longer necessary for the plaintiff to maintain her two girls. On that document plaintiff is entitled to Rs. 72 a year cash payable on Mitti Magh Shudhi 15 and one khandi for 4 maunds of juar. It is contended that the case should be remanded to enable the defendant to establish that circumstances have now so changed that the maintenance as settled by the kararnama is now excessive and plaintiff should be satisfied with a smaller allowance., But this question raises matters both of fact and law and if the defendant wished to raise it he should have done so distinctly in the First Court. It is too late for him to raise it as a defence now. Every decree for maintenance is liable to change if the parties by a suit or otherwise bring to the notice of the Court that circumstances exist justifying either a reduction or a raising of the maintenance allowance. But for the past years, and, as at present held, for the future, the plaintiff is entitled to what she claims. But she has been allowed four years' maintenance. That is wrong . For the maintenance for the year 1915 is clearly time-barred and I must reduce the decree by the amount of one year's maintenance, namely, by Rs. 360.

It is contended for the appellant that in place of money claimed for the juar the juar itself should have been decreed. On the other hand, for the plaintiff it is argued that she had to borrow juar for her maintenance when the price of that commodity was very high and it is but fair that she should be given the money value of that grain. O. XX, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, lays down that, when a suit is for moveable property, and the decree is for the delivery of such property, the decree shall also state the amount of money to be paid as an alternative if delivery cannot be had. But the rule does not state that, in a case of this nature, the Court must invariably decree the article claimed. In cases of most articles it is a question of delivery of the article or as an alternative its value in money. But where we are dealing with grain no specific grain is claimed and I do not think it necessarily follows that a decree must specify that the grain which should have been delivered but which was not delivered must be delivered and only on failure of delivery should a cash payment be enforced. There is much force in the plaintiff's contention that to froce her to accept grain at the present rate when it is cheap is to give the defendant an undue advantage while making her suffer a loss; for she had had to borrow grain at a high rate for her own maintenance, grain which is yet to be repaid in money. I, therefore, decline to direct that the arrears of maintenance should be in grain and money and uphold the lower Court's decision that money alone should be made payable.

With the exception of reducing the claim by Rs. 360 I confirm the decision come to by the Trial Court. The appellant will get his costs on that sum by which he has succeeded in reducing the decree of the First Court and he will pay the respondent's costs]'on that portion of his claim which has been disallowed by this Court. The decree will be a charge on the property specfied by the Trial Judge.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901)—Ejectment —Private partition—One co-sharer in exclusive possession of a holding—Tenant-at-will assigning his rights to another co-sharer—Second co-sharer, if can be ejected.

Where the tenant-at-will of a certain holding which by a private partition among the co-sharers has been assigned exclusively to one co-sharer, transfers his rights to another co-sharer of the mahal, who cultivates the land himself, the former co-sharer is entitled to eject the latter who will not be allowed to plead that as a co-sharer of the mahal, the land in suit is his khudkasht.

Letters Patent Appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Stuart, dated the 13th January 1922, reversing that of the District Judge, Ghazipur.

Dr. M. L. Agarwalla, for the Appellants.

Messrs. J. M. Banerji and Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.– One Ram Naresh was the occupancy tenant of a certain holding. He mortgaged the same with possession to one Dukhit Misir, at a time when such mortgages were not forbidden by law. Dukhit accordingly entered into possession of the holding lawfully with the status of mortgagee. Ram Naresh died in the year 1913. Dukhit remained for a time in possession as a tenant-at-will. His rights as mortgagee had been determined, because Ram Naresh had left no heir entitled to succeed to the tenancy. Dukhit has let into possesion Har Prasad Rai and others who are co-sharers in the village, and we may take it as found that he has let them into possession in return for a money payment made in recognition of his rights as mortgagee. The plaintiffs came into Court alleging that they were the sole proprietors of the land which formed the occupancy holding of Ram Naresh. They claimed that Dukhit was their tenant-at-will, and that they were entitled to eject him under the ordinary procedure prescribed by the Local Tenancy Act, No. II of 1901. Along with Dukhit they claimed to eject Har Prasad Rai and others, who have been described as persons let into possession by Dukhit. In reply to the suit Dukhit said that he was no longer in possession, and had no longer any concern with the land; that he had been paid off by Har Prasad Rai and others, and that the plaintiffs might settle accounts with them. Har Prasad and others pleaded that they were not merely co-sharers in the village, but co-sharers along with the plaintiffs in the proprietary rights over the particular land in suit. They claimed, therefore, that, having induced Dukhit, no matter by what means, to surrender the land into their possession and occupation, they became entitled to hold the same as their khudkasht. In any event, they contended that the plaintiffs had no right to sue them for an ejectment in a Rent Court. The Assistant Collector who tried the case seems to have gone very carefully into the evidence and to have framed proper issues. There has been some controversy before us whether, on the pleadings of the two parties, section 199 of the Tenancy Act did or did not apply; if it did apply, then the question of proprietary title was tried by the Assistant Collector, and there has been no contravention of the provisions of that section. The conclusion arrived at by the Assistant Collector was that, although according to the village records both the plaintiffs and the contesting defendants, Har Prasad Rai and others, held proprietary rights in respect of the land in suit, nevertheless there had been a private partition amongst the co-sharers, not carried out through the agency of a Revenue Court, and not recognised in the revenue papers, according to which private partition the plots of land in suit constituting the occupancy holding of Ram Naresh had been assigned wholly to the plaintiffs. On this finding principally, the Assistant Collector decreed the suit for ejectment. There was an appeal by Har Prasad Rai and his co-defendants to the Court of the District Judge. The District Judge, affirming the findings of the Assistant Collector, dismissed the appeal. On a second appeal being brought to this Court a learned Judge of this Court has reversed the findings of both the Courts below, and has dismissed the suit. We are not quite clear as to the attitude of the learned Judge of this Court with regard to the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the question of the separate title of the plaintiffs. He treats that finding as amounting to no more than this, that there had been an arrangement for convenience of collection amongst the various co-sharers of the mahal, by which the right to collect rent from Ram Naresh had been assigned to the plaintiffs alone. He clearly intends to hold that such an arrangement would not amount to a partition of the land amongst the various co-sharers, or to a surrender on the part of Har Prasad and others of their interests in the proprietary rights over the land in suit, in return for a similar surrender on the part of the plaintiffs of their interests in the proprietary rights over other lands forming part of the same mahal.

We do not think, however, that the finding of the learned District Judge can be interpreted in the way in which it has been in this Court. The finding itself is embodied in the words:—"I hold that under a private partition the plaintiffs-respondents are the proprietors in exclusive possession of Plot No. 879 and that they are entitled to eject the defendants-appellants." Moreover, this finding is to be read in connection with the judgment as a whole, and also with the judgment of the Assistant Collector which was then under appeal. We think that both the Trial Court and the lower Appellate Court intended to find and did find, that there had been a private partition of the mahal, by virtue of which the land in suit had been assigned exclusively to the plaintiffs.

It will hardly be contested that the co-sharers in a mahal have a right to effect a partition by private arrangement amongst themselves, and that it may be the most convenient method of effecting such a partition to assign the entire holding of a particular tenant to a particular group of co-sharers. The only difference between a partition effected by private arrangement and one properly carried out under the orders of the Court is that the incidents of the private partition are difficult to prove, and that confusion and litigation may arise afterwards owing to the preparation of village records which are at variance with the actual facts. We cannot, however, in this case allow the clear finding of the lower Appellate Court in favour of the plaintiffs on this question of partition to be disregarded.

The other point taken by the learned Judge of this Court is that, in any event, the defendants, Har Prasad Rai and others, are not tenants of the plaintiffs, and he seems to think that there was something dishonest in the procedure adopted by the plaintiffs in bringing the present suit, as a suit for ejectment of tenants, in the Rent Court, instead of proceeding against Har Prasad Rai and others as rival claimants to the proprietary rights by a corresponding suit instituted in a Court of civil jurisdiction.

It seems to us at least doubtful whether, in the events, or the plaintiffs having adopted the course suggested by the learned Judge of this Court, Har Prasad Rai and his co-defendants would not at once have taken shelter behind Dukhit and set up the plea that unless and until Dukhit's tenancy were extinguished no suit for ejectment would lie elsewhere than in the Rent Court. At any rate, the position of the plaintiffs is, in our opinion, clear and maintainable on the facts alleged by them and found in their favour. Apart from the provisions of section 34 of the Tenancy Act, when once the Court has found in favour of the exclusively proprietary title of the plaintiffs, there remains the fact, alleged in the pleadings and not seriously controverted, that Har Prasad Rai and his co-defendants were let into possession by Dukhit. Either they are transferees of whatever rights Dukhit possessed under his mortgage, in which case they are just as much the tenants-at-will of the plaintiffs as Dukhit himself was, or they are in the position of sub-tenants who have paid Dukhit a premium instead of an annual rent. This has been made still clearer by pleadings entered by Har Prasad Rai and his co-defendants in the 3rd paragraph of their written statement. We think the learned Judge of this Court was wrong and that he should not have interfered with the decision of the lower Appellate Court. We set aside the decree of this Court and restore that of the lower Appellate Court allowing the plaintiffs their costs of both hearings in this Court, including fees on the higher scale.

Sheikh Niaz Ali, for the Appellant.

Sheikh Muhammad Munir, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal must succeed. The following facts will disclose the nature of the dispute between the parties:—

Karim Bakhsh appellant was dispossessed from the house in dispute in 1918. On the 14th of June 1918 he brought a suit for possession under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The suit was decreed and the decree-holder obtained possession on the 3rd of January 1919. Thereupon the defeated defendants, Gauhar Ali and Ghulam Hussain, on the 9th of January 1919, instituted a declaratory suit and during the pendency of the suit they succeeded in getting restitution of possession over the house pending the litigation. The declaratory suit was, however, dismissed on the 31st March 1919 by the Trial Court. Eventually, the matter came up before the High Court in appeal and was decided against the defendants on the 10th of January 1920. The declaratory suit having finally failed, Karim Bakhsh again applied to the Executing Court for possession being delivered to him in execution of the decree. On examining the execution record, which has come up here, it appears that possession was again given to Karim Bakhsh, decree-holder, on the 24th of April 1919. On the 24th of April 1919 a receipt was filed by the decree-holder acknowledging that he had been placed in possession. In the meantime, an appeal had been preferred by the respondents in the declaratory suit and they again had applied to the Appellate Court for an order staying execution of the decree of Karim Bakhsh and withholding the delivery of possession to him. The Executing Court refused to disposses the decree-holder and to place the judgment-debtor in possession pending the appeal. The execution of the decree as to costs was stayed. It has become necessary to state these facts because the learned Counsel for the defendant before me took up the position that the plaintiff decree-holder had never been put up into possession of the house in execution of his decree. It is, however, clear from the execution record that the decree-holder had got possession in execution of the decree. In spite of all this, the defendants Gaffar Ali and Ghulam Hussain again dispossessed the plaintiff Karim Baksh sometime in November 1921. The plaintiff, therefore, had again to sue for possession. He instituted the present suit on the 21st of March 1922. The suit was originally brought upon an alleged title of ownership. The plaintiff amended his plaint and converted the suit into one for possession as a mortgagee. The lower Court granted him a decree. I find in the judgment of the Trial Court the following observations:—

"The defendants had no better title and possession is evidence of some title, under the circumstances, of the plaintiff."

From this it appears that the Trial Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession on possessory title. The decree of the Trial Court has been set aside by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the plaintiff having failed to establish the alleged mortgage his suit ought to have been dismissed. The lower Appellate Court has, therefore, set asid the decree and has dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff has come up in second appeal to this Court and it has been contended on his behalf by his learned Vakil that he was entitled to a decree for possession against the defendants who were mere trespassers. The position taken up by the learned Vakil is fully supported by authorities. It was decided in the case of Abdul Hamid v. Sarbuland Khan (1) "where a plaintiff has been forcibly dispossessed of immoveable property by a person having no title, he can sue for possession simply on the strength of the possession which he had before he was dispossessed, provided he sues within the twelve years' period allowed by Art. 142 of the Limitation Act." A similar view was taken by the majority of the Judges of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Wali Ahmad Khan v. Ajudhia Kandu (2) in which Sir John Edge, Chief Justice, relying on the cases of Davison v. Gent (3) and Asher v. Whitlock (4), held that a person in possession of property on being dispossessed by another person without any better title is entitled to sue for recovery of possession on his possessory title alone. This case clearly comes within the rules laid down in the above authorities.

I accordingly accept the appeal and, setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, restore that of the Trial Court with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 8—Execution sale of Distillery buildings—Vats, copper pipes and copper stills if pass under sale—Fixtures, test of—English Law, applicability of.

Certain properties were proclaimed for sale in execution of a money-decree and were described in the sale proclamation as 'Distillery Buildings, Door No. 3, Brighton Road Barracks, Peramboor, bearing Re-Survey Number, etc.' The buildings were originally used as a distillery but sometime before the sale no business had been carried on there:

Held, that what was sold was only the building and nothing more, and that the pipes, stills and the vats therein and used in the distillery business did not pass to the purchaser. [p. 839, col. 2.]

In cases of sales of premises in which business is carried on, and not of the business as a going concern or the premises together with the fixtures or machinery, prima facie all that the purchaser is entitled to are the buildings. [p. 839, col. 2.]

The technical English Law of Fixtures is not applicable to India. [p. 839, col. 2.]

NARAYANA SAH v. BALAGURUSWAMY NADAR.

In the case of houses, the primary consideration in determining whether the items claimed are fixtures under section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act should be, whether the articles are provided for the permanent use of the house, and whether they can be said to be articles which are necessary or which are provided for the more beneficial enjoyment of the property; machinery brought into the house for the purpose of carrying on business cannot be included in the term fixtures. Mr. R. N. Aiyengar instructed by Messrs. King and Patridge, for the Receiver.

Mr. P. Venkatramana Rao, for the Auction-purchaser.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the Receivers for an order that they may be permitted to remove from the Vyasarpady Buildings, copper stills, vats, copper pipes and other old furniture and documents and papers belonging to the Nadars' estate and now lying in the Vyasarpady Distillery Buildings which were sold in auction on the 21st of December 1922 in execution of the decree in he suit.

The plaintiff in this suit, A. D. Narayana Sah obtained a simple money-decree against the defendants to whose estate the petititioners, Messrs. Fraser and Ross, have been appointed Receivers. The decree was for over Rs. 2,69,000 and in execution the property known as the Distillery Buildings at Vyasarpady was attached and sold. What was sold was only the Distillery Buildings and the proclamation describes the property to be sold as follows: "Distillery Buildings, Door No. 3, Brighton Road Barracks, Peramboor, Madras, bearing Re-Survey Number, etc." These buildings were originally used as a distillery by the Nadars but sometime before the sale the business ceased to be carried on there. One of the stills had been removed by the Nadars themselves and the property which the Receivers want to remove consist of pipes, stills and a number of vats.

The application of the Receivers is opposed on the ground that what they want to remove are fixtures which in law go with the property and which have passed to the auction-purchaser. The contention for the Receivers is that, what was sold was only the building and nothing more and that, apart from any question of law about fixtures, they are entitled to remove whatever was put in there for the purpose of the business by the Nadars. It is also contended that the Law of Fixtures does not apply to India and that, even if it did, the articles sought to be removed are not fixtures which in law could pass to the purchaser.

I am of opinion that both these contentions are sound. So far as the purchase is concerned, it seems to me to be clear that what was sold was only the Distillery Buildings. In cases where business is carried on in the premises and the sale is only of the premises and not of the business as a going concern, or the premises together with the fixtures or machinery, prima facie all that the purchaser is entitled to are the buildings. It can hardly be the intention of the parties when they sell the building alone without reference to the machinery or the business that the purchaser should get the valuable machinery in the buildings by calling them fixtures and by claiming to get them under that head. Even assuming that the plaintiff is entitled to all the fixtures properly so called, I think it is clear from the evidence of Mr. Barker, who was examined as an expert in this case, that the vats and the pipes cannot be fixtures in any sense of the term. As regards the copper stills, they are 8 feet in horizontal diameter and 7 feet in vertical diameter. They are placed upon two iron rails and they can be removed by pulling down the brick and mud wall which is put upon one side for the purpose of keeping them in position. As pointed out in Mofiz Sheikh v. Rasik Lal Ghosh (1), the technical English Law of Fixtures is not applicable to India. The provisions as to fixtures are contained in the Transfer of Property Act. Section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act runs as follows:—"Unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied a transfer of property passes forthwith to the transferee all the interest which the transferor is then capable of passing in the property and in the legal incidents thereof. * * *"

(1) 6 Ind. Cas. 796; 37 C. 815; 14 C. W. N. 952; 12 C. L. J. 246.

And where the property is a house, the easements annexed thereto, the rent thereof accruing after the transfer, and the locks, keys, bars, doors, windows and all other things provided for permanent use therewith. Section 3, clause 25, of the General Clauses Act defines "immoveable property" as including land; benefits to arise out of land and things attached to the earth, or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth. It seems to me that, in cases of houses, the primary consideration in determining whether the items claimed are fixtures under section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act should be whether the articles are provided for the permanent use of the house, and whether they can be said to be articles which are necessary or which are provided for the more beneficial enjoyment of the property and I do not think that under that term machinery brought into the house for the purpose of carrying on businsss can be included. One important test in these cases is, with what intention were the articles put into the house? Were they put in for the more beneficial enjoyment of the house or with the object of improving the value of the house by making it more artistic or were they put in with a collateral purpose?

Numerous cases were referred to by Mr. Venkatramana Rao in the course of his able argument but I do not think that the facts of the present case would render those cases applicable. Hobson v. Gorringe (2) was a case where the deed of transfer conveyed the land in question "together with the saw mill, engine-house, ware-houses and other buildings erected thereon and the fixed machinery and fixtures" to secure a loan and the contest was between the mortgagee on the one hand and the vendors of an engine fixed to the freehold which was sold on the hire purchase system. In the present case the sale proclamation is clear and only sells the Distillery Buildings, no reference being made to any machinery in the premises. Reynolds v. Ashby (3) is similarly a case of conflict between the owner of a machinery sold on the hire-purchase system and the mortgagee who had taken possession. Lord Lindley in giving judgment observed. "My Lords, I do not profess to be able to reconcile all the cases on fixtures, still less all that has been said about them. In dealing with them attention must be paid not only to the nature of the thing and to the mode of attachment, but to the circumstances under which it was attached, the purpose to be served, and last but not least to the position of the rival claimants to the things in dispute." Monti v. Barnes (4) was a case where the mortgagor subsequent to the mortgage removed the fixed grates from various rooms and substituted for them "dog-grates", which were of considerable weight and it was held that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the true inference was that the "dog-grates" were substituted with the object of improving the inheritance and that they were, therefore, fixtures which passed to the mortgagee. A. L. Smith, M. R. referred with approval to the observations of Blackburn, J., in Holland v. Hodgson (5) where the learned Judge observes: "There is no doubt that the general maxim of the law is, that what is annexed to the land becomes part of the land; but it is very difficult, if not impossible, to say with precision what constitutes an annexation sufficient for this purpose. It is a question which must depend on the circumstances of each case, and mainly on two circumstances, as indicating the intention, viz., the degree of annexation and the object of the annexation." The Master of the Rolls was of opinion that. "the question which has to be considered in such a case is whether, having regard to the character..and the circumstances of the particular case, the article in question was intended to be annexed to the inheritance or to continue a mere chattel, and not to become part of the freehold."

Applying these tests, it seems to me to be clear that the object of the Nadars in placing what are known as fixtures in the building was simply to carry on the business of distillery there. It will be a dangerous doctrine to hold in this country that plant and machinery brought into a building for the purpose of trade being carried on whether by the owner or by the mortgagee were so annexed to the building as to make them pass for fixtures merely because the building is sold either by the owner or by the Court in execution.

I direct that the Receivers do remove the articles referred to in the Judge's summons. As regards costs, I direct that the Receivers' taxed costs as between Attorney and client do come out of the estate and that the purchaser do bear his own costs. Certified. I fix the fee of expert at Rs. 150.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 87, 167—Landlord and tenant—Abandonment of holding, what amounts to—Usufructuary mortgage by tenant, effect of—Annulment of incumbrance—Procedure.

There may be an abandonment of a holding apart from the provisions of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but in such a case it must be proved either that the tenant has transferred his whole interest in the property and ceased to take any further interest therein, as, for example, by a sale of the whole property, or that he has abandoned the right to re-take possession in future or has either left the village without the intention of returning or done some other act which would clearly indicate that he no longer retained the spes recuperandi. [p. 844, col. 1.]

The mere fact that he has mortgaged the entire holding under a usufructuary mortgage and has given possession to the mortgagee continuing himself to reside in the same village, affords in itself no evidence from which it can be inferred that he has entirely abandoned his rights in the property and has no intention of ever redeeming the mortgage and re-taking possession. Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Bhagalpore, dated the 2nd December 1920, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpore, dated the 10th September 1919.

Mr. S. M. Mullick, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Bhagalpore, reversing a decision of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiffs in the suit were the mortgagees by a usufructuary mortgage executed in their favour by the recorded tenants of the landlord of two holdings measuring, respectively, 55 bighas 1 cottah and 4 bighas, which they acquired under an instrument granted by the tenants on the 11th December 1916. At or about the time that this mortgage was executed the landlords sued the recorded tenants for rent in respect of the two holdings in question and obtained decrees against them. In pursuance of those decrees the properties were put up for sale and sold one on the 26th March 1917 and the other on the following day.

The sales were in due course confirmed. The plaintiffs as mortgagees of a non-transferable occupancy holding when they applied to deposit the decretal amount to save the sale were not permitted to do so. The tenants subsequently applied under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the auction-sale but that application was rejected and on the 15th December 1917 the landlords got delivery of possession and forcibly dispossessed the plaintiffs. The present suit was instituted by the plaintiffs in September 1918 just after they had been dispossessed claiming certain declarations as to the validity of their usufructuary mortgage, as to the collusive nature of the rent suit, as to the illegality of their dispossession by the landlords and seeking for recovery of khas possession of the land. The case made by the plaintiffs in their plaint was that from the date of the mortgage up to the time of their dispossession they had been in possession of the whole of these two holdings; that the landlord defendants having brought the property to sale with power to annul incumbrances had failed; within the time prescribed by section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to take any steps to annul their incumbrance and, therefore, that they were not entitled at the date when the plaintiffs were dispossessed to disposses them, nor to treat the incumbrances as if they had never in fact existed. The case made by the landlords defendants was, in the first place, that there had been no valid mortgage at all; that the mortgagees had never been in possession and that in fact the incumbrance created by their mortgage, if it were a valid mortgage, had been annulled, and that the procedure provided in section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had been complied with. It was their case that they had no knowledge of the plaintiffs' incumbrance until within one year of the time when they applied to the Collector or, as was the fact in this case, to the Deputy Collector to annul the incumbrance.

The Trial Court found all the issues in favour of the plaintiffs and granted them a decree for possession holding that their incumbrance had never been properly annulled, that it still subsisted, and that the landlords were not entitled forcibly to eject them after the sale in execution of their decree without first having complied with the provisions of section 167 of the Act. There can be no doubt that the mere sale of property in execution of a rent-decree does not in itself, without further steps being taken by the purchaser, annul any incumbrance there may be existing on the property sold.

The landlords appealed from the decision of the Subordinate Judge to the District Judge. The learned District Judge arrived at the conclusion that the plaintiffs had in fact been in possession of the whole of the property in dispute until they were dispossessed by the landlords. He further found that the mortgage was a bona fide mortgage and that the tenants had delivered up the entire possession of the property to their mortgagees. Further, that they had paid no rent for the three years prior to the rent suit which was brought just at about the time the mortgage was granted and that they had paid no rent since. He considered that these facts in themselves were sufficient to constitute an abandonment of the holding by the tenants and that in such circumstances it was not necessary for the lardlords to proceed either under the provisions of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which refers to voluntary abandonment by the tenant, or to follow the procedure laid down under section 167 which relates to annulment of incumbrances. He considered that section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not exhaustive and that if there was in fact an abandonment of the property to the landlord, apart altogether from section 87, the landlords were ipso facto on such abandonment entitled to re-enter upon the property and to eject any transferee or mortgagee who had taken his interest from the tenants in the case of a non-transferable holding.

From that decision the plaintiffs have appealed. The only question for consideration in this appeal is whether or not upon the facts found by the learned District Judge he was entitled to arrive at the conclusion that there was an abandonment. In other words, could he properly says that, where the tenant of a non-transferable occupancy holding has mortgaged his holding under a usufructuary mortgage and has put the mortgagee in possession and thereafter ceased to pay his rent although he has not left his residence in the village, that the tenant has abandoned his holding. In support of this proposition the case of Samujan Roy v. Munshi Mahaton (1) was relied upon. That, however, was a case where the raiyat had sold his non-transferable holding and was no longer in possession of the same and paid no rent and, in such circumstances, it was found that he had in fact abandoned the holding to his landlord. There is, however, to my mind a great distinction between the case of an out and out sale where the tenant purports to transfer all the interest he has and the case of a usufructuary mortgage where the tenant at all events retains the equity of redemption and may within a short period of the execution of the mortgage recover the property back by payment of the sum advanced. The case of Monohar Pal v. Ananta Moyee Dasya (2) decided by the Calcutta High Court was also relied upon by the respondents in support of the learned District Judge's decision. The facts of that case were certainly more similar to the facts found in the present case. That was an appeal from an appellate decree. The question was, whether the lower Appellate Court was entitled, upon the facts proved before it, to arrive at the conclusion that the tenant had in fact abandoned his holding. The facts proved were that a usufructuary mortgage had been granted by the tenants for a certain number of years. The mortgagees had continued in possession of the land through their burgadar even after the expiry of the term and the raiyat had left the village and no longer lived there and had in fact cut off all connection with the holding. The Judge of the First Appellate Court upon these findings arrived at the conclusion that there had been an abandonment and the High Court in second appeal refused to disturb that finding. It was pointed out in that case that section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not exhaustive as to the rights of the landlord in the case of abandonment; that it only provided for the rights of the landlord under the particular circumstances referred to in that section but that if, in fact, there was an absolute abandonment of the holding apart altogether from that section then, no doubt, the landlord was entitled to re-enter and annul incumbrances such as that granted in that case. The Court pointed out that the question for determination was largely and principally a question of fact and one on which the opinion of the lower Appellate Court must carry considerable weight when the matter comes before a higher tribunal on second appeal, and as there was a definite finding that the tenant no longer lived in the village and, further, that he has not got any connection with the jote in suit which meant, in the opinion of the Court, that his interest in the jote had ceased, the Court came to the conclusion that they could not disturb the finding of fact. It seems to me that in the present case the facts are entirely different. The tenant, it is true, has granted a usufructuary mortgage but he has not parted with his entire interest in the property and there is abundant authority for saying that the mere fact that he has granted a usufructuary mortgage over the whole property does not in itself entitle the landlords to re-enter. He has not in this case left the village or abandoned his residence. He still resides there and, although he has not paid the rent, it does not seem to me that the facts established in this case are sufficient to entitle the Court to arrive at the conclusion that, as a matter of law, there has been an abandonment of the holding. The learned District Judge in dealing with the facts after pointing out that it was the plaintiffs' case on the evidence that the tenants, even after the mortgage, still continued to cultivate a portion of the land and that it was the defendants' case upon their pleadings and their evidence that the tenants had all along been in possession and the mortgagees never had been in possession, nevertheless arrived at a finding of fact that the mortgagees had been in possession of the whole property from the time of their mortgage and that no portion of it had been cultivated by any of the tenants. I am not sure how far he was entitled to arrive at a conclusion of fact which was not the case made in the evidence either by the plaintiffs or by the defendants and his findings on that question are not definite, although I have no doubt he intended to arrive at the conclusion that the whole of the property was cultivated by the mortgagees after the execution of the mortgage-bond. He gave reasons for supposing that this was probably the truth of the matter. It is, however, not necessary to consider that question further because, in my opinion, there was no evidence upon which he could properly come to the conclusion that there had been an abandonment in this case. I agree that, apart from section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, there may be an abandonment of a holding, but I consider that in such a case it must be proved either that the tenant has transferred his whole interest in the property and ceased to take any further interest therein, as, for example, by a sale of the whole property or that he has abandoned the right to re-take possession in future or has either left the village without any intention of returning or done some other act which would clearly indicate that he no longer retained the spes recuperandi. In the present case the fact that he has mortgaged the property under a usufructuray mortgage and had given entire possession to the mortgagees continuing himself to remain in the same village to my mind affords in itself no evidence from which it can be inferred that he had entirely abandoned his rights in the property and had no intention of ever redeeming the mortgage and re-taking possession. The result, therefore, is that the learned District Judge's finding on this point cannot, in my opinion, stand.

The learned District Judge having decided the case in favour of the defendants upon the point which I have just mentioned did not proceed to consider the question of fact raised by Issue No. 12, namely, whether the incumbrance had been duly annulled. It was the defendants' case that the provisions of section 167 of the Act had been complied with. Whether they had, or had not, depended upon questions of fact. These facts were not considered by the learned District Judge. It will be necessary, therefore, before this case can be finally disposed of, that a finding should be arrived at upon that question. The result will be that the decree of the learned District Judge dismissing the suit will be set aside and the case will be remanded to him to try that part of Issue No. 12 upon the facts, which relates to the question of whether the incumbrance had been duly annulled or not. There may have been other issues which were material to the decision of the case which were not considered by the learned District Judge but they have not been brought to our attention. If there are any such issues, then the parties will be entitled to raise them before the learned District Judge on remand. We think that the plaintiffs are entitled to the costs of the appeal to this Court. The costs of the Trial Court and of the appeal to the District Judge will abide the ultimate result of the suit.

The Court to which application is made for execution of a decree is bound by the terms of the decree and has no power to go behind those terms or to enter into questions beyond the scope of the decree. [p. 845, col. 2.]

The holder of a decree enforcing a right of pre-emption, who subsequently to the date of the decree sells the property to a stranger, does not by such conduct debar himself from obtaining possession of the property in execution of the decree. Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 19th December 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, with Special Powers, at Jullundur, dated the 1st October 1921.

Mr. Abdul Ghani, for the Appellants.

Lala Faqir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Gul Muhammad Khan and Faqir Muhammad Khan obtained a decree for possession by pre-emption of certain land subject to the condition of their paying into Court within a certain time the price fixed by the decree. They made payment by due date. Thereafter, one Ghulam Muhammad applied for execution of the decree by delivery to him of possession of the land decreed on the allegation that the decree had been sold to him.

Gul Muhammad Khan and Faqir Muhammad Khan appeared in Court and stated that they had sold the decree to Ghulam Muhammad and that they possessed no rights in the land. The Court refused the application holding that the decree was not transferable and this order was upheld on appeal and is now final.

The present second appeal arises out of a subsequent application by Gul Muhammad Khan and Faqir Muhammad Khan for delivery of possession to them. The application was allowed by the First Court, but that order has been reversed on appeal by the District Judge on two grounds. The first was that the previous order in Ghulam Muhammad's application was correct and in accordance with a decision by this Court reported as Mehr Khan v. Ghulam Rasul (1) which laid it down that a decree for pre-emption is not capable of transfer so as to enable the transferee to obtain possession of the pre-emptional property in execution, and that to allow the original decree-holders now to execute the decree would enable them to hand over the property to Ghulam Muhammad and avoid a second suit for pre-emption against him. The second ground was that, at the time of the present application, Gul Muhammad Khan was an undischarged insolvent and neither he nor Faqir Muhammad Khan had applied for execution for the benefit of all the decree-holders within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 15, Civil Procedure Code.

The decision on the first point, in my opinion, was erroneous. It was laid down in Ram Sahai v. Gaya (2) that the holder of a decree enforcing a right of pre-emption, who subsequently to the date of the decree sells the property to a stranger, does not by such conduct debar himself from obtaining possession of the property in execution of the decree. It is noteworthy that in this case the alleged sale was transacted after the title to the pre-empted property had vested in the original decree-holders by reason of their payment into Court of the purchase-money, and thus the case is distinguishable from that dealt with in Mehr Khan v. Ghulam Rasul (1). But whatever the subsequent effect of the transaction between the decree-holders and Ghulam Muhammad may be, the Court to which application for execution of a decree is made is bound by its terms, as are the parties to it, and has no power to go behind it or to enter into questions beyond its scope. This was explained in Ram Sahai v. Gaya (2), where it was pointed out also that the pre-emptor decree-holder, as here, in praying for execution of decree was merely obeying its terms, and that the only rights of the vendee judgment-debtor were to receive the purchase-money before handing over possession to the decree-holder.

(2) 7 A. 107; A. W. N. (1884) 224; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 305.

The same principles apply to the second ground on which the learned District Judge has dismissed the application. The judgment-debtors have not raised the objection of Gul Muhammad Khan's insolvency in the capacity of his creditors and O. XXII, r. 12 specifically excepts proceedings in execution from the operation of rule 8 of the same Order under which a defendant may apply for the dismissal of a suit on the ground of the plaintiff's insolvency. The Executing Court has to take the decree as it stands and to enforce its provisions. The Receiver of the Insolvency Court is the party to object to the decretal land being handed over to the insolvent defendant, who is bound under penalties by the Insolvency Law to make it available for the liquidation of his debts as soon as he receives it, and there is no reason why the judgment-debtor should be allowed to retain possession of the land to his own advantage and to the prejudice of the insolvent's creditors. It may be noticed in this particular case that Gul Muhammad Khan secured his discharge during the pendency of the present second appeal.

For these reasons, I accept the appeal with costs, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the First Court.

Hindu Law—Widow — Power of alienation—Legal necessity—Contribution towards expenses of Sradh of near relation of husband—Second Appeal—Findings of Appellate Court, when can be questioned.

A contribution by a Hindu widow towards the expenses of the sradh of a near relation of her husband half of whose property was in her possession, her obligation to contribute half the expenses being admitted by one of the next reversioners constitutes a legal necessity. [p 847, col. 1.]

Unless it can be shown that the findings of an Appellate Court are wrong in law or there is no evidence to support them, such findings cannot be interfered with in second appeal. [p. 847, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 27th April 1921, affirming that of the Additional Sub-Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 7th December 1920.

Messrs. L. N. Singh and L. K. Jha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Murari Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Darbhanga affirming a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge.

The appellants, as the next reversionary heirs of Jaikaran Kuer after the death of his mother Makunda Kuer, instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises claiming a declaration that a kobala executed by Makunda Kuer on the 12th July 1919 in favour of the defendant No. 1 was not justified by legal necessity and that the alienation is inoperative and not binding upon the appellants.

The Trial Court and the lower Appellate Court dismissed the claim upon the ground that the alienation was justified by legal necessity. The plaintiffs have appealed,

When Makunda Kuer succeeded by inheritance to her son's estate she found herself involved in litigation in which it was necessary to defend her title to the estate against claims by the father of some of the present plaintiffs. Partition proceedings were also started in which she was involved and there can be no doubt that there must have been a serious drain upon the income arising from the estate. She borrowed money from time to time in comparatively small sums giving bonds bearing interest. In 1919, in order to clear herself of debt, the interest on which was running on, Makunda Kuer sold 13 bighas of the property for a sum of Rs. 2,300, the amount of the debts then due. This is the transaction which has been challenged. The objects for which these debts had been incurred were, with one exception, admittedly objects for which the property in the hands of Makanda Kuer might legitimately be alienated if her resources from income were insufficient for the purpose. They were, speaking generally, the marriage and gauna expenses of her daughter, litigation in connection with the property, decrees obtained against the property, Government revenue, some debts of her late husband and a small sum for her own maintenance when, owing to drought, the crops failed.

The only item which has been challenged was a contribution to the expenses of the sradh of Gobind Bati whose husband was a near relation of the Musammat's husband and half of whose property was in her possession whilst her obligation to contribute half the expenses was admitted by the plaintiff No. 1. The District Judge found that, in such circumstances, the necessity was proved and I agree with him.

The main contention, however, which was urged in this appeal was that the learned District Judge had not come to any specific finding as to how much it was reasonable in the circumstances to spend upon the objects for which the sums were borrowed, and that he has not found expressly that the expenses could not have been paid from income. In so far as the expenses for paying off decrees obtained or for Government revenue is concerned, the question of amount can hardly arise. With regard to the marriage expenses and the sradh and the expenses of litigation and maintenace I find no suggestion in either of the judgments that these were attacked as unreasonable in amount, and on looking at the items I confess the amounts expended do not appear to have been excessive. For example, Rs. 250 were borrowed for expenses in connection with the partition suit and the District Judge says that it was not alleged that this was not necessary for such a suit. Rupees 100 were borrowed for maintenance, Rs. 200 for the sradh of Gobind Bati and the other itmes certainly do not appear to be excessive. The learned District Judge, however, dealt with the point which was urged before him that the widow had an income from the property sufficient to defray all these expenses without borrowing. He found that she had to incur extraordinary expenses for litigation and that drought and flood further depleted her resources and he rejected the plaintiff's evidence on this point. He then states "Believing, therefore, the defendants' witnesses I hold that the lady was under the necessity of borrowing money from time to time for the purposes set forth above. I accordingly hold that defendant-No. 1 has satisfactorily proved that each item which went towards the consideration of the sale-deed was a legal necessity and as such this sale-deed is binding upon the reversioners."

The learned District Judge had the evidence of both sides before him, an advantage which we in second appeal do not possess. We are bound by his findings unless it be shown that he went wrong in law or that there was no evidence to support the findings. His findings in this respect were clear and definite and it has not been shown that there was no evidence to support them. Nor do I think it has been shown that the learned Judge misapplied the law. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs to the respondents who have appeared. There will be one set of costs only.

Pre-emption—Sale in recognition of superior right of pre-emption, whether subject to pre-emption.

Pre-emption can be enforced without the intervention of the Courts.

When a vendee in recognition of a pre-emptor's right conveys his bargain to the latter, he is not really effecting a fresh sale, but is merely substituting the pre-emptor for himself as vendee, and such a re-sale or re-conveyance gives rise to no right to pre-empt.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 1st February 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Ajnala, District Amritsar, dated the 29th April 1921.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. N. Rozdon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts in this case are without doubt. On 17th July 1918 Rur Singh sold the land in suit to Muhammad Ismail for Rs. 100, Bur Singh, brother of Rur Singh, demanded to pre-empt and on 15th July 1919 Muhammad Ismail re-transferred the land to Bur Singh, recognising his right to pre-empt.

This suit was instituted by the son of Muhammad Ismail with the prayer that he shall be allowed to pre-empt on the re-sale by his father.

The question for decision is whether a re-sale under such circumstances gives rise to a right to pre-empt.

Pre-emption can be enforced without the intervention of the Courts when a vendee in recognition of a pre-emptor's right, conveys his bargain to the pre-emptor, he is not really effecting a fresh sale, but is merely substituting the pre-emptor for himself as vendee. Bur Singh's right arises out of the prior sale by Rur Singh, whilst plaintiff's right arises out of a re-sale forced upon plaintiff's father by a superior title.

In the circumstances of this case, the re-sale on reconveyance gives rise to no right to pre-empt.

JUDGMENT.

Sachwabe, C. J.—The question is raised as to the liability for costs to the 8th defendant. His position is this. He is the legal personal representative of the 7th defendant who had been brought into the suit by the plaintiff. He defended the suit up to the third or fourth day of hearing and then died. After his death, the plaintiff announced his intention of withdrawing his suit against the deceased person and then claimed that the legal personal representive of that deceased person had no right to be brought upon the record and, when brought upon the record, had no right to receive his costs. The first statement rather startled me, and on looking into the matter, I do not think there is anything in it at all. Under O. XXII, r. 1 the death of a defendant does not cause the suit to abate if the right to sue survives, and under r. 4 when a defendant dies, the Court, "on an application made in that behalf," shall cause the legal representative of the deceased defendant to be made a party and shall proceed with the suit. It is argued that that means that the application should be made by the plaintiff and that the deceased defendant's representative could not apply. I see no reason at all for confining that section to an application made by the plaintiff; for to do so would be gross injustice to the estate of the defendant who has been wrongly brought before the Court and who, having incurred, by reason of his having been so brought before the Court, a heavy expenditure, dies. It is holding that his estate is to be deprived of the indemnity for his expenditure, which would be given to him by law, if he survived, because the plaintiff does not choose to add his legal representative as a defendant to the suit. That would be gross injustice and I see no reason at all for implying any such provision in r. 4 which says definitely "on an application made in that behalf" without confining it to an application by one or other of the parties. The 8th defendant, having been properly joined as a defendant, has quite properly, in my judgment, asked the Court for his costs and the Court was perfectly right in giving his costs. He must also have his costs in this appeal estimated on the Pleader's fee.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi, dated the 28th December 1922.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Appellants.

Lala Tirath Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Delhi returning a plaint, the learned Judge holding that the Delhi Court have no jurisdiction to try the case.

The defendants, who carry on business in Bombay, used to send goods to the plaintiffs, who deal in gold and silver in Delhi, and the latter used to send money to the defendants. The plaintiffs sue for the amount which they allege to be due to them, with interest.

It is alleged by the plaintiffs that the defendants' Munim, Prag Das, came to Delhi and that they entered into the contract with him there. There is only some oral evidence of an ordinary nature in support of this allegation, and I agree with the lower Court in rejecting it. As observed by the learned Subordinate Judge, it is improbable that the defendants, who have extensive business dealings, with their head office at Bikanir and branches at Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, and Kot Kapura, would have sent a man to Delhi to solicit work.

The contract not being shown to have been made in Delhi, the question that remains for consideration is where any money that may be due from the defendants under the contract would be payable. Now the plaintiffs have admitted that the defendants were their Commission Agents, and the lower Court has followed Muhammad Shaffi v. Karamat Ali (1) in which it was held that, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, or of special circumstances showing a different intention, the principal cannot, where the agent carries on business elsewhere, call upon him to render an account at his own place of business, on the ground that the money or goods were sent to the agent from such place. That decision has been followed in later rulings referred to by the learned Subordinate Judge, and it is in point here.

Counsel for the appellant argues that, as the defendants sent goods to the plaintiffs at Delhi, a presumption arises that the money due from them to the plaintiffs would be payable at Delhi, but no such presumption would in my opinion arise. The postal charges for goods sent by the defendants were paid by the plaintiffs, as the latter have admitted, and under section 91 of the Contract Act the delivery of the goods by the defendants to the Post Office or to the Raliway in Bombay for transmission to the plaintiffs would be a delivery to the plaintifts.

The plaintiffs have not been able to show that any money that may be due to them from the defendants is payable at Delhi, and it must, therefore, be held, in accordance with the authorities followed by the lower Court, that the suit is triable at Bombay and not at Delhi.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

In the matter of THE ARBITRATION ACT

AND

In the matter of THE REFERENCE TO ARBITRATION BY MESSRS. M. NARASIMHALU CHETTY & CO., AND P. S. SUBRAMANIA IYER.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), ss. 11, 14—Arbitration and award—Receipt of fees by arbitrators from parties prior to inquiry—Performance of ministerial acts by arbitrator in absence of one party—Misconduct—Statement of arbitrator as to what took place before him, whether conclusive.

Where parties are at variance as to what took place during the course of an inquiry before arbitrators, the proper course is to take the statement of the arbitrators as to the facts as prima facie representing the true state of affairs as to what took place at the time of inquiry, unless there is very strong reason for doubting the accuracy of the statement of the arbitrators as regards the facts which took place before them and within their competence. [p. 853, col. 1.]

The statement of a Judge holding an inquiry as to what took place before him is almost conclusive as regards those facts and there is no reason why, as regards a statement before arbitrators appointed by the parties themselves, there should be any less rigid standard applied when dealing with questions of fact, asserted by one side and denied by the other. [p. 853, col. 1.]

A party to an inquiry before an arbitrator cannot challenge it on the ground that opportunity was not given to him to call witnesses when he himself did not court opportunity by asking the arbitrators to call witnesses or adjourn the inquiry, for the examination of witnesses. [p. 853, col. 2.]

Where a lawful and reasonable fee has been agreed by the parties to be paid to an arbitrator, he is not guilty of misconduct in getting payment of such fee before the commencement of the inquiry. [p. 854, col. 2].

Where an act judicial in character is to be performed, the arbitrators are bound by the same rules as bind the Courts and are not entitled to decide or give their award in the absence of one or more of the parties to the arbitration without notice to them. [p. 854, col. 2.]

But where the act done is not of a judicial nature but merely ministerial in its character, it is competent to one or all of the arbitrators to have it performed in the absence of one or more of the parties. [p. 854, col. 2.]

Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. T. L. Venkatarama Aiyar, for the Counter-Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by one of the parties to a reference to arbitration to set aside the award which was passed by the arbitrators in pursuance of the submission. The petitioner entered into certain contracts with the counter-petitioner who was acting as agent of an English Firm, viz., Messrs. Johnstone Kelly and Macdona. Disputes arose between the parties as regards four indents and after some preliminary correspondence between the parties the matter in different was referred to the arbitration of Mr. Bradshaw of Messrs. Tetley and Whitley and Mr. Jackson of Messrs. Beardsell & Co., under the terms of the arbitration clause in the indents. The case for the petitioner is that the arbitrators acted improperly and he states:

(1) that one of them, Mr. Bradshaw, who was appointed at the instance of the petitioner insisted on payment to him of Rs. 400-0-0 as fees for the arbitration which sum he paid, (2) that the arbitrators gave notice on the 10th January 1922 fixing 15th January 1922 for the enquiry and calling upon the parties to be present and produce their evidence before them; that on that date he presented himself before the arbitrators at the appointed time and place and they asked him to hand over copies of correspondence, samples, etc., which he did and they asked him what his case was and he explained his case to them; that sometime afterwards the counter-petitioner sent in his chit and the arbitrators asked him to wait and after hearing what the petitioner had to say, they asked him to go out and sent for the counter-petitioner; that he does not know what took place between the arbitrators and the counter-petitioner, and that there was no enquiry held by the arbitrators and, in any case, there was no enquiry in the presence of both parties, (3) that the arbitrators subsequently went to the Bank to see the goods and when going asked the petitioner if he wished to follow them to the Bank and whether he had not sufficient confidence in them and he thought that if he accompanied them to the Bank, it might be suggested that he had no confidence and, therefore, he did not insist on following them to the Bank, (4) that nothing further took place till 27th January 1922 when he received by post a letter purporting to be signed by Mr. Jackson, one of the arbitrators, enclosing a copy of the award; that he had considerable evidence to adduce regarding the matters in difference between the parties and expected that in due course the arbitrators would fix another date after examining the goods in the Bank and hold enquiry for adducing evidence on his behalf and for meeting the case of the opposite side and that no such opportunity was given to him, (5) that as the result of the arbitration, the arbitrators found in his favour as regards the three minor contracts but that as regards the important contract relating to 20 cases of crimps, they held that he was bound to take the goods on an allowance of 25 per cent. being given while even before the arbitration the counter-petitioner had agreed to give a discount of 35 per cent., and (6) that the award is invalid because there was no proper enquiry by the arbitrators because the arbitrators misconducted themselves by receiving fees before hand and by not enquiring into the case of the parties in the presence of each other, because there was misconduct and irregularity on the part of the arbitrators in that no opportunity was given to the petitioner to place his evidence before them and to put forward his case after inspection of the goods in the Bank, because no notice of the making or signing of the award was given as required by law, and because the award was also opposed to natural justice and equity.

The counter-petitioner files a counter-affidavit in which he states that on the date fixed for hearing he came a little late; that the petitioner having come earlier was called by the arbitrators to state his case and file the evidence in support of it, that he appeared while this was going on and sent his card and he was asked to wait and told that he would be sent for; that the petitioner came out and he was asked to appear and when he went in he was asked to state his case and file documents, that after some consultation the arbitrators sent for both parties and after stating the points of difference between them asked them what they had to say in support of their respective cases; that the enquiry then went on in the presence of each other and when it was concluded the arbitrators told them that they had finished the case and it only remained to compare the goods with the samples and that they would go to the Bank for the purpose, and that Mr. Bradshaw turned to the petitioner and asked whether he wished to accompany them to the Bank and the petitioner said he had sufficient confidence in them whereupon they said they would inspect the goods and pronounce the award. The counter-petitioner denies the various charges against the arbitrators as not being true. He states that it was not true that the enquiry was not held in the presence of the parties and what was really done was preliminary work before the parties were called in and he also says that if there was any irregularity the petitioner did not take the objection in time and must be deemed to have waived it. As regards the complaint of the petitioner that he was not given an opportunity to place his case before the arbitrators, he says that all the correspondence and samples were filed by the petitioner and he never said that there were other documents to file or witnesses to examine; that the arbitrators said they had finished the case and no suggestion was made that any further enquiry was to be held. As regards the allowance which he had offered to the petitioner of 35 per cent., he states that the consideration for that was the acceptance of all the contracts whereas the arbitrators directed the cancellation of three out of four contracts and gave allowance only as regards one contract. According to the counter-petitioner there was a full enquiry by the arbitrators which took place from 9-45 A. M., to about 12-30 noon. Both the arbitrators have filed an affidavit in which they set out what took place before them. They state that the petitioner came in first on the appointed day of hearing and they asked him to state his case and file any statement that he might like to file and he then filed a statement and also filed all the documents and samples in his possession; that the counter-petitioner was sent for and asked to file his documents and samples which he did and that after perusing the statements and the correspondence they commenced the hearing of the case which was done in the presence of both the parties. They then state that they took the evidence of both the parties; that they confronted the petitioner with the documents which were filed in the case, and that he made certain admissions and that there were also other questions on which they examined both the parties. They state that after they heard all that the parties had to say and after reading all the correspondence, they told the parties they had done with the case and proceeded to examine the goods in the Bank; that the petitioner agreed to their examining the goods and he never told them that he had any further evidence to let in or ever complained about the procedure adopted, and that after comparing the shipment samples with the original they came to the conclusion that as regards one contract the differences in quality, colour, finish and design were not substantial enough to have the contract cancelled and compensation would be sufficient relief, but that as regards the other three contracts, the differences were substantial and so they cancelled them. They state that the case was fully and properly heard by them and there could be no objection to that enquiry.

It seems to me that, having regard to the fact that the allegations before me consist of (1) the allegations of the petitioner as regards certain irregularities which, he says, took place and (2) the allegations of the counter-petitioner that everything was regular and proper, I should act upon the evidence of the two arbitrators, Messrs. Bradshaw and Jackson. So far as it appears, they had no interest in the matter in dispute, and they belong to firms which have been doing large business in piece-goods. Nothing is suggested as regards their competency to try the matters in dispute. In cases where the parties are at variance on the question as to what took place before the arbitrators, it seem to me that the proper course is to take the statement of the arbitrators as to the facts as prima facie representing the true state of affairs as to what took place at the time of the enquiry, unless there is very strong reason for doubting the accuracy of the statement of the arbitrators as regards the facts which took place before them and within their competence. The statement of a Judge holding an enquiry as to what took place before him is treated almost as conclusive as regards those facts, and I do not see why, as regards a statement before arbitrators appointed by the parties themselves, there should be any less rigid standard applied when dealing with questions of fact as to facts which are asserted by one side and denied by the other. Adopting, therefore, this criterion as regards the finding of facts, it seems to me that I must accept the statement made by the arbitrators in their affidavit and the statement made by the counter-petitioner in so far as his statement tallies with that of the arbitrators. On these facts it seems to me that the only points on which there can be any question as regards setting aside the award are (1) whether the taking of fee by both arbitrators before the enquiry commenced would vitiate the award, and (2) whether the fact that the statements were recorded in the absence of the parties during what may be called spade work, before the enquiry, was such as would bring the case within the rulings cited by Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar and thus vitiate the award as being the result of proceedings taken in the absence of the parties. Before proceeding to discuss these two points, I may state that, on the facts, I am not satisfied that there was any imperfect enquiry or that there was any ground for holding that the arbitrators acted in a manner which was not correct. There is nothing to show that the petitioner ever told the arbitrators that he had any witness to examine or any further documents to file. It is admitted that the arbitrators required him to be present at the enquiry with all his documents and with his witnesses, and, that being so, if he had any further witnesses to examine, it was his duty to have told the arbitrators that he wanted to examine witnesses and to ask for an adjournment or to ask that the witnesses, if present, be called and examined. On the contrary, the arbitrators distinctly state that when they closed the enquiry they told the parties that the enquiry was closed and they would inspect the goods and pass the award. In these circumstances, whatever might have been in the mind of the petitioner, it seems that he cannot challenge the enquiry on the ground that opportunity was not given to him to call witnesses when he himself did not court opportunity by asking the arbitrators to call witnesses or adjourn the enquiry, so far as regards the statement that the petitioner had no opportunity to examine witnesses. As regards the petitioners not proceeding to the Bank when the arbitrators went there to inspect the goods, I am not satisfied that the arbitrators did anything which would have justified the petitioner in coming to the conclusion that he need not go to the Bank along with the arbitrators. The arbitrators do not say that they suggested to him that it might be left to them to inspect the goods in his absence or that anything was done by them which would lead the petitioner to believe that if he did accompany them to the Bank he would be prejudicing his case by leading the arbitrators to suppose that he had no confidence in them. It is highly improbable that the arbitrators would have made any such suggestion, especially when the counter-petitioner went with them to the Bank. I am not, therefore, in a position on the evidence to hold that any such statement was made to the petitioner which prevented his going along with the arbitrators to the Bank.

Turning now to the two legal objections on which it may be possible to set aside the award, I think that, as regards remuneration, there is nothing illegal or improper in what the arbitrators did. It is not suggested in this case, as it was in the cases cited before me, that such demand was exorbitant or improper or that there was anything in the conduct of the arbitrators in the making of the demand which would have led the parties to suppose that the arbitrators were doing something which the parties would not have done but for the demand. It is admitted that each party had agreed to pay a fee of Rs. 400-0-0 to the arbitrators for their trouble. I think that few merchants in Madras would waste their time in arbitration unless it was worth their while to do so, so that in the present case the mere fact that Rs. 400-0-0 was fixed as payable by each party is no ground for holdihg that there was anything improper. Neither party demurred to make payment and it is not suggested that payment was made in such circumstances as would indicate that, if payment was not made, the consequences would be against the party that refused payment. I am referred to section 11 of the Arbitration Act but there is nothing there which precludes the arbitrators from either fixing the fees or receiving the fees beforehand. All that the section says is that in case the award is given the arbitrators shall state in the award what amount is payable to them for their fees. That assumes that they were not paid beforehand, and, to hold that the arbitrators are bound to conduct the arbitration on the off chance of their being paid or not at the end of the enquiry would be going beyound the provisions of section 11. Reference was made to Russell on Arbitration, page 204, and to In re Enoch and Zaretzky & Co. (1)

That was a case where there was some improper conduct on the part of arbitrators. There the umpire made a demand which the Judge thought unreasonable and the party himself repudiated it as unreasonable. It is far from establishing the proposition that in case of a lawful and reasonable fee agreed to be paid by the parties, the arbitrator is guilty of misconduct if he takes his fee in advance. In the absence of any decision, I am not prepared to hold that, in this country at least, the arbitrators would be guilty of misconduct in getting payment of a reasonable fee beforehand and thus avoid the alternative, if they are not paid, of suing the parties in Court, because there is no other remedy open to the arbitrators.

The next objection is that, on the facts and the statement of the arbitrators, a certain portion of the work was done in the absence of each of the parties. If that portion of the work which was done was judicial in its character, there can be no doubt that the authorities cited show that the award is liable to be set aside. The cases referred to by Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar, namely, Harvey v. Shelton (2) Dobson v. Groves (3), Ganes Narain Singh v. Malida Koer (4), Cursetji Jehangir Khambatta v. Crowder (5) no doubt lay down the rule that, where an act judicial in its character is to be performed, the arbitrators are bound by the same rules as bind the Courts, and that the arbitrators are not entitled to decide or to give their award in the absence of one or more of the parties to the arbitration and without notice to them. But there are also cases which hold that, where the act done is not of a judicial nature but merely ministerial in its character, it is campetent to one of the arbitrators or all the arbitrators to have those acts performed in the absence of one or more of the parties. I need only refer to Anderson v. Wallace (6) and Manindra Nath v. Mohanunda Roy (7). In the present case what happened was, that both the parties did not turn up together, the petitioner turned up and the arbitrators asked him to state his case and file his document and he gave a written statement stating what his case was and filed such documents as he had in his possession. While he was doing this the counter-petitioner turned up and the arbitrators sent for him, asked the petitioner to remain outside, and took from the counter-petitioner a written statement setting out his case and received his exhibits. Then the arbitrators state that after having gone through these statements and exhibits they called in both the parties and began the inquiry. It seems to me that what the arbitrators did in this case was what Courts do, namely, receiving statements and documents, before the enqiry commences. These acts are purely ministerial in their character and it is not suggested that before the filing of written statements or documents in Court the Registrar is bound to call the other party and do it in his presence. What really took place after this was the commencement of the judicial proceedings before the arbitrators and, so far as the affidavit of the arbitrators goes, when that act was done both the parties were present. I am, therefore not prepared to hold on the facts of this case that the award is liable to be vitiated because there was a judicial act done by the arbitrators in the absence of the party. This disposes of the two main objections taken by Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar on the facts as appear from the affidavits of the arbitrators.

The question of waiver has been raised by the counter-petitioner which I do not think it necessary to discuss at present. I have no doubt that it is open to the parties to waive any irregularities which may have taken place in the conduct of the enquiry so long as those irregularities are not fundamental and do not involve any prejudice or hardship to the party. The question as to whether there is sufficient reason in this case to warrant my holding that there was a waiver does not arise on the facts found by me. I find that there was no irregularity in the conduct of the proceedings before the arbitrators.

The result will be that the application is dismissed with costs of the arbitrators and costs of the counter-petitioner (two sets).

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1569 OF 1922.
May 9, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Moti Sagar.

Musammat JIWAN—PLAINTIFF——APPELLANT

versus

WADHAWA—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

Custom—Succession—Daughter v. Collaterals of 6th degree—Kalwan Jats of Mauza Wazirpur, Tahsil Raya, Sialkot District.

Among Kalwan Jats of Mouza Wazirpur in the Raya Tahsil of the Sialkot District, a daughter excludes collaterals in the 6th degree from succession to the ancestral property of her father. [p. 855, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 13th February 1922, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Sialkot, dated the 25th April 1921.

Lala Gobind Ram Khanna, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this case are Kalwan Jats of Mauza Wazirpur, in the Raya Tahsil of the Sialkot District. The land in suit consists of a half share of 50 kanals 17 marlas originally owned by one Surjan, who died some years ago, leaving him surviving a widow Musammat Gulab Devi. Musammat Gulab Devi died some four years ago before the institution of the suit and after her death the land was forcibly taken possession of by some persons who set up a mortgage in their favour by the original proprietor. On the 10th of July 1917 one Wadhawa brought a suit for possession of this land alleging that he was a collateral of Surjan, related to him in the 6th degree, and that he was entitled to succeed in preference to the defendants whose possession it was alleged was unlawful. Subsequently, the plaintiff Musammat Jiwan applied to be made a party alleging herself to be the daughter of Surjan and entitled to succeed to his property on the death of his widow, Musammat Gulab Devi, in preference to the defendant Wadhawa. On the 5th of October 1920 she instituted a separate suit on her own account for possession of this land, alleging that, in the presence of a daughter, a collateral of the 6th degree had no right to succeed. The Trial Court found in favour of the plaintiff, Musammat Jiwan, and decreed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge came to a contrary finding and held that, according to the custom obtaining among the parties, a daughter was not an heir and that she was excluded by collaterals however remote they may be. He further held that the onus of proving that the daughter was entitled to succeed in preference to collaterals was upon the plaintiff and that she had not discharged this onus. In this view of the case the plaintiffs' suit was entirely dismissed. The plaintiff has now come up in second appeal to this Court after obtaining a certificate from the District Judge under section 41 (3) Punjab Courts Act.

The sole question for determination is whether, according to the custom obtaining among the parties daughters are excluded by collaterals of the 6th degree. On this question I have no hesitation in holding that the defendants on whom the onus lay has entirely failed to discharge it. A large number of witnesses were produced by him in support of his contention but their evidence is worthless and does not in any way improve his case. Some of the witnesses have of course stated that daughters are excluded by collaterals and have also cited some instances but no mutation entries have been produced in support of their statements, and, in the absence of any documentary evidence, I am unable to hold that the instances have been proved. A large number of witnesses have given evidence to the effect that daughters are excluded by collaterals of the 3rd or 4th degree. This evidence can obviously be of no assistance to the defendant, inasmuch as the dispute in the present case is not between a daughter and a collateral of the 3rd or 4th degree but between a daughter and a remote collateral of the 6th degree.

In my opinion, the evidence produced is wholly insufficient to discharge the burden which lay upon the defendant, and I accordingly hold that the defendant has no right to succeed in preference to the plaintiff, the daughter of the deceased.

The result is that the appeal is accepted and the plaintiff's suit decreed with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Messrs. A. B. Mukharji and Shiveswar Dayal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. N. Bose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are stated in the order passed by the Court below and it is unnecessary to recapitulate them. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the applicants in Civil Revision No. 172 of 1923 being joint with their respective father and uncle, who were the judgment-debtors in the mortgage-suit, cannot be said to have been in possession of the disputed lands or portion thereof on their own account within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 101 of the Code, and the learned Subordinate Judge relies upon the case of Cooverji Hirji v. Dewsey Bhoja (1). The learned Subordinate Judge has also found that the applicant in Civil Revision No. 209 of 1923 is the farjidar of Kali Prashad, another of the judgment-debtors in the mortgage action, and that he cannot be said to be in possession of the disputed lands on his own account. In this view the learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed their applications under O. XXI, r. 100.

I will first consider the case of Ramkishun and Sital Prashad, the applicants in Civil Revision No. 172 of 1923. The case Cooverji Hirji v. Dewsey Bhoja (1) was considered by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Radha Gobinda Missir v. Raghunath Missir (2). Their Lordships of the the Calcutta High Court did not agree with the view of the Bombay High Court in so far as that Court laid dawn that a person who is in joint possession is not in possession on his own account. I entirely agree with the view which has been taken by the Calcutta High Court in the case to which I have referred. It must follow, therefore, that the applicants were in possession on their own account and were entitled to maintain an application under O. XXI, r. 100 of the Code.

The question raised in Civil Revision No. 219 of 1923 is, whether the learned Subordinate Judge was entitled to consider the question of benami in an application under O. XXI, r. 100. It has been held in a series of cases that in a claim case arising under O. XXI, r. 58, the Court is not entitled to go into a question of benami. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge in this case that the applicant was the benamidar of Kali Prashad is based on reasons which are entirely speculative. In my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge was not entitled to go into a question of benami in order to determine whether the applicant was in possession of the disputed property in his own right.

It was contented before us that the learned Subordinate Judge had complete jurisdiction to decide the cases in the way in which he has done and that we ought not to interfere with his decision in revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It has, however, been held by this Court that where the decision of the Court is the very basis and foundation of jurisdiction in its limited sense as distinguished from powers it at once comes within the purview of section 115 of the Code. See Dhanwanti Kuer v. Sheo Shankar Lall (3). The learned Subordinate Judge held by a misconstruction of the provisions of law that the petitioners were not entitled to maintain an application under O. XXI, r. 100 of the Code. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is the very basis and foundation of jurisdiction. In my opinion it is open to us under section 115 of the Code to say that he declined a jurisdiction which was vested in him by law by misconstructing the provisions of the Code.

(1) 17 B. 718; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 471.
(2) 20 Ind. Cas. 253; 18 C. W. N. 695; 18 C. L. J. 138.
(3) 51 Ind. Cas. 873; 4 P. L. J. 340; (1921) Pat. 361.

I would accordingly set aside the orders passed by the Court below and allow the applications which were made by these petitioners to the Court below. There will be no order for costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 144, 151—Restoration, power of, extent of—Receiver, appointment of—Dismissal of suit—Court, power of, to pass necessary orders.

The power of a Court to grant restitution is not confined to cases covered by the provisions of section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code, but, under that section, read with section 151, of the Code it may be extended to other cases.

A Court which appoints a Receiver has authority to pass orders necessary for winding-up his charge, even after the dismissal of the suit.

Administrator-General of Bengal v. Prem Lall Mullick, 22 C. 1011 at p. 1012; 22 I. A. 203; 5 M. L. J. 157; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 660; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 672 (P. C.), relied on.

Petition for revision of the order of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Lahore, dated the 10th November 1922.

Lala Daulat Ram, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Harcharan Das Kumar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are these:—

Ganga Ram, one of the partners in a Cotton Factory, sued for dissolution and rendition of accounts against the other partners. In November 1919 a preliminary decree was passed and a Receiver was appointed, Lala Darshni Dial, Pleader, Chunian. He, by permission of the Court, leased the Factory by auction and the successful bidder was Ganga Ram himself for Rs. 4,325, for one year. The conditions of sale were that one-fourth of the rent should be paid at the end of the sale and the remaining three-fourths at the time of transfer of possession which was to be not later than the 4th September 1921.

On the 8th December 1921 the Court sanctioned the lease to Ganga Ram and directed the Receiver to deposit in Court the whole of the lease money. This the Receiver did not do.

On the 25th May 1922 the whole suit was dismissed on a finding that it had abated.

On the 17th August 1922 Natha Ram and Dial Chand, two of the defendants, applied for an order to the Receiver to deposit the lease money in Court. Notice was issued to the Receiver and to Ganga Ram who appeared on the 10th November 1922 when the Court passed the order of which revision is sought.

This order shows that Ganga Ram alleged (1) that he had restored possession of the Factory to the partners who represent 14-16ths share, (2) that he had paid 1-4th of the rent to the Receiver at the time of the sale, viz., Rs. 1,081-4-0, (3) that he had paid Rs. 1,231-2-9 to the partners owning 12-16ths of the Factory and (4) that he had spent the remaining Rs. 2,012-9-3 on repairs to the machinery. The Court ordered him to deliver possession to the applicants as well as to the other partners and to deposit in Court the 3-4ths of the rent which he had not paid to the Receiver. It was remarked that he could claim for anything spent on repairs by a separate suit.

It is contended now by Ganga Ram that this order was passed without jurisdiction and that it was illegal in so far as it directed refund of the amount spent on repairs and of Rs. 1,231-2-9 paid to the partners of 12-16ths share.

As regards the latter point it would seem that there was no necessity for directing Rs. 1,231-2-9 to be paid again, since, even if a substantial fraction of the rent is to be deducted for the Receiver's charges, the share of the partners owning three-fourths is not likely to be less than

Rs. 1,231-2-9. The Court might well reconsider this matter. According to the terms on which the lease was sold the lessee was not entitled to deduct anything out of the rent towards repairs. He was to take over the machinery as it was and was to hand it back in the same state.

The learned Counsel for the respondents informs me that his clients have obtained joint possession of the Factory with the other partners and so this part of the order is now of no practical importance.

On the question whether the lower Court had jurisdiction in the circumstances to pass an order directing Ganga Ram to pay the three-fourths of the rent which according to his agreement he should have paid when he took possession. I have heard a good deal of argument much of which is not relevant to the point. On behalf of Ganga Ram it is contended that when the suit was dismissed the Court became functus officio and could not pass any subsequent order about the subject-matter of the suit. It has, however, been laid down, e. g., in the Privy Council ruling Administrator-General of Bengal v. Prem Lal Mullick (1), cited by the lower Court, that a Court which appointed a Receiver has authority to pass the orders necessary for winding up his charge even though the suit is no longer pending, and it has also been ruled, although in situations which are not precisely similar, that the power of a Court to grant restitution is not confined to cases covered by the provisions of section 144, but, under that section, read with section 151, may be extended to other cases. Here the order dismissing the suit reversed the preliminary decree and also rendered it necessary that the position previous to the appointment of the Receiver should be restored. Ganga Ram undoubtedly had the exclusive use of the Factory for at least a year and, as matters turned out, was not entitled to the exclusive enjoyment of the proceeds. In default of authority that the order passed by the Court below was beyond the scope of section 151 I am not prepared to interfere.

The petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, r. 1—Injunction, ad interim—Prima facie case—Balance of convenience—Adjournment—Counsel, duty of, to argue.

Where a plaintiff asks the Court to grant an ad interim injunction against the defendant during the hearing of the suit, he must show that prima facie he is entitled to succeed in his claim on the merits. The Court should in such a case see as well on which side lies the balance of convenience. Where the defendant has spent a large sum of money which would be wasted if the injunction is granted and the defendant is a man of means and any damage likely to be done by him can be recovered from him if the plaintiff succeeds in his claim the balance of convenience is against the grant of the injunction. [p. 860, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge at Jamtara, dated the 11th April 1922.

Messrs. S. C. Mitter and S. S. Bose, for the Appellants.

Messrs. N. C. Sinha and B. B. Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—The proprietors of Mauza Jorekuri in the Sub-Division of Jamtara gave a Mukarrari Settlement of that Mauza to Kulanada Tewari and others between the years 1868 and 1874 who in their turn gave a mining lease in or about October 1913 to one Mr. Cornish. The plaintiffs in the present suit derive title from Mr. Cornish by two transfers dated the 27th March 1915 and 1st November 1915. The contesting defendant, who is defendant No. 13, claims title from the patnidars, to the mineral rights by various transfers between the years 1899 and 1920. The present suit was lodged on the 3rd September 1921 in respect of an area of 65 bighas on the allegation that the defendant has begun to work coal upon 26 bighas of the land leased to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs ask for a declaration of title in respect of the whole 65 bighas and recovery of possession in respect of the 26 bighas and for permanent injunction restraining the defendant from working coal upon the entire area of 65 bighas. During the hearing of the suit they also asked for an ad interim injunction.

It appears from the order-sheet of the Subordinate Judge that on the 17th December 1921 he passed an order stating that he would hear arguments as to the prayer for an injunction on the 24th January 1922. On this latter date the Subordinate Judge being absent the case was postponed by his locum-tenens till the 22nd March 1922. On that date a pro forma defendant being dead time was given to amend the plaint and to issue summons on his heirs and the case was adjourned to the 11th April 1922. On the 11th April 1922 the parties were complete and the Subordinate Judge called upon the Pleader of the plaintiffs to make their submissions for an ad interim injunction. The Pleader replied that he had not come prepared and he asked for another date which the Court refused. The Court thereupon made an order refusing temporary injunction on the ground that it was advisable that the question should be thrashed out in the case itself and that it would be better not to issue a temporary injunction in the preliminary stage of the trial.

The present appeal has been preferred against the Subordinate Judge's order.

Now, I am unable to understand why the Pleader of the plaintiffs could not argue the case on the 11th April. The 24th January had been fixed for arguments and the fact that the case was adjourned to the 2nd March and again from the 2nd March to the 11th April did not relieve the Pleader from the duty of being prepared to argue his client's case. It was wholly unreasonable to expect that the Court would fix another date for the argument of this small question. Therefore, although the reason given by the learned Subordinate Judge for dismissing the application may be open to question, I do not think that, in the circumstances, he was wrong in refusing any further adjournment and in dismissing the application upon the materials before him. Now, from the materials which are upon the record and which have been placed before us, it does not appear that any prima facie case was made out before the Subordinate Judge establishing the title of the plaintiffs to the sub-soil rights. A mere allegation that the mukarraridar had sub-soil rights will not do in view of the fact that the defendant expressly denies that the mukarrari lease carried with it sub-soil rights as well. It is said that the lease was in the possession of the mukarraridar. That may be so, but having come to press an application for ad interim injunction it was the duty of the plaintiffs to place materials before the Court upon which such an injunction could be granted. Then, it appears that the defendant has already spent a large sum of money in sinking shafts and in building cooly lines on the lands surrounding the 26 bighas now in dispute and that upon the 26 bighas he has sunk a shaft which has cost a certain amount of money. The question is whether the stopping of all work in connection with this shaft will injure the progress of the work which has already been done in the surrounding lands and whether the cost already incurred in sinking the shaft will be more or less thrown away if the work is now stopped. On the whole, the balance of convenience seems to lie in favour of the defendant, for the defendant is a substantial man and any damage that may be done through the surface and the underground will, in the event of the plaintiffs succeeding in their suit, be recoverable from the defendant. In my opinion, on the materials before the Court, the temporary injunction should be refused.

The oder of the Subordinate Judge, therefore, is affirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Bucknill, J.—I agree.

In the matter of the insolvency of SAUNDHA AND ALI MUHAMMAD, INSOLVENTS.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 54 —Fraudulent preference, what amounts to.

In order to hold that a transfer by a debtor in favour of a creditor constitutes a fraudulent preference within the meaning of section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the Court must be satisfied that the dominant or substantial motive of the debtor in making the transfer was to prefer the particular creditor and not to secure some advantage for himself. [p. 862, col. 1.]

Sharp v. Jackson, (1899) A. C. 419; 68 L. J. Q. B. 866; 80 L. T. 841; 15 T. L. R. 418; 6 Manson 264 and In re Rai Mohan Shaw, 53 Ind. Cas. 175, relied on.

A debtor approached one of his creditors for a fresh loan which he required for business purposes. The creditor refused to advance the loan unless his previous debt was also secured. The debtor then agreed to grant him a mortgage of certain property to secure the previous debt and the fresh advance:

Held, that the mortgage did not constitute a fraudulent preference within the meaning of section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. [p. 863, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 12th May 1922.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamar Chand and Lala Gobind Ram Khanna, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Karnal in the exercise of his insolvency jurisdiction, annulling a certain mortgage made by one Saundha, insolvent, in favour of one Daulat Ram, a creditor, and holding that the mortgage was void and inoperative as against the other creditors under section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920). It appears that Saundha was in very embarrased circumstances in the beginning of 1921 and was unable to meet his liabilities as they fell due. On the 10th of February 1920 he executed a deed of mortgage in respect of the property in dispute in favour of Daulat Ram, creditor, for a sum of Rs. 5,000. The deed purported to secure an antecedent debt of Rs. 3,200 and a new advance of the balance Rs. 1,800. It also provided for interest at the rate of twelve annas per cent. per mensem. The details of the consideration as recited in the mortgage-deed were as follows:—

		Rs.
1.	Paid before the Sub-Registrar	1,700
2.	Registration expenses	100
3.	Due on a hundi dated 18th March 1919 ...	400
4.	Due on a hundi dated 18th September 1919 .	200
5.	Due on a hundi dated 15th October 1919 ..	300
6.	Due on a hundi dated 15th January 1920 ..	500
7.	Due on a hundi dated 15th February 1920 ..	400
8.	Due on a hundi dated 7th March 1920 ...	1,000
9.	Due on account of interest on hundis ..	400
	Total	5,000

On the 18th of April 1921 Saundha filed an application asking to be adjudicated an insolvent, and he was adjudicated as such by the orders of the learned District Judge of Karnal on the 6th of December 1921. A Receiver was appointed and he took charge of all the properties of the insolvent. The creditors filed certain objections to the effect that the debt alleged to be due to Daulat Ram was fictitious and that the mortgage executed by Saundha in his favour was void under section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The Receiver was asked to make a report, who held an inquiry into the genuineness of these debts and found that the debts were proved and that the mortgage in favour of Daulat Ram was not fictitious. He accordingly entered the name of Daulat Ram in the list of the secured creditors for Rs. 5,375; Rs. 5,000 principal plus Rs. 375 interest. No appeal was preferred against this decision by the creditors as required by section 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, but an application was made by them to the Court in which the very same objections were repeated, and it was prayed that the Court itself should hold an inquiry. The learned District Judge framed the following two issues:—

1. Whether the debt was fictitious ?

2. Whether the mortgage was fraudulent and void under section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act?

Evidence was recorded on both these issues, and the finding of the learned District Judge was that the debts were genuine, but that the transfer was void for fraudulent preference.

Mr. Manohar Lal for the appellants has attacked this finding as being based on an erroneous view of the law, and it has been contended by him that, upon the true view of the facts, it cannot be upheld. His contention is that before a transfer can be avoided under section 54, it must be definitely proved that in making the transfer in favour of a creditor the debtor acted with the view of giving that creditor a preference over his other creditors, and that the onus of proving that such fraud was intended is upon the creditor who alleges it or who impugns the transfer. This contention, in my opinion, is well-founded and must be given effect to. There is ample authority for holding that, to constitute a fraudulent preference within the meaning of section 54, the Court must be satisfied that the dominant or substantial motive was to prefer the creditor and was not to obtain some advantage to the debtor. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume II, page, 282, the law on the subject is thus laid down:—

"In order that a transaction may be set aside as a fraudulent preference it is necessary to prove that it was carried out with the substantial or dominant view of giving the creditor a preference over the other creditors. This need not be the primary result aimed at; it is sufficient that it should be the object aimed at in bringing about the primary result. If the transaction can properly be referred to some other motive than that of giving the creditor paid a preference over the other creditors, the payment is not fraudulent and void, for it is from the intention on the part of the debtor to act in fraud of the law, that is, to prevent the distribution of the bankrupt's property rateably among all his creditors, that the invalidity of the transaction arises."

Again, at page 285, it is stated that "in every case the state of mind of the debtor is the paramount consideration. The intention or view to prefer the creditor as the causa causans of the debtor's conduct is the cerdinal point round which the whole question turns; if that intention be shown not to have existed, it is of no importance that the creditor had knowledge of the debtor's insolvency or that the debt was not due, nor for this purpose is it true that the debtor must be taken to have intended the natural consequences of his act." This is in accordance with what was laid down in the case of Sharp v. Jackson (1) where it was observed by Lord Esher* that, "the question depends not on the mere fact that there has been a preference but also on the state of mind of the person who made it, and that it is not sufficient to say that, the natural consequence of the act being to prefer, the intention to prefer follows." In In re Rai Mohan Shaw (2) it was held by Mr. Justice Rankin that, "if the debtor's real object was to procure a further advance for himself, or to satisfy the demands, or escape the pressure of the creditor, or if he had both these objects as the main-spring of his action, then the transaction is not fraudulent preference."

The law on the object being as stated above, the question for consideration is, whether in the present case the mortgage was made with the dominant view of preferring the respondent and was thus void under section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. There is not a particle of evidence on the record to show that the mortgage was made with any such view or that the suggestion of making the mortgage emanated from the debtor. On the contrary, the evidence shows that the debtor was in need of money, that he went to Daulat Ram, mortgagee, and asked him to advance a sum of Rs.1,800 who told him that he would not make the advance until his previous debt was secured and unless sufficient security was given for the new advance which he desired him to make. The debtor agreed to the suggestion and probably in an endeavour to keep his business afloat as long as possible he granted the mortgage. These circumstances clearly show that the real intention of the debtor was not to prefer one creditor to other creditors, but to gain a substantial advantage for himself. I am satisfied that the transfer was not fraudulent within the meaning of section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and that it must be upheld. It has, however, been argued on behalf of the respondent that the existence of the debts has not been fully established and that the finding of the learned Judge of the Court below on this point is erroneous. With this contention I am unable to agree. The previous hundis have been produced and the last balance proved by the scribe, Suraj Mal. The advance of Rs. 1,800 at the time of the mortgage and the hundi of the 7th of March 1920 for Rs. 1,000 were not contested in the Court below, and it is not competent to the respondent to question these two items in this Court. The debts in question have, in my opinion, been fully proved, and I do not see any force in the contention that they were not due.

Mr. Monohar Lal's next contention is that under section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act it was only the Receiver who could avoid the mortgage and no other person. In view of my finding, however, on the first question that the mortgage was valid, it is unnecessary to give a finding on this question.

I accept the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and upheld the mortgage.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 90, 92, O. XXII, r. 4—Execution of decree—Sale, application to set aside—Death of decree-holder—Notice to legal representatives, whether necessary.

Although the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to substitution on the death of a party are not applicable to execution proceedings, an execution-sale cannot be set aside unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby, as required by the proviso to clause (2) of r. 92 of O. XXI of the Code; [p. 865, col. 1.]

During the pendency of an application by a judgment-debtor to set aside an execution sale one of the decree-holder auction-purchasers died and his legal representatives were not properly substituted in his place and no notice was served upon them. Eventually the sale was set aside:

Held, that, in the present case, no notice having been given to the legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder auction-purchaser, the order setting aside the sale was liable to be set aside. [p. 865, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpore, dated the 28th February 1923, setting aside an order of the Munsif, Madhipura, dated the 13th December 1922.

Mr. Jagannath Prasad, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision by the decree-holders auction-purchasers inviting this Court to revise the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore whereby he set aside the order of the Munsif of Madhipura and set aside the auction-sale. The facts are shortly these: Raja Kalanand Sinha and Raja Kirtyanand Sinha of Baneli obtained a rent-decree against the opposite party on the 14th January 1916. On the 1st June 1918 application was made for execution of this decree and after service of the usual notices the holding was sold on the 5th September 1918 and purchased by the decree-holders themselves. The sale was confirmed on the 21st November 1918, and on the 13th November 1920 about two years after the confirmation of the sale an application was made by the judgment-debtors for setting aside the sale under the provisions of O. XXI, r 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Munsif dismissed the application by his order dated the 4th August 1921 apparently on the ground that the application was barred by limitation without deciding the case on merits. The judgment-debtors went in appeal against this order to the District Judge who set aside the order of the Munsif and remanded the case for trial on merits. Before the case was heard on remand, one of the decree-holders Raja Kalanand Sinha died on the 22nd September 1922. Thereupon on the 7th November 1922 the judgment-debtors filed an application for substitution of his two sons Kumar Ramanand Sinha and Kumar Krishnanand Sinha as his heirs. Kumar Krishnanand Sinha was a minor and is still a minor. No notice appears to have been served upon the two sons of Raja Kalanand Sinha and no guardian was appointed for the minor son Kumar Krishnanand Sinha. Notice appears to have been served on Awadh Bihari Sinha who was the manager under a power-of-attorney executed in his favour by the late decree-holder, Raja Kalanand Sinha. At the time of the hearing objection was taken by the other decree-holder, Raja Kirtyanand Sinha, that the application for setting aside the sale could not proceed in the absence of the heirs of the other decree-holder, Raja Kalanand Sinha, and that no notice had been properly served on the heirs and no guardian had been appointed for the minor heir. The learned Munsif gave effect to this objection and, although he found upon the merits that the sale ought to be set aside on account of irregularities in the conduct of the sale and inadequacy of price caused thereby, yet he rejected the application on the ground that the heirs of Raja Kalanand Sinha had not been regularly brought on the record and had not been served with notices.

Against this order the judgment-debtors went on appeal to the District Judge. The appeal was ultimately heard by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, and he held that the provisions in the Code of Civil Procedure as to substitution did not apply to execution proceedings and that, at any rate, service upon Awadh Bihari Sinha, the manager of the late Raja Kalanand Sinha, was a good service upon his heirs. He accordingly set aside the order of the Munsif and allowed the application of the judgment-debtors and set aside the sale.

The decree-holders have applied to this Court for revision of this order of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge. The first point taken by the learned Vakil for the petitioners is, that the learned Subordinate Judge has acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction inasmuch as he has made an order setting aside a sale without giving notice to all persons affected by his order. This objection is, in my opinion, well founded and ought to prevail.

The learned Additional Subordinate Judge relies on the cases of Jogendra Chandra Roy v. Syam Das (1) and Jagat Tarini Dasi v. Rakhal Chandra Tewary (2).

Those two cases have no bearing on the facts of the present case. In the case of Jogendra Chandra Roy v. Syam Das (1) the appeal related to an order rejecting the objections of the judgment-debtor to the execution proceedings under section 244 of the Code of 1882. The point that was raised before their Lordships in that appeal was that upon the death of one of the judgment-creditors an application for substitution ought to have been made to the Original Side of the High Court of Calcutta which had passed the decree and that, in the absence of an order from that Court, the District Court to which the decree has been transferred for execution had no authority to proceed with the execution at the instance of the other judgment-creditors, one of whom had obtained by survivorship the interest of the deceased creditor. Their Lordships held that on an examination of the provisions of the Code it was obvious that there was no foundation for this contention. They held that the Code of Civil Procedure did not expressly provide for an application for substitution under the circumstances of that case. Their Lordships observed that there was no provision which rendered necessary the actual substitution of the name of the legal representative for the validity of the proceedings in execution. Section 232 of the Code of 1882 merely required that the legal representative should apply for execution of the decree and that his name should be brought on the record. This provision was substantially complied with in that case.

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 168; 9 C. L. J. 271; 36 C. 543.
(2) 3 Ind. Cas. 324; 10 C. L. J. 396; 14 C. W. N. 752.

The facts of the present case are quite diffirent. Here we are dealing with an application by the judgment-debtor for setting aside a sale under O. XXI, r, 90 and under O. XXI, r. 92, clause (2), it is provided that no order shall be made setting aside a sale unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby. There can be no doubt that the heirs of Raja Kalanand Sinha are affected by the order setting aside the sale and under the express provision of the proviso to clause (2) of r. 92, O. XXI, no order setting aside the sale can be made in their absence.

Similarly, the case of Jagat Tarini Dasi v. Rakhal Chandra Tewary (2) has no application to the facts of the present case.

Therefore, the order setting aside the sale in the absence of the heirs of Raja Kalanand Sinha must be set aside.

The next point urged by the learned Vakil on behalf of the petitioners is that the learned Additional Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that service of notice on the manager Awadh Bihari Sinha was a good service as against the heirs of the deceased decree-holder. The learned Subordinate Judge has for this purpose relied on the provisions of O. V, r. 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This rule provides that, where in a suit to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property, service cannot be made on the defendant in person, and the defendant has no agent empowered to accept the service, it may be made on any agent of the defendant in charge of the property. It has been argued that this rule has absolutely no application to the facts of the present case. In the first place, the present proceeding is not a suit to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property; in the second place, it has not been shown that no service could be effected on the defendant in person or that the defendant had no agent empowered to accept the service, and, in the third place, it has not been shown that Awadh Bihari upon whom the service is said to have been made was an agent of the defendant in charge of the property. He was the manager of the late decree-holder and there is nothing to show that Awadh Bihari Sinha was an acredited manager of the heirs of Raja Kalanand Sinha. I am, therefore, of opinion that the learned Additional Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the service upon Awadh Bihari Sinha was a good service so far as the heirs of Kalanand Sinha are concerned. Moreover, the learned Subordinate Judge has overlooked the fact that one of the heirs, Kumar Krishnanand Sinhai, still a minor and that no guardian was appointed for him. Even if the service be held to be a good service so far as Kumar Krishnanand Sinha is concerned, his position is the same as if he was not joined in the application inasmuch as no guardian was appointed to act for him in the present proceeding. On these grounds the order of the learned Subordinate Judge must be set aside.

The question then is as to whether the order of the learned Munsif should be confirmed. In my opinion, having regard to the findings of the learned Munsif that the sale was bad on account of irregularities in the execution proceeding and inadequacy of price, the case should go back to the Munsif for disposal according to law after appointing a guardian for Kumar Krishnanand Sinha and serving the proper notices on the heirs of Raja Kalanand Sinha.

There will be no order for costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XVI, r. 1—Witnesses, summoning of—Court, duty of.

Under O. XVI, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code a party has an absolute right to summon witnesses and, so long as he pays the necessary expenses, to insist that their attendance shall be enforced. It does not matter that a party had himself originally undertaken to bring the witnesses and has failed to do so, nor does it matter that the application is made at such a late stage of the proceedings that the witnesses cannot be present in Court before the final disposal of the suit. The Court may in either of those cases refuse to adjourn the hearing for the attendance of the witnesses, but it has no power to refuse to issue summonses. The only case in which the Court has power to refuse to issue summonses is, where the application is not made bona fide or where in the exercise of its inherent powers to prevent the abuse of its own process it is necessary to refuse to issue the summons. [p. 867, col. 2; p. 868, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 3rd September 1919.

Lala Faqir Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. Saunders, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This and the connected Appeal No. 2648 of 1919 arise out of a suit instituted on the 19th November 1917 to enforce a bond dated the 10th January 1914 executed by defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 2 who is a minor and a brother of defendant No. 1 was joined as defendant on the ground that he was a member of a joint Hindu family, and as such liable for the payment of the bond in question. The consideration for the bond was alleged in the plaint to have been previous debts due on certain hundis drawn from time to time by defendant No. 1 in favour of the plaintiff, and the suit was for the recovery of Rs. 6,750 principal and interest, after giving credit for Rs. 1,550 alleged to have been received by the plaintiff prior to the institution of the suit. The defendant admitted the execution of the bond and of the hundis in lieu of which the bond was admittedly made; but denied the receipt of the consideration on the hundis, and contended that they were merely accommodation hundis not intended to create any liability on the part of the defendant but drawn for the purpose of enabling plaintiff to raise money thereon for his own personal benefit. Defendant No. 2 denied that he was a member of a joint Hindu family or that he was in any way liable for the hundis or the bond in suit. The following issues were framed by the Court below.—

1. Whether the bond in dispute was for consideration and on account of nine hundis in favour of plaintiff?

2. If hundis were the basis of consideration, were those hundis only accommodation hundis and without consideration?

3. Is defendant No. 2 also liable?

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge found in favour of the plaintiff on the first two issues, and held that the defendant had failed to establish his plea that the hundis were without consideration. As to the third issue the finding was that defendant No. 2 was not a member of a joint Hindu family, and consequently not liable for the plaintiff's claim. A fourth issue relating to the liability of defendant No. 1 to pay interest was also framed when the evidence of the parties had practically been concluded, and found against the plaintiff. The result of these findings was, that a decree for Rs. 5,250 only, being the principal amount due on the bond, was passed in favour of the plaintiff, and his suit against defendant No. 2 was dismissed in its entirety with costs.

Two appeals have been preferred against this decree to this Court, one by defendant No. 1 in which the finding of the Senior Subordinate Judge that the hundis were for consideration and not merely accommodation hundis as alleged by the defendant is impugned, and the other by the plaintiff in which it is urged that the Court below has erred in not allowing interest and in saddling plaintiff with the costs of defendant No. 2.

Mr. Fakir Chand who has addressed us at considerable length on behalf of the defendant-appellant has frankly admitted that, on the record as it stands, he is unable to challenge the correctness of the find ing arrived at by the Court below that the hundis were for consideration, and that they were not accommodation hundis, but he strenuously argues that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has committed a serious error of law in dispensing with the attendance of certain witnesses whose evidence was very material for the purposes of his case, and who, if they had been allowed to be produced, would have proved to demonstration that the hundis in question were without consideration, and that when they were drawn it was never intended that the defendant would be liable thereon.

A further contention as to the frame of the suit is also raised, and it is contended that the suit as laid is not maintainable, and that it should have been instituted against the firm of Jamiat Singh-Pritam Singh in which the plaintiff himself was also a partner. This is, however, an entirely new contention which was never raised in the Court below, and may necessitate the taking of further evidence. There was no issue on the point, and the attention of the lower Court was never drawn to the fact that an issue in respect thereof was necessary and should be framed. Indeed, the grounds of appeal to this Court do not contain any allegation that the suit against defendant No. 1 alone did not lie, and that the liability, if at all, rested with the firm of Jamiat Singh-Pritam Singh. On the other hand, from the written statement filed in the Court below and the grounds of appeal taken in this Court, it is clear that the sole point on which the parties went to trial was whether the hundis were or were not accommodation hundis drawn for the sole benefit of the plaintiff. In these circumstances, we cannot allow the defendant to make out a new case at the last stage simply because in the written statement there is a vague reference to the hundis being drawn by the firm of Jamiat Singh-Pritam Singh.

As to the question that the Senior Subordinate Judge was in error in not giving defendant a full opportunity for the production of his witnesses, it appears that on the 23rd and 24th October 1918 the defendant examined a large number of witnesses on his behalf but was unable to close his case as some of his witnesses, though served for those dates, had not attended on account of their illness. The case was accordingly postponed to 23rd November 1918. On the 23rd November the parties put in a joint application stating that the case was likely to be compromised, and that a further adjournment should be granted in the case. The case was adjourned on this application to 16th December 1918. On the 16th December the Senior Sub-Judge was on leave, and the case had to be adjourned again for the 15th January 1919. On this date the defendant examined seven more witnesses, and prayed for a further adjournment on the ground that two of his witnesses who had been served had not attended, while two others whom he had summoned through Court had not been served. The Court disallowed any further adjournment for the production of these witnesses, and closed the case. It is the propriety of this order which is impugned by Mr. Faqir Chand, and it is contended that, under the circumstances detailed above, the Court was not justified in closing the case and in proceeding to judgment until these witnesses had been re-summoned and examined on behalf of his client.

In our opinion the contention is well founded and must prevail, and the case must go back for this additional evidence to be taken though we are very doubtful if any useful purpose will be served by this additional evidence coming on the record. Under O. XVI, r. 1, a party has, in our opinion, an absolute right to summon witnesses, and, so long as he pays the necessary expenses, to insist that their attendance shall be enforced. It has been held in a large number of cases enumerated at page 503 of Mulla's Civil Procedure Code that, "It does not matter that a party has himself originally undertaken to bring the witnesses and has failed to do so, nor does it matter that the application is made at such a late stage of the proceedings that the witnesses cannot be present in Court before the final disposal of the suit. The Court may in either of these cases refuse to adjourn the hearing for the attendance of the witnesses, but it has no power to refuse to issue summonses." The only case in which the Court has power to refuse to issue summonses is where the application is not made bona fide or where in the exercise of its inherent powers to prevent the abuse of its own process it is necessary to refuse to issue summons.

In the case before us diet money and other expenses of the witnesses had probably been paid in time. Summonses had really been allowed to be issued, and two of the witnesses had indeed been served but failed to put in appearance, while the other two were not served apparently through no fault of the defendant. In these circumstances, the Court had no justification whatever to close the defendant's case and the proper course for it to adopt was to proceed under O. XVI, r. 10, so far as the two witnesses who had been served and had not attended were concerned, and to issue fresh summonses for the attendance of the other two who had not been served.

The order of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge refusing to enforce the attendance of the four witnesses in question is clearly wrong, and we accordingly remand the case to him under O. XLI, r. 28, and direct that he shall record the evidence of these witnesses, and having taken their evidence return it to this Court within three months.

Case remanded.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 111 (1) (c), (3)—Partition proceedings—Objection to title of applicant—Assistant Collector, order of—Appeal to Civil Court.

Where an objection regarding title is filed in a partition proceeding, three courses only open to an Assistant Collector, (1) to decline to grant the application for partition until the question is determined by a competent Court, (2) to require any party to the case to institute a suit in the Civil Court, or (3) to proceed to inquire into the merits of the objection. If the Assistant Collector follows neither of the first two courses he must be taken to have followed the third course under section 111 (1) (c) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act and as such his order is appealable to the Civil Court under clause (3) of the section. The defective and perfunctory nature of the inquiry cannot take the matter out of the jurisdiction of the Civil Appellate Court. [p. 869, col. 2.]

Application against an order of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 3rd January 1923.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Applicant.

Mr. Wasi Hasam, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—One of the applicants, Bhagwan Dut, applied to the Assistant Collector for partition under section 107 of the Land Revenue Act. Brij Bhukhan and Badri were opposite parties and made parties defendants to the application as they were co-sharers in the Mahal. On 9th February 1922 Brij Bhukhan and Badri put in an objection that, out of the share claimed by the applicants for partition, a certain share really belonged to them and not to the applicant Bhagwan Dut and another party to the application Dudh Nath. The hearing of the objection was adjourned on 10th February and on 28th February the Assistant Collector recorded the statement of the objector. On that date he dismissed the objection after making the following observation: "The objector admitted before me the above statement that the mutation was made over a year ago, then said, he did not know, again said, he came to know of the mutation three months ago. A perusal of the copy of the khewat filed by the applicant which is on the file shows that mutation was effected by order of the 28th September 1920. This objection apparently is simply to delay the partition proceedings. If the applicant wants to fight out a regular suit in the Civil Court he is at liberty to do so. Until the entries in the khewat are changed by order of a competent Court the partition proceedings should continue. The objector had plenty of time to file a suit, but he did not do so. The objection is rejected." The objector went in appeal to the Civil Court, treating the order of the Assistant Collector as an order under section 111 (3) of the Land Revenue Act. The learned District Judge was of opinion, as any other Court would have been, that the enquiry made by the Assistant Collector was unsatisfactory and directed the Assistant Collector to remit a finding after proper inquiry. I am told such a finding has now been remitted and the appeal is pending in the Court of the District Judge. The order of the District Judge was passed under O. XLI, r. 25 from which no appeal lay to this Court, so the applicants were entitled to apply in revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is argued here that the District Court had no jurisdiction because the Assistant Collector had not proceeded under section 111 (c) when he dismissed the objection. I have considered the arguments of the applicant's learned Counsel, but have come to the conclusion that the Assistant Collector did take proceedings under section 111 (c). The case is similar to the one reported as Guthal Chaudhri v. Jogi Chaudhri (1) which was a Bench decision. What happened there may be summed up in the words of the learned Judge who delivered the judgment: "Upon the respondent applying for partition the present appellants filed an objection laying claim to an 8-pie share out of the 5-anna 4-pie share which the respondent had sought to convert into a separate mahal. The Assistant Collector who was entrusted with the partition proceedings upon receiving this objection passed upon it an order of a singular nature. He in that order set out that in his opinion this objection does not relate to a question of proprietary title, but is really meant to defeat partition and after making this declaration about the nature of the objection he directed that the objection and other partition papers be forwarded to the Collector." On these facts the learned Judges came to the conclusion that the order must be taken to be a rejection of the objection raised by the appellants, and so it was a decree passed upon the objection before the Assistant Collector and as such open to appeal to the District Judge. This appears to me to be a reasonable view to take of the defective proceedings of the Assistant Collcetor in the present case. When such an objection is filed there are only three courses open to the Assistant Collector to decline to grant the application for partition until the question in dispute has been determined by a competent Court, to require any party to the case to institute a suit in the Civil Court or to proceed to inquire into the merits of the objection. It is clear that the Assistant Collector went on with the partition proceeding, so he could not have dismissed the application for partition nor did he require any party to institute a suit in the Civil Court. He could have only adopted the third course open to him and proceeded to inquire into the merits of the objection. The defective and perfunctory nature of the inquiry cannot take the matter out of the jurisdiction of the Civil Appellate Court. The appellant's learned Counsel referred to the case reported as Mohammad Shahamat Khan v. Azizunnissa (2), but in that case the Assistant Collector had given an opinion that the matter in dispute as to title had already been determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction. This was the reason for the distinction between that reported case and the case reported as Thakur Baldeo Bakhsh v. Thakur Balbhadr Singh (3). The working of mind of he First Court is not direct but some of the reasons in its order quoted above tare those against the objector's title. Those reasons are that the name of the applicant for partition was entered in the khewat, that the objection of the defendant was only aimed at delaying partition proceedings, and that the objector had let long and valuable time pass by without suing in the Civil Court. Unless the First Court had some intention of holding that the objector had no title to the property claimed by him no cause would arise for his underlining these facts.

As a Court of first appeal I would have considered it the better course to remand the suit under O. XLI, r. 23, but at the present stage of the proceedings I do not think it desirable to make any alteration in the order passed by the District Judge.

I dismiss this application with costs.

MADHO, MINOR, THROUGH HUSSAIN KHAN—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Execution of decree —Decree satisfied by temporary alienation of judgment-dbtor's land — Executing Court, power of, to modify terms of alienation.

A money-decree was fully satisfied by the grant of a lease for 20 years to the decree-holder of some land belonging to the judgment-debtor and the case was sent to the record-room. Some years afterwards, the Executing Court, on the application of the judgment-debtor, cancelled the remaining portion of the lease and directed that possession of the land be restored to the judgment-debtor on his paying to the decree-holder a certain sum of money which was found on calculation to be due to the decree-holder;

Held, that the Executing Court had become functus officio as soon as the decree was fully satisfied by the grant of the lease, and was not, therefore, competent subsequently to reduce the term of the lease which had been given in full satisfaction of the decree.

Madho Prasad v. Mahtab Chand, 8 Ind. Cas. 410, relied on.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 19th July 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 31st May 1922.

Lala Guran Ditta, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—A money-decree was satisfied in 1912 by a temporary alienation to the decree-holder of some land belonging to the judgment-debtor. A rubakar dated the 19th June 1912 from the Court to the Settlement Officer shows that the Court approved of the proposal of the Tahsildar for giving the land on lease to the decree-holder for 20 years. The decree-holder was accordingly put in possession and on the 2nd October 1912 the Court ordered that the case should be sent to the record-room, the decree having been fully satisfied.

The Executing Court has now, on the application of the judgment-debtor, ordered that the lease be cancelled, and the possession of the land restored to the judgment-debtor on his paying Rs. 432-6-0 which is the balance found, on calculation, to be due to the decree-holder. That order has been upheld by the District Judge, and the plaintiff has filed a second appeal, contending that when the decree had been fully satisfied by the leasing of the land for 20 years to the decree-holder the Executing Court became functus officio and was not competent to order that the land should be given back to the judgment-debtor before the expiry of the period of the lease. This contention is, in my opinion, correct. Counsel for the appellant has cited Madho Prasad v. Mahtab Chand (1) in which it was held that where a portion of the propert given on lease in execution of the decree of a Civil Court had passed out of the possession of the lessee, the Executing Court having become functus officio when the lease was given, had no jurisdiction to authorize the grant of a fresh lease or to extend the term of the original lease. Similarly, in the present case it must be held that the Court was not competent to reduce the term of the lease which was given in full satisfaction of the decree, in 1912.

I accordingly accept this appeal, set aside the orders of the Courts below, and dismiss the judgment-debtor's application. The respondent will pay the appellant's costs throughout.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (f)—Suit for accounts—Appeal by defendant—Valuation of appeal.

In an appeal against a preliminary decree for accounts where the defendant-appellant does not deny his liability to render accounts but wants certain restrictions to be placed upon the power of the plaintiff to take accounts from him, he is free to put his own valuation on the memorandum of appeal and is not bound by the valuation of the plaintiff in the plaint, particularly when it is difficult to assess the relief sought by the defendant-appellant in appeal. [p. 872, col. 2.]

Messrs. Shiva Saran Lal, Shiveshwar Dayal, Raghunandan Prasad and Aditya Narain Lall, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference to me as a Taxing Judge under the Court-Fees Act.

The point raised is not free from difficulty and I was inclined to refer it to a larger Bench. I, however, understand from the decision of the learned Chief Justice, dated the 9th February 1918, following the case Khachera v. Kharag Singh (1), and also ascertained from the learned Chief Justice that there is no power to refer. Therefore, I must deal with the question myself.

The question for determination is, what Court-fee is payable upon the memorandum of appeal filed by the defendant. The reliefs in the plaint were for possession and accounts. The Trial Court dismissed the suit for cancellation of the lease and recovery of khas possession, but it decreed the suit for accounts for 1322 and 1323. In its judgment the Court observed that the plaintiffs were not entitled to control or criticise the accounts. Against the decree the plaintiffs appealed to the Court below. The lower Appellate Court modified the decree of the Trial Court by giving to the plaintiffs a right to examine and criticise the accounts. The defendants have appealed to this Court against this part of the decree of the Court below.

The plaintiffs valued the relied as to accounts at Rs. 1,159-9-6. This was the valuation also put in the memorandum o appeal filed by the plaintiffs in the Court below. The plaintiffs paid a Court-fee of Rs. 85 in both the Courts below.

The defendants in the appeal in this Court paid a Court-fee of Rs. 10 only. Upon the objection by the Stamp Reporter it is now conceded by the appellants that they have to pay an ad valorem Court-fee, but they want to amend the valuation of the appeal by fixing Rs. 200 instead of Rs. 1,159 odd, the valuation given in the plaint and in the memorandum of appeal filed in the Court below by the plaintiffs. The question is whether the appellants can be allowed to put their own valuation upon the relief sought in the memorandum of appeal.

The appellants rely upon section 7, clause (iv), sub-clause (f) of the Court-Fees Act which says "In suits for accounts" the amount of fee payable is "according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint or memorandum of appeal," and "in all such suits the plaintiff shall state the amount at which he values the relief sought."

I have carefully considered the report of the Stamp Reporter and that of the Taxing Officer and the authorities referred to.

Barring the decisions upon suits for mesne profits and accounts based on partnership, etc., two cases appear to be nearer the case in hand: Srinivasacharlu v. Perindevamma (2), Kanhaiya Lal v. Seth Ram Sarup (3). The former is a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court. In that case the plaintiff had obtained a preliminary decree for account. The defendant appealed against that decree and it was held that the defendant was bound by the valuation in the plaint and was not at liberty to make a fresh valuation for the purpose of his appeal. No reason has been assigned in that case, and in fact the judgment does not discuss the point. Wallis, C. J., merely says—"We are not prepared to differ from the decisions in Samiya Marali v. Minammal (4) and Banwari Lal v. Sheo Sankar Misser (5)." The former is a case of a suit brought for declaring a sale-deed invalid on certain grounds stated by the plaintiff. The value of the suit was Rs. 2,000, the amount mentioned in the deed. The plaintiff obtained a decree and the defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court. There the value of the relief was well known and, therefore, the defendant was not allowed to modify the value given in the plaint. The latter is a case of recovery of possession with mesne profits. The plaintiff obtained a decree for possession and for mesne profits claimed anterior to the suit. The defendant in these circumstances was not allowed to modify the valuation given by the plaintiff. These cases have no application to the present one.

In the Allahabad High Court Mr. Justice Piggott, in the case of Kanhaiya Lal v. Seth Ram Sarup (3) considered the aforesaid decision of the Madras High Court and in a very elaborate judgment allowed the defendant in an appeal against a preliminary decree to put his own valuation on the memorandum of appeal, holding that he was not bound by the valuation of the plaintiff in his plaint.

The two decisions are not necessarily contradictory. The Madras High Court decision is against a preliminary decree for accounts. In the Allahabad case the defendant did not deny his liability but took exception only to the form of the decree and contended that it ought to have contained a specification of the period for which liability to render accounts should extend and an adjudication upon the question which the defendant had raised as to the period of limitation applicable to a portion of the plaintiff's claim.

(4) 23 M. 490; 10 M. L. J. 340; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 744.
(5) 1 Ind. Cas. 670; 13 C. W. N. 815.

In the present case the defendant does not dispute the liability to render accounts, but he wants certain restictions to be placed upon the right of the plaintiff to take accounts from him. It is difficult to assess the relief sought by him in the appeal. His relief in the appeal is not the same as that of the plaintiff in the plaint. The plaintiff's relief was a simple one for accounts and he must have known the value of that relief and, therefore, he was bound to mention it in his plaint for the purpose of levying Court-fee. The defendant's relief, on the other hand, is such as is not capable of a correct estimate. He is not bound by the valuation put by the plaintiff in his plaint. He is, therefore, at liberty to fix his own valuation.

The provision in the Cour-Fees Act referred to above, [section 7, clause iv (f)], leaves the appellants free to value the relief sought in the appeal and he is bound to pay Court-fees according to the amount at which he values the relief sought. The principle that a party will not be allowed to value his relief arbitrarily does not arise in the present case in view of the very nature of the relief sought in the appeal by the defendant.

Therefore, I hold that the defendant-appellant is entitled to value the relief at Rs. 200 which he seeks to do and the Court-fee payable will be on that valuation.

Second appeal against a decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 25th of November 1921.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Appellant.
Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by the plaintiff-appellant to recover possession of property alienated by his father Jeoraj Singh under two sale-deeds in the years 1913 and 1916, respectively, on the ground that these were transfers without legal necessity. The suit has been decreed as regards the property covered by the first sale-deed and this property is not now in dispute. It has been dismissed as regards the property covered by the second sale-deed and as to this the plaintiff appeals. The dispute relates to one single item but this item is by far the largest item out of the sale consideration. The sale-deed in question was for a sum of Rs. 9,565. Out of this Rs. 1,562-14-0 was set off against the amount of a previous bond executed by Jeoraj Singh on 29th July 1913. The principal amount in this bond had been Rs. 930 and with interest it had amounted up to Rs. 1,562-14-0 at the time of sale. The main item in this bond of Rs. 930 was a sum of Rs. 800 which Jeoraj Singh had to pay in satisfaction of a pre-emption decree which he had obtained for certain property. It has been recently held by a Bench of this Court, overruling a previous decision to the contrary, that money payable by the successful plaintiff in a pre-emption suit is not antecedent debt for the purpose of supporting an alienation of the family property, [Chatarbhuj v. Gobind Ram (1)]. It does not follow from this that the payment of a pre-emption decree might not be binding on the family on the ground of legal necessity or benefit to the estate. The difficulty in this case is that, both the Courts have found that this particular transaction was not a prudent transaction for Jeoraj Singh to have entered into; in fact, the Trial Court described it as having brought the ruin of the family. The lower Appellate Court says that the transaction was one which could not be financially successful. The learned Judge, however, seems to think that there was a sort of pious duty on Jeoraj Singh to re-acquire this property because it originally belonged to two of his separate brothers. The re-purchase of property sold by a separated brother is not, however, a purpose which constitutes legal necessity under Hindu Law. The decree, therefore, cannot be supported on this ground.

The second ground on which the learned Judge has dismissed the suit as regards this sale-deed is, that the transaction was subsequently ratified by the present plaintiff Sheodan Singh. Mutation was applied for on this sale-deed and Sheodan Singh was examined as a witness. He had objected regarding certain other property as to which mutation was sought. With regard to the property covered by this sale-deed he said explicitly he had no objection to mutation being made and further on in his statement he said that he had no objection whatever regarding the and of this sale-deed.

It is not denied by the appellant that a transaction by the manager can be ratified by the son so as to estop the latter from afterwards disputing it.

(1) 74 Ind. Cas. 571; 21 A. L. J. 348; 45 A. 407.

Narayana Aiyar v. Ram Aiyar (2) is a case in point and Trevelyan's Hindu Law, Second Edition, pages 306 and 486, has also been referred to. The appellant's contention is that the plaintiff's representation did not amount to acquiescence in the transaction or create any estoppel against him. The Trial Court took the view that all that the plaintiff did was to consent to mutation of names and that he did not say in terms that he accepted the sale. This is a very narrow view to take. When the plaintiff stated not only that he had no objection to mutation but that he had no objection as regards the property covered by this sale-deed, the purchaser would naturally understand him to mean that he accepted the transaction as binding upon him. In all probability the plaintiff at that time did so accept it. Having regard to the strong feeling which exists in Indian families against losing property which had once belonged to the family, the probability is that the father and son were alike desirous to recover the property for which they had got a pre-emption decree. But, however that may be, I have no doubt that the learned Judge was right in holding that this was a clear representation by the plaintiff that he accepted the sale-deed as a valid transaction binding on him. It is urged that the defendant was not prejudiced by the representation. With this I cannot agree. If the defendant had not been led to believe that the plaintiff accepted the sale as a good sale he might have taken steps to give up the property and get back his purchase-money and so have saved the expenses and worry of the present litigation, which has lasted for over three years. If the person entitled to avoid sale of property leads the purchaser to believe that his title is good, the purchaser is certainly prejudiced if the party making the representation is allowed to resile from it and to attack the purchaser's title after an interval of several years. I, therefore, agree with the Court below that the plaintiff is estopped from disputing the defendant's title under this sale-deed. I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit seeks to avoid two occupancy tenancies created in his village of Khutsaori by a previous Lambardar Surjilal on the 2nd of February 1917 and the 2nd of March 1918. The village had been attached under a money-decree and was in the hands of the Collector for sale and there was also a mortgage suit pending in respect of it on both these dates. An eight-anna share of the village, which included the four-anna share belonging to Surjilal, was sold by the Collector under the money-decree on the 20th of August 1917, that is to say, after the creation of the first of these two tenancies and before the creation of the second and purchased by Bakaram, brother of the plaintiff. On a final decree for sale passed on the 14th of December 1918 in the mortgage suit a twelve-anna share, which also included Surjilal's four-anna share, was sold on the 15th of January 1920 and purchased by the plaintiff Karu. The plaintiff's contention is that both leases are void because they were granted during the pendency of the mortgage suit and also while the property was under attachment and in the hands of the Collector, and that the second is further void because on the date on which it was granted Surjilal had ceased to be a co-sharer in the village and, therefore, had also ceased to be Lambardar, although his name was not actually removed till the 8th of March 1920.

(2) In regard to the plea based on section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act and rule 11 of the Third Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code the law is perfectly clear; the leases cannot be avoided if the granting of them was, in the words used in Sri Gajapati Radhikapatta Mahadevi Garu v. Sri Gajapati Radhamani Mahadevi Garu (1), an "ordinary and reasonable incident of interim beneficial enjoyment," that is to say, if it can be shown that they are of such a nature that the lessor would have granted them even if he had known that he was to continue indefinitely as the owner of the property. That the leases were not of that nature has been only formally but never seriously asserted by the plaintiff. The fields leased were waste land and the new tenant was the kotwar of the village, a person not connected in any way except his office with the malguzar.

(3) The other plea, that the second tenancy is also void because on the date on which it was created Surjilal was not an owner at all but merely a trespasser, has to be decided on the same issue of fact, as was very clearly laid down by the Calcutta High Court in Binad Lal Pakrashi v. Kalu Pramanik (2) and also Peary Mohan Mondal v. Radhika Mohan Hazra (3), Jonab Ali v. Rakibuddin (4) and Krishna Nath v. Muhammad Wafiz (5). Another matter which would defeat this plea is that, even on the date on which the second tenancy was created, Surjilal was still the agent of the proprietary body of which at least one of his brothers was still a member. The appeal is dismissed and the appellant must pay all the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 127—Trespasser—Ejectment—Jurisdiction of Revenue Courts.

Section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act was enacted to provide for the case of a trespasser and to prevent such a case going out of the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts. Under clause (2) of section 127 a Court is bound to pass a dercee for ejectment, if such an application is made by the plaintiff when the Court passes a decree for arrears of rent against the trespasser.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated 11th November 1922, upholding that of the Assistant Collector, 1st Class, Sultanpur, dated the 19th June 1922.

Dr. J. N. Misra, for the Appellant.

Rai N. N. Ghoshal Bahadur, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued the defendant for recovery of rent and ejectment under section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act, and the suit for both reliefs was decreed, first by the Assistant Collector and then in appeal by the learned District Judge of Fyzabad. This is a second appeal by the defendant.

The plaintiffs are themselves underproprietors of the plot in suit and the defendant is entered in the village record as a tenant without settlement of rent. The argument in this Court was that the case of the defendant is not covered by section 127, Oudh Rent Act. It was first argued that he holds as a muafidar (a grantee). The only evidence in support of this claim is a copy of the plaint dated 22nd December 1913, filed by the plaintiffs to get rent assessed on the plot in suit under section 107 (A). In that suit it was held by the Assistant Collector that the provisions of section 107 (A) apply only to the proprietor of a mahal or a part of a mahal, and not to the plaintiffs who are only under-proprietors of a definite area of land. This description of the defendant's holding as "Muafi bila lagan" was used by the plaintiff to convey the idea of non-payment of rent and was not an admission of a grant which did not exist. There can be no adverse possession by non-payment of rent, because the plaintiff is under-proprietor, who has been paying the revenue, and the defendant cultivator had never set up any adverse title prior to 1913, the date of the litigation already referred to. The position taken up by the defendant's Counsel was that the defendant was either a trespasser in which case the plaintiffs ought to go to a Civil Court, or a tenant whose rent may be assessed under section 32 (B). Section 127 was enacted to provide for the case of a trespasser and to prevent such a case going out of the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts. It appears that the defendant is willing enough now to pay rent and escape ejectment. His present condition is, however, due to his contumacy in holding land without payment of rent and deserves no sympathy, though after holding for a number of years he is being turned out of the land. I see no reason to disagree with the findings of the two lower Courts that the defendant is a person who is retaining possession of the land without being entitled to such possession. He comes within the provisions of section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act. Under clause (2) of that section a Court is bound to pass a decree for ejectment if such an application is made by the plaintiff when the Court passes a decree for arrears of rent.

As regards ground No. 5 the Court of first instance had jurisdiction. As I have pointed out, the cases of a trespasser can also be treated under section 127 in the Revenue Court.

The plea of res judicata was not argued before me.

I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Under section 3 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the District Court is the only Court having jurisdiction to deal with creditors' petitions, in the absence of any Notification of the Local Government investing Subordinate Courts with jurisdiction over this class of cases. An order, therefore, of the District Court transferring such a petition to a Sub-Court for disposal is ultra vires.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bellary, in I. A. No. 85 (a) of 1920 in I. A. No. 290 of 1918 in I. P. No. 9 of 1914, on the file of the District Court of Bellary.

JUDGMENT.—Under section 3 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the District Court is the only Court having jurisdiction to deal with creditors' petitions, in the absence of any Notification of the Local Government investing Subordinate Courts with jurisdiction over this class of cases. The District Judge's order transferring the petition to the Sub-Court for disposal was, therefore, ultra vires. We set it aside together with the Sub-Judge's order and direct the District Judge to take the case on his file and dispose of it according to law.

As the objection to jurisdiction was not pressed till the want of jurisdiction was noticed by this Bench and as this petition was put in 2¾ years after the date of the order, while excusing the delay on account of the petitioner having through incorrect advice mistaken his remedy, we direct that each party bear his own costs in this petition.

Lala Faqir Chand, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Sohan Lal, R. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen out of a declaratory suit under the following circumstances:—One Allah Ditta mortgaged house No. 38 to Rahmat Ali on the 17th of April 1916 for a period of five years with possession. The house was already under mortgage to other mortgagees who were in possession thereof. The mortgagor undertook to redeem the previous mortgages and to place it in possession of Rahmat Ali after doing so. Until delivery of possession, interest was to run at the rate of Rs. 2-2-0 per cent. per mensem with six monthly rests. On the 31st of July 1916 Allah Ditta mortgaged the same house to one Gangu Mal, the father of Ralia Ram and Shadi Ram, for Rs. 500. On the 10th of November 1919 Ralia Ram and Shadi Ram obtained a decree for sale against the mortgagor Allah Ditta alone without impleading Rahmat Ali. In execution of their decree Ralia Ram and Shadi Ram attached the house and applied for its sale. Thereupon Rahmat Ali and Ata Muhammad objected to the attachment and the latter pleaded that he was in possession of the house under a previous mortgage. The Court allowed the objection so far as to order the sale of the house subject to the lien of the objectors, but held that the term of five years before which the redemption was not to take place under the terms of the mortgage of the 17th of April 1916 was not to be binding on the execution purchaser. Rahmat Ali thereupon brought the present suit for a declaration that all the conditions entered in the mortgage in his favour including the term of five years should be declared to be binding on the would-be execution-purchaser. In this suit Allah Ditta, the mortgagor, and Ralia Ram and Shadi Ram, the decree-holders, were impleaded as defendants. Allah Ditta admitted the claim, while Ralia Ram, though admitting the notice of Rahmat Ali's previous mortgage, resisted the suit pleading that the term of five years being onerous should not be held to be binding on him or the would-be execution-purchaser. The main ground urged by him was that the term of five years operated as a clog upon the equity of redemption and should not be enforced. The Trial Court decreed the suit, but the lower Appellate Court, after referring to a number of previous mortgages in favour of Gauhar Ali and Ata Muhammad, brothers of the plaintiff Rahmat Ali, held that the bargain obtained by Rahmat Ali was an unconscionable bargain and the conditions as to payment of interest before actual delivery of possession to the plaintiff under his mortgage dated the 17th of April 1916 and as to delivery of possession after redeeming the previous mortgage operated as a clog on the equity of redemption and dismissed the suit. Hence this second appeal.

Without going into the various transactions of mortgage which have been discussed in detail in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court the appeal can be decided upon a very simple point. It is contended by Mr. Faqir Chand, the learned Vakil for the appellant, that Ralia Ram and Shadi Ram being subsequent mortgagees with notice of the previous mortgage in favour of the plaintiff are not entitled to resist the suit upon the ground that the conditions entered in the plaintiff's mortgage operated as a clog and should not be enforced. In my opinion there is force in this contention. Allah Ditta, the mortgagor, himself could not have avoided the contract on the mere ground that it embodied an unconscionable ground without proving that the transaction had been brought about by undue influence of which there is not an iota of evidence in this case. Much less is it open to a subsequent mortgagee who with his eyes open takes a second mortgage in the hope of redeeming the previous mortgage on easier terms. In the case of Aziz Khan v. Dun Chand (1) a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court, while dealing with a similar question, made the following pertinent observation:—

"It is exceedingly doubtful whether after acquiring a mortgage which on the face of it and as it stood at the time of their purchase, contained terms which might make redemption practically valueless to them, they can be permitted to set up, as their vendor might have done, a claim that the bargain was brought about by the exercise of undue influence."

The plaintiffs in the reported case were the purchasers of the equity of redemption and in a suit for redemption objected to certain terms of the mortgage on the ground that they were onerous and amounted to an unconscionable bargain. The learned Judges observed that the plaintiffs were to be looked upon as speculators as they were not the original mortgagors but had bought the equity of redemption on the chance of getting redemption on easy terms. In this case also the position of Ralia Ram and Shadi Ram cannot be said to be a bit better than that of a speculator. Without going into the various matters discussed by the learned Judge of the Court below I hold that the subsequent mortgagees have no locus standi to question the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff on the ground that the conditions objected to operate as a clog on the equity of redemption.

I accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 156—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, rr. 1, 7—Judgment signed but not pronounced till later date—Limitation, operation of.

Although under Art. 156 of the Limitation Act the period of limitation for an appeal begins from the date of the decree or order appealed from, where a judgment is signed but not pronounced till a later date, limitation begins to run from the date of the pronouncement of the judgment, as, in view of the provisions of O. XX, r. 7, of the Civil Procedure Code, whatever might be the date upon the face of the decree, it must be considered as dated on the date of the pronouncement of the judgment.

The day on which judgment is pronounced within the meaning of O. XX, r. 7 of the Civil Procedure Code is the day on which it is pronounced in open Court in accordance with O. XX, r. 1 of the Code.

Messrs. Susil Madhab Mullick and Norendra Nath Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Satya Saran Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is a question of limitation. This case was heard before the learned District Judge of Bhagalpur on the 6th January 1922. On the 8th Januray after the hearing the learned Judge left Bhagalpur for Dumka to hold Sessions there. On the 17th January he appears to have written a judgment and signed it but this was not communicated to anybody and certainly not delivered in open Court as provided by O. XX, r. 1. On the 4th February he returned to Bhagalpur and on the 10th February a decree was prepared after the signatures of the Pleaders on each side had been taken, Nobody apparently knew anything about the judgment having been written or signed by the learned Judge until the 10th February and in fact, as the learned District Judge himself says, there was no delivery of judgment in Bhagalpur before that date; nor does it appear that there was any delivery of judgment anywhere else. The appeal in this case was filed on the 18th May and the question arises whether that was within the 90 days prescribed by Art. 156 of the Limitation Act for an appeal to the High Court. The rules provide in terms that judgment shall be pronounced in open Court either immediately after the case has been heard or on some future date of which due notice shall be given to the parties or their Pleaders. It is contended by the respondents that the judgment having been written by the learned Judge and signed on the 17th January, although it was not pronounced on that date, the limitation period runs from that day. I am entirely unable to accept this view. There was in fact no judgment delivered until it was pronounced in open Court according to the rules. The decree was prepared on the 10th Febuary and I understand it was dated the 17th January, the day upon which the judgment was written and signed by the learned Judge although not communicated to anybody. Under the Limitation Act the period of limitation begins from the date of the decree or order appealed from and under O. XX, r. 7, the decree shall bear date the day on which the judgment was pronounced.

ALI AHMAD v. ABDUL GHANI.

Therefore, even if the decree was dated the 17th January that date in fact was altogether wrong because at that time no judgment had been pronounced at all and whatever the date may be upon the face of the decree it ought to be dated the 10th February when the judgment was pronounced. In these circumstances, it seems to me quite clear that the period of limitation begins from the 10th February. The appeal in fact was filed more than 90 days after the 10th February but it appears from the report of the learned District Judge that an application for copies of the judgment and decree was made on the 30th January although at that time judgment had not been pronounced and no decree was drawn up, and on the 21st February, the copies were supplied. Therefore, the time occupied in obtaining copies of the judgment and decree between the 30th January and the 21st February, ought to be deducted, but as the limitation period did not begin to run until the 10th February the period between the 10th and 21st February may be deducted in this case. It would follow, therefore, deducting these days, that the appeal was entered in time. For the purposes of limitation, it seems to me that it is impossibe to hold, having regard to the Statutes, to which I have referred, that the date of the judgment should be any other than that upon which judgment is pronounced in Court when the parties know the effect of that judgment and whether it would be necessary for them to appeal or not. There may be cases, I can conceive, where the judgment has not been properly pronounced in open Court, when, for example, a Judge dies after having written and signed his judgment or there may be other cases in which the failure to pronounce judgment in open Court may be a mere irregularity which, under the provisions of the Code, is not fatal to the validity of the judgment. In the present case, however, it seems to me impossible to hold that the period of limitation could begin before in fact the parties were aware by the pronouncement of judgment in open Court, what the judgment in fact was. We are told that in many cases it is not the practice to pronounce judgment in open Court. If that is so, I can only say that it is a direct breach of the practice laid down in O. XX, r. 1, and in all cases, in my opinion, that rule ought to be complied with. The appellant is entitled to his costs of this application which has been strenuously opposed by the respondents.

Mullick, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—I have come to the same conclusion as my learned brother that Letters of Administration should not have been granted on the Will propounded by the plaintiff.

The delay of 20 years in presenting the Will for Probate has not been sufficiently explained. It is said to have been handed over by the testator to his brother's son, the sole legatee. He died in 1902 or 1903 without taking any action.

It is not clear in whose custody the Will has been since, but his son, who has been granted Letters of Administration by the District Judge on the present application, says that he only came to know of the existence of the Will three or four years ago.

He adds that some documents were with his mother; but she has not been examined as a witness to prove proper custody since 1899, when Exhibit D purports to have been prepared.

I regard it as one suspicious circumstance that this Will should have first seen the light of day 20 years after Francis Padivala's death on the occasion when the persons who would be entitled to his property, if he died intestate, are suing to redeem a mortgage executed by him which the legatee was instructed in the Will to discharge. Another suspicious circumstance is that of the only two persons who have come forward at this juncture to vouch for the genuineness of the Will one is a witness, who, having access to the Burial Registers of the Parish, is in a position to make the date of the Will accord with the known facts as to the deceased's death and the other is that witness's first cousin; a third is that when Letters of Administration of the deceased's estate were applied for by a creditor 22 years ago the statement in Exhibit II that the deceased had died intestate was allowed to go unchallenged by the executor and the legatee, and a fourth that they both allowed the testator's disinherited widow and children to take possession of his moveable property and cattle and to discharge his debts without protest.

The individuality of the testator's "shrikaza" or mark on Exhibit A has not been established. The mark of the executant on Exhibit B looks as if it might have been written by the writer of that document. That on Exhibit A is in the same ink and style as the signature of the witness P. W. No. 2.

ROSA MARIA BAI v. JACOB SOUZA.

As the plaintiff has failed to disperse the doubts that naturally arise as to the authenticity of this unregistered Will, the appeal is allowed, the grant of Letters is revoked and the suit is dismissed with costs here and in the District Court.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The question to be decided is, has the execution of the Will by the testator been proved? The Will is dated the 7th September 1899 and the application for Probate was made in 1920. The testator did not sign his name but made a mark. Of the three attesting witnesses two subscribed the Will with their marks, and the other wrote his name. There is an endorsement at the foot of the Will indicating who the writer of it was. The testator died 22 days after the date of the alleged Will, leaving a widow, two sons and one daughter. The sons were of the ages of 20 and 14 or thereabouts, and the daughter was of the age of about nine. The Will makes no reference to the testator's wife and children and contains no provision in their favour. Almost the whole of the property was bequeathed to the testator's brother's son Rosario Padivala, and the latter's brother-in-law was appointed executor. Of the three attesting witnesses, the two who subscribed on the Will their marks are said to have died some years ago, though no evidence has been given as to when they died. The other attesting witness and the scribe have been examined in support of the Will. The party propounding the Will is the son of the legatee, Rosario Padivala abovementioned who died about 20 years ago, or about three years after the death of the testator. It is in evidence that the executor died in 1918 or 1919.

The grant of Probate is opposed by the widow and the surviving son. They contend that there are several suspicious circumstances and that the evidence in support of the Will is not sufficient to remove the suspicion and to satisfy the Court that the Will was in fact executed by the testator.

The proof of execution consists of the evidence of the writer of the Will and of the surviving attesting witness. The testator was living at Permanki and it is admitted that both these witnesses were living at Mangalore, a place 12 miles from the village where the testator was living. Both of them are related to the testator, but no importance can be attached to this fact as they are also related to the person who is benefited by the Will, and to the present applicant who is the latter's son. The evidence does not indicate that they were either intimate with the testator or that they enjoyed his confidence in any degree and there is no explanation as to why they were called from a distant place to assist the testator in the making of his Will. The writer, while stating that the testator was ill for about a year before his death adds that he visited the testator on the single occasion when the Will was made. The other witness admits that he did not even attend the testator's funeral and that, during the testator's life time, he went to his house only once, that is, a year after the testator's daughter was born, and that a year after his death he went there again. His evidence leaves the impression that this witness went to the testator's house during his life time only on two occasions, one of them being the date of the making of the Will. It is also admitted that there were persons near the testator's residence who could have been asked to be present, and it is noteworthy that the Potail of the village was living within half a mile and that the Potail also happened to be the testator's landlord. No evidence was forthcoming as regards the circumstances in which the Will was made or any discussion respecting the dispositions, or any draft prepared under instructions from the testator. This is the only direct evidence to prove the execution of the Will. There is no conflict of testimony and the case has to be decided mainly with reference to probabilities. The learned District Judge pronounced in favour of the Will and I should have been less ready to differ from him if the question turned on whether the balance of evidence was in favour of the Will or against the Will. And I may also add that the two witnesses who deposed in regard to the execution of the Will also spoke to ill-feeling between the testator and his wife, to which I shall presently advert, and the learned District Judge did not consider them worthy of belief respecting the alleged misunderstanding and it is clear that the District Judge has not based his conclusion on his estimate of the worth of the evidence of thsee two witnesses.

The circumstances being such as to excite the suspicion of the Court, can it be said that the evidence in support of of the instrument removes the suspicion and establishes affirmatively to the satisfaction of the Court that the Will put forward was the Will of the testator? It has been repeatedly held that, circumstances of suspicion demand the vigilant care and circumspection of the Court in investigating the case and examining the evidence in support of the Will.

In the first place, the guarantee afforded by the testator's signature appearing on the document does not exist. The testator is said to have made a mark which is letter "Sree" of the Canarese Alphabet. This mark can be easily imitated and no admitted marks have been put in evidence for the purpose of comparison. I am not to be understood to say that if any such marks had been produced they would be of material assistance to the Court or probably affect its judgment.

An explanation has been offered for the fact that the testator disinherited his wife and children. Evidence was given to prove that they were not living with him; that the wife had filed a criminal complaint against the husband for assault some years previous to his death, and that consequent estrangement accounted for their separate living, but this evidence is vague and discrepant. These allegations have been denied by the son, the widow and two friends of the testator. The learned District Judge remarks: "There is oral evidence on both sides as to whether the defendants were living with Francis Padivala (testator) or not. It is slightly more weighty for the defence and probabilities are in favour of the defence." This seems a just criticism of the evidence. The District Judge proceeds to say: "If that version is accepted, then the Will must be false." That is to say, the learned Judge is fully alive to the fact that the provisions of the Will were unnatural and were only consistent with the hypothesis that there was a serious misunderstanding between the testator and his wife and children. The District Judge also was inclined to the view that on this point the evidence and the probabilities were in favour of the defence. The only conclusion consistent with the learned Judge's reasoning would be that the Will was not proved. I would like to say another word on this aspect of the case. Granting that the institution of a criminal complaint by the wife against the husband has been proved, this may account for there being no provision in favour of the wife. No motive has, however, been suggested in regrard to the act of the testator so far as his children were concerned. Where the instrument is inofficious, i.e., not consonant to the testator's natural affections and moral duties, stringent proof is demanded (See Williams on Executors, Edition 1921, Vol. I, page 250) Jagrani Koer v. Durga Prashad (1).

The next circumstance of suspicion is the very long delay in applying for Probate. The testator's property was under mortgage at the date of the Will, and the legatee was directed to pay the amount due to the mortgagee and redeem the properties. The legatee, however, took no steps in this direction. The defendants filed a suit for redemption about 1918, and it is said that, at the instance of the mortgagee, the applicant put forward this Will. So far as the mortgage was concerned, if he proved a title to the properties in a third party the redemption suit was liable to be dismissed. Whether the mortgagee was responsible for the application for Probate or not, it is clear that until this suit was filed the Will was not brought to the notice of the heirs of the testator. The applicant first filed an application in 1919, withdrew it and filed the present application in 1920. There is scarcely any explanation for this extraordinary delay. A witness has deposed that the executor was short of money, and did not, therefore, obtain Probate. The reason given is incredible, because on the plaintiff's side there is also evidence to the effect that the net value of the property about the time of the testator's death, was only Rs. 60 odd, and it is common knowledge that the amount required for obtaining a Probate in respect of an estate of so little value would be almost trifling. Even if this excuse should be considered sufficient for the non-obtaining of the Probate, it seems strange that those who were directly affected by it were not even informed of it or of its contents during this long period of time. The legatee and his representatives acted just as if no such Will had been left. Some moveables and cattle belonging to the testator were disposed of by the testator's widow and children without objection. A creditor to whom the testator owed rent applied, about a year after the testator's death, for Letters of Administration in respect of his estate on the basis of intestacy. An order was passed directing grant to the creditor and it may be presumed that the application was duly published before the order was made. The creditor, however, did not actually obtain the grant because the testator's widow paid up the amount due. We thus see that such assets as existed were taken possession of by the heirs and the only subsisting unsecured debt was also discharged by them. Not only was the conduct of the widow and the children consistent with the absence of a Will but the conduct, though negative in its character on the part of the legatee and the executor, lends great support in the case of the defendants. Muthuswamy Aiyar, J., observes in Gnanamuthu v. Vanakoilpillai Nadan (2), that it is usual to demand an explanation when there is unreasonable delay in applying for Probate. There is no inflexible rule as regards the nature of the evidence required in any particular circumstances, but the evidence in favour of a Will, propounded after a long lapse of time, must extend to clear proof of execution. This very case tests the truth of the proposition. If this Will had been set up soon after the testator's death, it would have been more easy to the heirs to rebut the evidence regarding the alleged ill-feeling between the husband and the wife They might then show by evidence easily procurable that the writer and the attestators could not have and did not, in fact, come to the house of the testator. The widow and her son have deposed that the writer and the testator were on bad terms. How can an allegation like this be proved or disproved at this distance of time? It is said that the two attesting witnesses who subscribed their marks on the Will are dead. On the point where they died there is no evidence. The opponents may well allege that these persons were not alive even at the date of the Will. But owing to the lapse of time there are matters on which no satisfactory evidence can be given. By his unreasonable delay, the applicant places the caveator under great disadvantage and it is but just that very stringent proof should be demanded in support of the instrument put forward.

The question then arises, has the applicant removed the suspicion which naturally attaches to a Will produced in these circumstances? I am clearly of the opinion he has not. The witnesses whom he has examined in support of the Will are persons of no particular credit and the explanation offered in regard to the various suspicious circumstances is far from convincing.

The learned District Judge relies on these circumstances. Firstly, that a draft petition for Probate bearing the date 1899 was produced, which, it was alleged, was prepared at the instance of either the legatee or the executor but was not filed in Court on the ground of expense. A Pleader who was examined for the plaintiff has deposed that the draft is in his handwriting. The Will was not shown to him in the witness-box and identified by him. He, however, deposed that he saw "the Will" and in the circumstances he must have meant that he saw "a Will". This evidence does not carry the matter very far. Even assuming that this particular Will was then in contemplation of the parties, no inference in favour of its genuineness can be drawn. It is quite possible that the person or persons concerned dropped the application for valid reasons and if a spurious

Will had been intended to be put forward it is not unlikely that the attempt was abandoned because they thought better of it. It is indeed very difficult to accept this circumstance as affirmative proof of the execution of the Will. Secondly, it is said that the applicant produced in Court the documents, which the District Judge was satisfied belonged to the testator. The title-deeds of all the properties were with the mortgagee and the recital in Exhibit III, one of the two deeds of mortgage executed by the testator in favour of the mortgagee, runs thus: "As I have given you the mulgeni and other original documents already along with the mortgage-deed, I have this day further delivered the property to you." The documents produced in Court have not been shown to be so utterly unconnected with the properties mortgaged that they could not be among the documents handed to the mortgagee. If these documents were, as a matter of fact, in the possession of the mortgagee the probabilities are that the applicant obtained them from the mortgagee, who, as already observed, has been charged by the defendants with having instigated the filing of the application for Probate. In any event, the legatee and his son, the applicant, being the relations of the testator, no inference in their favour can be drawn from the mere possession of some documents belonging to the testator. It is not suggested that these documents evidence or create any valuable rights and the possession of them confers, from a pecuniary point of view, no advantage.

Thirdly, the District Judge seems to think that as the legatee did not attempt to redeem the mortgage earlier, there was no need on his part to have applied for Probate. This reason is hardly convincing. If the Will was true, those that had a claim upon the testator were completely disinherited, and the entire property devolved upon the legatee, and he would not have allowed a valuable document to remain unknown, and it is, on the other hand, extremely probable that he would have taken the earliest opportunity to assert his rights under it.

In the result, I am of the opinion, that the applicant has failed to discharge the onus that lies heavily upon him and that the appeal must be allowed. The suit is dismissed with costs here and in the District Court.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 14—Punjab Redemption of Mortgages Act (II of 1913), ss. 9, 12—Application for redemption, dismissal of—Suit for redemption—Limitation.

An application by a mortgagor to redeem a mortgage under the provisions of the Punjab Redemption of Mortgages Act was dismissed by the Collector on the ground that the mortgagor had lost his right to redeem by the efflux of time. The mortgagor then instituted a regular suit in the Civil Court for redemption of the mortgage:

Held, that the suit was practically one under section 12 of the Act to set aside the order of the Collector and fell within the purview of Art. 14 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 887, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 8th August 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Bhakkar, District Mianwali, dated the 21st March 1922.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.
Lala Har Gopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of certain lands attached to Mehngawala well in Mauza Bhakkar in the Mianwali District. The property in suit consists of two plots of land, one mortgaged in 1827 by means of a written document but alleged to have been subsequently redeemed and re-mortgaged orally in 1878, and the other said to have been mortgaged in the year 1903. There is no dispute now in respect of the mortgage of 12 kanals, 6 marlas of land made in 1903, and it is admitted before me that the suit for redemption, so far as this later mortgage is concerned, is within time. The dispute only relates to the first mortgage of 1827, and the contention of the defendants is that the suit with regard to the redemption of this mortgage is barred by limitation. It is contended that the mortgage is more than 60 years old and that the plaintiff has no subsisting rights of redemption in respect of the land covered by this mortgage. The entries in the Settlement Records of 1878 on which reliance is placed by the plaintiff, it is urged, do not mean that the original mortgage of 1827 came to an end and that a new contract creating a fresh mortgage was substituted in its place in 1878. It is stated that the original mortgage remained intact, but that at about the time of the Settlement only certain modifications were introduced in its terms which did not, however, in any way affect the existence of the previous contract itself. It is further contended that in 1918 the predecessor-in-title of the present plaintiff made an application to the Collector for the redemption of this mortgage under the Redemption of Mortgages Act (II of 1913), but that this application was dismissed on the ground that the mortgage was more than 60 years old, and that the claim as to its redemption was barred by limitation. It is urged that as no suit was brought by the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff within one year from the date of that order to establish his rights in respect of the mortgage, the present suit is barred under Art. 14 of the Indian Limitation Act. Both the Courts below have found in favour of the plaintiff and have decreed the suit in its entirety with costs in both Courts against the defendants. The latter have now come up in second appeal to this Court through Mr. Jagan Nath, and I have heard Mr. Hargopal on behalf of the respondents.

Mr. Jagan Nath's first contention is that the finding of the learned Judge of the Court below on the question of limitation is erroneous, and that the Settlement entries of 1870 have been entirely misinterpreted by him. In my opinion this contention has no force and must be overruled. It has not been shown in what way the entries have been misinterpreted, and a reference to those entries clearly shows that the mortgage of 1878 was an entirely new transaction and not a mere continuation of the previous mortgage of 1827 with certain terms here and there modified. I see no reason to differ from the opinion of the learned District Judge on this point and hold that the suit in respect of this mortgage is within time. I am also of opinion that the finding of the learned District Judge that the previous mortgage of 1827 did not remain subsisting and that a fresh mortgage was created some time between 1861 and 1870 is clearly a finding of fact which cannot be disturbed in second appeal.

The next question to be considered is, what is the effect of the proceedings taken under the Redemption of Mortgages Act in 1913 on this suit? It appears that on the 11th of July 1913 Allah Bakhsh, the predecessor-in-title of the present plaintiff, made an application under Act II of 1913 to the Collector claiming redemption of the land in suit on payment of Rs. 45. Notice was issued to the mortgagees to show cause why redemption should not be effected, and on their objecting that the mortgage was made more than 86 years ago and that the applicant did not possess any subsisting rights of redemption therein, an inquiry was ordered into the age of the mortgage in dispute. The Collector eventually came to the conclusion that the mortgage was made in Sambat 1884 and that, therefore, the claim as to its redemption was barred by limitation. He accordingly dismissed the petition and directed the applicant to seek his remedy in a Civil Court, if so advised. This application was presumably rejected under section 9 of Act II of 1913. Now, section 12 of that Act lays down that "any party aggrieved by an order made under sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 or 11 of this Act may institute a suit to establish his rights in respect of the mortgage, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive." This section embodies a rule of law similar to that which is contained in r. 63 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code. Under r. 63 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code the person who is aggrieved by an order passed against him is entitled to bring a declaratory suit to establish the rights which he claims to the property in dispute within one year from the date of such order, and if no such suit is brought within the period prescribed by law, the order of the Court allowing or disallowing the objection becomes conclusive. In the present case no suit was brought by the mortgagor or his representative-in-interest within one year from the date of the adverse order passed against him, and it is, consequently, contended that this suit, which is practically one for setting aside that order, is barred under Art. 14 of the Indian Limitation Act. Articles 11, 11A, 12 and 13 of the Indian Limitation Act provide a period of limitation for suits of a specific nature brought under the Code of Civil Procedure, and Art. 14 is a general residuary Article intended to provide a period of limitation for all suits which do not fall within the purview of any of those Articles. The present suit is clearly one for setting aside an order of the Collector passed in his official capacity for which no express provision is made in the Indian Limitation Act, and I do not see how it can be argued that the suit is outside the scope of Art. 14. The learned District Judge is of opinion that as no period of limitation for a suit of this nature is fixed in section 12 of the Redemption of Mortgages Act, Art. 14 does not apply. I am unable to agree with this view. Section 12 of the Redemption of Mortgages Act merely points out the results which would ensue if the procedure laid down in that section is not followed. In order to ascertain the period of limitation for such a suit it is necessary that reference should be made to the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, and the only Article in that Act under which the suit could fall is Art. 14 which provides a period of one year's limitation from the date the order complained against is passed.

Next, it is argued that it is not a suit for setting aside the order passed by the Collector but a suit for redemption, pure and simple, and that, therefore, Art. 14 has no application to such a suit. I do not think that there is any force in this contention. Before redemption of the mortgage in suit can be effected it is necessary that the order passed by the Collector in 1913 should be set aside, and the plaintiff cannot evade the provisions of Art. 14 by merely saying that he does not expressly ask for the setting aside of the order. The Collector, after due enquiry, decided against the claim of the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-title and the plaintiff is, by reason of the latter, being a party to the proceedings before the Collector, bound by the order, and it is necessary for him under section 12 of Act. II of 1913 to get rid of that order before he can establish his right to redeem the property.

Lastly, it is argued that proceedings under Act II of 1913 are summary in their nature and that the Act is not intended to curtail the period of limitation for a suit for redemption which a litigant ordinarily possesses under the Indian Limitation Act; no doubt, this is so, but this argument entirely loses sight of section 12 of the Act under which the order is likely to become conclusive, if not duly contested by means of a suit. In my opinion the order of the learned District Judge is wrong, and the suit is clearly barred by Art. 14 of the Indian Limitation Act so far as the earlier mortgage of 1827 is concerned.

The result is, that I accept the appeal and, in modification of the order of the lower Appellate Court, grant plaintiff a decree for possession by redemption of 12 kanals 6 marlas of land incorporated in mutation No. 1509, dated the 31st of August 1903, on payment of Rs. 48 only. The rest of the plaintiffs' claim shall stand dismissed. Parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Bond—Enhanced interest on default—Stipulation, whether penal.

Where a bond provides for the payment of a certain sum with interest at a particular rate, and stipulates that on breach of such payment interest at a higher rate will be payable, the stipulation regarding such increased interest is by way of penalty within the meaning of section 74 of the Contract Act.

Revision against a decree of the Munsif, Fatehpur, Bara Banki, dated the 19th March 1923.

Mr. M. P. Asthana, for the Applicant.

Mr. Moti Lal Saksena, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—I see no reason to interfere with the order passed by the Court of Small Causes. The bond in favour of the plaintiffs stipulated that a certain sum was to be paid by the defendant within two months and in default of payment within the time limited interest was to run at Rs. 3-2-0 per cent. per mensem from the date of the execution of the bond. The lower Court held the stipulation for the payment of interest to be penal and directed interest to be calculated at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the bond. It is argued here that under the Explanation to section 74 of the Contract Act a stipulation for increased interest from the date of default may be a stipulation by way of penalty, and as the present is not the case of increased interest there was no stipulation of a penalty. The present case, however, requires no explanation at all. The opening words of section 74 are "When a contract has been broken, if a sum is named in the contract as the amount to be paid in case of such breach, that amount will be by way of penalty." Here the contract was for the payment of a certain sum and on breach of such payment a sum, that is interest at a certain rate was named to penalize the breach. Clearly the stipulation regarding interest in the bond was by way of penalty.

I shall not interfere with the discretion exercised by the lower Court. The application is dismissed with costs.

Mr. C.V. Ananta Krishnier, for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. Sitaram Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition under section 115, Code of Civil Procedure. Whether or not the Subordinate Judge was acting quite regularly in entertaining this petition under section 151, we find there is the authority of this Court for considering that he might have reviewed his decree in the suit under O. XLVII, Code of Civil Procedure [see Alamelu Ammal v. Rama Iyer (1)], and if he had acted in the exercise of his power under that Chapter of the Code, he might have passed a similar order to that now sought to be revised. As the Judge made a regular enquiry before passing his order setting aside his previous order dismissing the suit, and as he found as the result of that enquiry that the defendant fraudulently and through undue influence caused the plaintiff to sign the compromise petition and to present it in Court, and seeing that the merits of the whole case will be thoroughly enquired into at the trial of the suit, there are no good reasons for our exercising our revisional powers in favour of the petitioner when the order is substantially just, See Narayanasami v. Natesa (2).

Appeal from the decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Akola, dated 18th December 1920, in Civil Suit No. 11 of 1920.

Mr A. V. Khare, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. L. Sathedar and M. Y. Sharif, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Uttamrao, the father of the plaintiff No. 1 Dinkar Rao, entered into an agreement with the defendant No. 1 Ayub Karim to erect and work a Ginning Factory in Survey No. 12 of Tajnapeth, Akola. The partners commenced to work in October 1913, each having an eight-annas share in the business, but Uttamrao's share was the joint family property of himself and the other plaintiffs. The field Survey No. 12 belonged to the family. After Uttamrao's death the plaintiffs brought a suit against Ayub Karim, Suit No. 96 of 1917 on the file of the Third Sub-Judge, Akola, for the dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts. They also brought another suit against Ayub Karim Suit No. 97 of 1917 in the same Court for possession and rent of field Survey No. 12. Both the suits were compromised between the parties and the terms of the compromise were embodied in a joint application which they presented in Court on the 28th April 1917. That compromise Exhibit P. 1 stated:—

"(1) Survey No. 12 of Tajnapeth, Akola, on which the Factory in dispute stands should remain in the occupation of the defendant till the expiry of the terms of the lease deed executed for the purpose and in accordance with the terms mentioned therein.

"(2) The defendant should pay to all the plaintiffs Rs. 13,000 in full satisfaction of the partnership account of the Ayub Karim Ginning Factory partnership concern, which is the subject-matter of the big partition Suit No. 26 of 1909 in the Court of the First Additional District Judge, Akola. By paying this sum of Rs. 13,000 the defendant is to become the full owner of the Factory concern and the plaintiffs are to execute a sale-deed to the defendant to evidence this conveyance of their interest in this Factory. This sum of Rs. 13,000 is to include the rent for Survey No. 12 up to Diwali of 1917. The defendant Ayub Karim is responsible to obtain the consent and signature of the other set of plaintiffs, viz., Rustom Rao's sons Trivikram and Jagdesh and his wife Approbai who is now the guardian and next friend of the sons of Rustom Rao. The undersigned Dinkar Rao is to obtain consent and signatures of the late Uttamrao's sons viz; Bishwas Rao and Ramrao, minor, by next friend Dinkar Rao. The defendant Ayub Karim is to place the sum of Rs. 13,000 in cash with the firm of Ramdhan-Binjraj trading in Akola at 8 per cent. per mensem. This Ramdhan-Binjraj is liable to pay up this amount to the First Additional District Judge, Akola at any time at the orders of the latter Court or hold the same further according to the directions of the Court. The defendant Ayub Karim agrees to cause this Ramdhan-Binjraj to execute a writing in favour of the plaintiffs to undertake to hold the money as dsecribed above. This sale-deed is liable to be executed at the costs of Ayub Karim under the agreement described above within fifteen days from to-day at Akola. All the same the defendant is to deposit Rs. 13,000 only to-day with Ramdhan-Binjraj who will execute a writing undertaking to pay to the plaintiff or to the Court of the First Additional District Judge this sum of Rs. 13,000 with interest at 8 per cent. per mensem from to-day, the sum itself being payable after the execution of the proposed sale-deed of the Factory by the plaintiff as settled above."

On the day the compromise was filed Ramdhan put in an agreement undertaking to pay the money with interest. The suits were decided in terms of the compromise. Then the plaintiffs bring the present suit to compel the defendant to fulfil the compromise arrived at in the former suits. Ths plaintiffs pray that a sale-deed be prepared under the terms of the compromise, signatures of the plaintiffs obtained thereon and handed over to the defendant No. 1, and that he may be ordered to pay Rs. 15,337-15-0 to the plaintiffs with further interest and also costs. If this is not possible then the account of the Ayub Karim Ginning Factory be taken and plaintiffs be paid Rs. 10,000 on account of half the profits, or he may be ordered to pay this amount for all the profits in the Court of the First Additional District Judge, Akola, towards the proceedings of the final decree in Suit No. 26 of 1909. The case proceeded ex parte against defendant No. 2 Ramdhan, but Ayub Karim who is willing to accept the sale-deed from the plaintiffs and to pay Rs. 13,000 in accordance with the terms of the compromise, denies his liability to pay any interest on the sum of Rs. 13,000 or the costs of the suit. He further admitted that plaintiff had given him a draft of the sale-deed, but as it contained unnecessary and vexatious matter he disapproved of it. He had given several drafts to Dinkar Rao but the latter refused to execute the sale-deed in accordance with his draft. Each throws the blame of not fufilling the compromise on to the other. The case was tried on the following issues:—

(1) When did the plaintiffs first give a proper draft of the sale-deed to the defendant No. 1 and was no sale-deed executed in accordance with it because of the defendant's default?

(2) When did the defendant No. 1 first give a proper draft of the sale-deed to the plaintiffs and was no sale-deed executed in accordance with that draft because of the plaintiffs' default?

(3) Did the plaintiff No. 1 Dinkar Rao tell defendant No. 1 that he would execute the sale-deed after the decision of the Suit No. 26 of 1909 of the First Additional District Judge's Court, if so, how does this fact affect the claim?

(4) Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover interest on Rs. 13,000 subsequent to 28th October 1917 till the date of the suit?

(5) What relief are plaintiffs entitled to and which party is responsible for the costs of the suit?

The lower Court finds that defendant No. 1's failure to get the sale-deed executed even if a proper draft was given to him before 8th October 1917 was justified. The plaintiff's draft given just before the institution of the suit contained unnecessary matter and the recitals did not justify the terms of the compromise. The defendant was right in refusing to execute the sale-deed containing these terms. Defendant's own draft given to the plaintiffs was also found to offend. It was further found that the defendant No. 1 did not give any proper draft of the sale-deed to the plaintiffs and there was no default of the plaintiffs in executing the sale-deed according to any proper draft of the defendant. But as defendant's letter or notice given to the plaintiffs on 18th October 1917 clearly gives the plaintiffs notice that, if they delay the execution of the sale-deed, it would be at their risk and they would not be entitled to any interest on the sum of Rs. 13,000. The Judge thinks the plaintiffs more guilty and more responsible for the delay than the defendants. The plaintiffs were found to have led no evidence whatsoever to prove their allegation as regards the liability of defendant No. 2 Ramdhan. As the case was heard ex parte against Ramdhan plaintiffs were found bound to prove their allegations. A decree was passed directing the plaintiffs to execute the sale-deed of the property in favour of the defendant No. 1 within two months from the date of the decree in accordance with a draft to be filed by any of the parties and approved of by the Court. The sale-deed being executed be registered and then defendant No. 1 will deposit Rs. 13,000 in the Court of the First Additional District Judge, Akola, for the benefit of the plaintiff in the suit. In default of such payment, plaintiff shall be at liberty to recover the said amount by execution proceedings. Costs were directed to be borne as incurred, and it was directed that if the plaintiffs fail to execute the sale-deed as directed the suit will stand dismissed. Against that decision the present appeal has been filed.

It is here contended that it was the defendant's duty to give the draft of the sale-deed to the plaintiffs and, it is argued, the purchaser is responsible in respect of interest on unpaid purchase-money and the unsuccessful party in respect of the costs of the action. Dart on the Law of Vendors and Purchasers, Volume I, page 652, is quoted to show that when a purchaser is in actual possession or receipt of the rents and profits, as in the present case, Ayub Karim was of the Factory, he must pay interest upon his purchase-money (unless lying idle with notice of the fact to the vendor) from the time fixed for completion; and it is argued that even if the plaintiff is to blame for the delay, still he is entitled to interest as the other party was in possession of the property. It is further contended that, in any case, it was the defendant's business to propose a proper draft of the sale-deed and submit it to the plaintiffs under section 55 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act, it being the duty of the purchaser to prepare such conveyance. When the compromise was submitted it did not bear the signatures of all the parties and the consent of the Court had to be obtained to the compromise. There seems to have been delay on both sides, but it was clearly the defendant's duty to prepare a conveyance and submit it to the plaintiffs. There is practically no evidence on the record, except Ayub Karim's own statement and certain Pleaders notices and letters which have not been proved. But defendant has admitted the genuineness and validity of all the documents filed by the plaintiffs except the postal acknowledgments, notice to Ramdhan dated 26th April 1920 and a wire dated 28th April 1920 sent to Aproopbai. There is a notice dated 18th October 1917 from the defendant's Pleader, the genuineness of which is not disputed and in which it is stated that the plaintiffs have been called upon to execute a sale-deed and if not done they would not be entitled to any interest. This was ten days after the day of the compromise. The answer apparently is Exhibit P--7 in which the plaintiffs complained of the defendants trying to lengthen out matters and they seem by that notice to be genuinely anxious to get the matter concluded. Another notice, Exhibit P-15, was given by the plaintiffs giving full details of what occurred from the plaintiffs' point of view.

Looking to the fact that it was the defendant's business to prepare the draft and submit it to the plaintiffs and to Dinkar Roa's statement, it appears to me that the defendant Ayub Karim is to blame for the delay, but the compromise itself says that the sum of Rs. 13,000 was payable after the execution of the sale-deed by Ramdhan-Binjraj together with interest at 8 per cent. per mensem and, that being so, the question is if the plaintiffs can claim interest from the defendant. It lay on them to establish Ramdhan-Binjraj's undertaking to pay as the case proceeded ex parte against him. There is no sufficient evidence on the record to establish the written undertaking given in by Ramdhan for plaintiffs apparently did not properly attempt to prove the case against Ramdhan. We know from the records of the compromise case what Ramdhan's undertaking was, and in the interests of justice it seems to me necessary to give appellants another chance of doing so. I remand the case for this purpose. Parties will be given an opportunity of calling evidence, a finding will be come to and the record returned by the 16th February 1922 on which date the case will be heard. I will determine how costs go on this remand on return of the record.

RAHMAT KHAN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Majority Act (IX of 1875), s. 2—Muhammadan Law—Marriage — Majority, age of—Right to contract marriage.

The Muhammadan Law of marriage, dower and divorce is not affected by the provisions of the Majority Act as to the age of majority. Minority, under the Munhammadan Law, terminates on completion of the fifteenth year, and every Muhammadan of sound mind who has attained puberty may validly enter into a contract of marriage, even if he or she is a minor under the provisions of the Majority Act. [p. 893, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 15th December 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Gujrat, dated the 30th November 1921.

Dr. Shuja-ud-Din, for the Appellants.

Mr. Abdul Ghani, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for restitution of conjugal rights brought by one Rahmat Khan, a Head Constable of Police, against Musammat Begam Bibi, daughter of one Hayat, who is also a defendant in the case. The other three defendants were the mother and certain other relations and an injunction was prayed for against them and the father Hayat on the allegation that they were restraining the girl from returning to her husband. The suit was resisted on the ground that Musammat Begum Bibi was not the wife of the plaintiff and that she had been forced to affix her thumb impression on the marriage register without any nikah being performed between the parties. The Trial Court found in favour of the defendant and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal the learned District Judge came to a contrary conclusion and held that a marriage between defendant No. 1 and the plaintiff had been fully established. The suit for restitution of conjugal rights was accordingly decreed, and an injunction was granted in favour of the plaintiff against defendants Nos. 2 to 5 restraining them from preventing defendant No. 1 from returning to her husband.

Against this decision a second appeal has been preferred to this Court by the defendants and it has been contended on their behalf that the finding of the Court below on the question of the factum and validity of marriage is erroneous and should be set aside. In my opinion this contention has no force and must be overruled. The learned District Judge after a full consideration of the evidence has found, and it has not been disputed before me in this Court, that at the time when the marriage is alleged to have taken place the girl had reached the age of puberty and was sui juris under the Muhammadan Law. The learned District Judge has also referred to certain circumstances in his judgment which in his opinion, unmistakably point to the fact that the girl eloped with Rahmat Khan of her own free will and that she was a consenting party to the marriage which she subsequently contracted with him. Her allegation that she was forced to put her thumb impression in the Nikah Register has not been believed, and it has further been held that the evidence as to her previous marriage with one Allah Dad was false. These findings are clearly findings of facts and cannot be questioned in second appeal.

It has been contended by Mr. Shuja-ud-din that the girl at the time of her alleged marriage was a minor and that, therefore, her marriage with the plaintiff Rahmat Khan, even if it did take place, was not a valid marriage in the eye of the law. This argument entirely loses sight of the fact that the Majority Act, IX of 1875, which regulates the age of majority in India does not apply to matters relating to marriage, dower and divorce, and that the Muhammadan Law of marriage is left entirely untouched by the provisions of this Act. Minority under the Muhammadan Law terminates on completion of the fifteenth year and there can be no manner of doubt that every Muhammadan of sound mind who has attained puberty may enter into a contract of marriage even if he or she is a minor under the provisions of the Indian Majority Act. I do not see any force in this contention and must, therefore, overrule it.

There is, however, no justification for a decree for injunction being passed against appellants Nos. 2 to 5. There was no issue on the question as to whether these defendants were restraining defendant No. 1 from returning to her husband, nor was there any evidence produced in support of this allegation. I do not think that, in the absence of any evidence, the Court was justified in passing a decree for injunction against appellants Nos. 2 to 5. I accordingly accept the appeal in so far as that the decree for injunction granted to the plaintiff against appellants Nos. 2 to 5 should be set aside, but the decree for restitution of conjugal rights against defendant No. 1 should stand. Parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—One Vithal Hari Kochrekar obtained a money-decree against the present petitioner in Suit No. 84 of 1918 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at

RAGHUNATH v. GANGARAM.

Malwan on the 22nd March 1918. The petitioner alleges that he paid the whole amount of the decree to the plaintiff on the 28th October 1918 in full satisfaction; that the decree-holder recorded the payment on his copy of the decree, but the satisfaction of the decree was not certified to the Court, as it should have been, under O. XXI, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. It would appear that thereafter the decree-holder made an application for execution. Before the application was dealt with by the Court, the decree-holder transferred the decree to the present opponent on the 18th May 1921. The opponent then applied for execution of the decree.

The Court, on the hearing of the application, raised three issues, (1) can the alleged satisfaction which was not certified to the Court be recognized in execution? (2) If so, is the said satisfaction proved? (3) Is the assignment relied on by Gangaram proved?

The findings of the Court on these issues were (1) in the negative; (2) unnecessary and (3) in the affirmative. Accordingly, the Court directed a warrant to issue against the judgment-debtor under O. XXI, rr. 30 and 43 of the Code.

The petitioner has applied to this Court under section 115 of the Code to revise that order. It seems to me quite clear that the lower Court had failed entirely to recognize what is the proper procedure to be followed in the case of an application being made to the Court by the transferee of a decree. Whether attachment proceedings are already commenced at the instance of the decree-holder or not, the assignee or transferee of the decree cannot continue any proceedings previously commenced, nor can he institute any fresh proceedings for the execution of the decree, unless he makes an application under O. XXI, r. 16 to the Court which passed the decree. That application will be heard by the Court not as a Court executing the decree, but as a Court which passed the decree, and it seems clear to me that, until an order is made by the Court which passed the decree, execution may proceed at the instance of the transferee, it is not open to the transferee to execute the decree, nor is there any Court which is executing the decree. That this must be the right view can be shown by the instance of a Court after having passed a decree transferring it to another Court for execution. In such a case the application under O. XXI, r. 16 must be made to the Court which passed the decree, and the Court then is certainly not the Court executing the decree. The provisions then of O. XXI, r. 2, sub-rule (3), would not be applicable as that only enacts that a payment or adjustment which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, should not be recognised by any Court executing the decree. That sub-rule lays down an exception to the ordinary law that a party against whom a claim is made, may plead as a defence that the claim has been satisfied.

In my opinion, therefore, when an application is made to the Court which passed the decree by a transferee or assignee of the decree from the original decree-holder under O. XXI, r. 16, the application is made to the Court as a Court which passed the decree, and not as a Court which is executing the decree; and it is open to the judgment-debtor to plead that the claim has already been satisfied even although the formalities prescribed by O. XXI, r. 2, sub-rules (1) and (2), have not been followed.

There is authority for this opinion in the decisions of the Madras High Court in Ponnusawmi Nadar v. Letchmanan Chettiar (1) and in Bayyana Ramayya v. Nadamarthi Krishnamurthi (2).

In the first case A held a decree against C. It was arranged between C and B that B should advance the decretal amount to C as a loan and that an assignment of the decree should be obtained in the name of B for the benefit of C. The decree was accordingly assigned to B who applied for execution. C set up the above arrangement as a bar to execution. B contended that such arrangement amounted to an adjustment of the decree and not being certified to the Court it could not be given effect to under O. XXI, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. There was a difference of opinion. Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim holding that the arrangement amounted to an adjustment of the decree, and not being certified, could not be pleaded as a bar to execution, Mr. Justice Sundara Ayyar holding that O XXI, r. 2, did not make an uncertified adjustment invalid but merely forbade effect being given to such an adjustment when it was set up as a defence to the execution of a decree by one entitled to do so. The section did not disentitle the judgment-debtor to prove facts which show that the applicant was not the real transferee, even if the facts he relied upon showed that the decree had been adjusted.

(1) 12 Ind. Cas. 657; 35 M. 659; 10 M. L. T. 442; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 568; 22 M. L. J. 170.
(2) 32 Ind. Cas. 952; 40 M. 296; 3 L. W. 186; 19 M. L. T. 124; (1916) 1 M. W. N. 133.

RAGHUNATH v. GANGARAM.

The facts in the second case were very similar. The learned Judge, following the opinion of Mr. Justice Sundara Ayyar in the previous case, held that O. XXI, r. 2, sub-rule (3) of the Civil Procedure Code did not debar the judgment-debtor from proving facts which showed that the transferee of the decree applying for execution was merely a benamidar of another judgment-debtor, even if the facts on which he relied showed that there had been a payment which had not been certified, and when the transferee was found to be such a benamidar, the Court was bound by O. XXI, r. 16 to refuse execution in his favour.

It semes to me, therefore, that the ordinary law applies when an application is made under O. XXI, r. 16. The judgment-debtor asserting that he has paid the decretal amount even although it has not been certified, is entitled to prove it. It cannot be suggested that the judgment-debtor is not entitled to pay the decretal amount to the creditor, nor can such a payment be treated as a nullity because it is not certified. Therefore, if the decretal amount is, as a matter of fact, paid, then the decree in the eye of law becomes satisfied and any attempt to execute it on a demand for payment made is unconscionable conduct on the part of the decree-holder. It is true that the decree-holder may be allowed, under O. XXI, r. 2, sub-rule (3), to take advantage of the fact that the payment was not certified, to contend that it cannot be recognised by the Court executing the decree. But the fact remains, assuming that the payment has been made, that the decree has been satisfied and there is nothing to transfer, so that when a transferee comes to the Court which passed the decree and asks the Court to recognise him as a decree-holder, it is open to the judgment-debtor to say, "I have satisfied the debt which was merged in the decree." In my opinion, therefore, the Rule must be made absolute, the order made by the lower Court set aside and the case remanded to that Court to be tried on the footing that notice under O. XXI, r. 16 has been issued and is being heard, and that on the hearing of that notice, it will be open to the judgment-debtor to prove that he satisfied the decree. All costs will be costs in the notice under O. XXI, r. 16. Both parties to be allowed to adduce evidence.

Crump, J.—The question which arises in the present matter is, whether, where the assignee of a decree applies to execute the decree, the Court which has to consider such application is precluded from considering any objection to the validity of the assignment, if such objection involves proof of facts showing that there had been a payment or adjustment of the decree.

Now, under O. XXI, r. 16, where the transferee of a decree applies for execution, it is necessary that notice of such application shall be given to the transferor and the judgment-debtor and the decree shall not be executed until the Court has heard their objections (if any) to its execution. The first paragraph of that rule clearly lays down that the application for execution must be made to the Court which passed the decree, and it is plain enough that the Court which passed the decree is not necessarily the Court executing the decree. The Court which passed the decree may have transferred it for execution to another Court, and had the Legislature intended to indicate the Court which executed the decree for the purposes of O. XXI, r. 16, no doubt it would have used apt words for that purpose.

Therefore, so far as the wording of the section goes, there seems no reason for extending to the consideration of an application under O. XXI, r. 16 the bar introduced by the third paragraph of O. XXI, r 2. In that paragraph the words used are "the Court executing the decree," and, in my opinion, that restriction should be confined strictly to those cases where it really applies. It seems to me that where a Court has to deal with an application on the notice under O. XXI, r. 16, the question which arises is a preliminary question, that is to say, whether the person who comes forward as assignee is or is not entitled to execute the decree, and until that question has been disposed of, no question of execution can arise, and, therefore, there is no Court at that stage which can be termed "the Court executing the decree." If that is the correct view, and it finds support from the decisions which my Lord the Chief Justice has discussed, it follows that the Court which has to deal with objections to the validity of an assignment is not precluded from considering those objections which are only excluded from the consideration of the Court executing the decree. It follows, therefore, that if satisfaction anterior to the date of the assignment is made out, the Court could consider that matter before allowing the assignee or so-called assignee to proceed with execution, and it seems to me abundantly clear that if the decree has, as a matter of fact, been satisfied before the date of the assignment, there is nothing which can compel the Court which passed the decree to allow the alleged assignee to proceed with execution. Indeed, it would be wrong to allow anything of the kind to be done. Therefore, in the present case the point which has not been determined must, in my opinion, be determined, that is to say, whether the decree was, as a matter of fact, discharged before the date of the assignment on which the opponent applying for leave to execute bases his title. I agree, therefore, with the order proposed.

THE MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, AMRITSAR, THROUGH ITS SECRETARY—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), ss. 56 (4), 131—Well, private, used by public—Dedication to public—Presumption—Well, whether vests in Municipal Committee—Well in dangerous condition—Procedure.

In India, ordinarily, the owners of wells do not prohibit the public from using them. It is considered to be a meritorious act to allow the public to take water even from private wells. So the mere fact that the public have been allowed to take water from a private well for a number of years cannot necessarily lead to the conclusion that the well was dedicated to the public. [p. 898, col. 1.]

A private well does not vest in the Municipal Committee merely because of long user by the public and section 56 (b) of the Punjab Municipal Act has no application to such a well. [p. 898, col. 1.]

If a private well appears to a Municipal Committee to be injurious to health or offensive to the neighbourhood, it has ample power under section 131 of the Punjab Municipal Act by notice to require the owner to cleanse, repair, cover, fill up or drain it off. [p. 898, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 16th June 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 22nd November 1919.

Messrs. Aziz Ahmad, Abdul Rashid and D. R. Sawhney, for the Appellants.

Lala Hargopal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for a perpetual injunction in respect of a well No. 734 situated within the Municipal limits of Amritsar. The plaintiffs claimed to be its owners and complained that the Municipal Committee had wrongfully filled it up. The relief claimed was for a mandatory injunction directing the defendant to restore the well to its former condition. The defendant denied the plaintiffs' title and asked for the dismissal of the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs were out of possession and were not entitled to maintain the suit. It was further pleaded that as the well was in a very bad and dangerous condition, the defendant had filled it up for the benefit of the public and the neighbouring proprietors. Durga Prasad, Munsif, First Class, dismissed the suit by his judgment dated the 4th October 1918 on the preliminary ground that the plaintiffs having failed to prove their present possession were not entitled to maintain it.

On appeal by the plaintiffs the case was remanded by Mr. A. Campbell, Additional Judge, by his order dated the 1st of March 1920 under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, for trial on the merits. The case again came for decision before Durga Prasad, Munsif, First Class, who recorded the following finding on the question of title:—

"The defendant in written pleas has not stated that the well was sunk by the Committee or by the general public but it is given in the pleas that the well is a public one, which means that the well once belonged to the plaintiffs and now by some reasons it has become a public well on which the Committee had a full control. The well is situate in front of the plaintiffs' house as I have seen twice on the spot and the whole site near the well belongs to the plaintiffs. From these facts I find that the well belonged to the plaintiffs as it was purchased by their father along with the house in front of which the well is situate."

The learned Munsif, however, further found that by long user by the public the well had become a public one and that, therefore, the Municipal Committee, under section 56 (b) of the Municipal Act, 1911, had the power to fill it up. The suit was accordingly dismissed.

On appeal the decree dismissing the suit has been upheld by the lower Appellate Court. Hence the plaintiffs have come up in second appeal to this Court.

It has been contended on their behalf that, on the facts found, the conclusion that the well is a waqf property and thus comes within the description of a public well is not justified. The lower Appellate Court has recorded the following findings of fact:—

(1) that the plaintiffs were the original owners of the well;

(2) that, admittedly, there was no express dedication;

(3) that the well was recorded as waqf in the Municipal Register of 1890 without any objection being raised by the owner;

(4) that the well has for a long time been used by the public without any interruption on the part of the owner though no exact period has been given by the witnesses, and

(5) that the plaintiffs had been expending money on its repair.

Upon the findings, the lower Appellate Court arrived at the following conclusion:—

"It seems to be probable that, at least since 1890, the public have been using the well without any hindrance and this, I think, is prima facie sufficient to show an intention on the part of the owner to dedicate the well to the use of the public. If this dedication can be inferred, then the public has a right to use the well and it appears to me that the well is a public one within the meaning of section 56, clauses (a) (b) of the Municipal Act."

The conclusion at which the learned Judge has arrived is mainly based upon two facts, namely, (1) that the well was recorded as waqf in the Municipal Register in 1890 without any objection on the part of the owner, and (2) that it has been used by the public since 1890 without any objection on the part of the owner.

It is not shown that the owner had any notice of the entry in the register. The register in which the entry has been made was kept by the defendant. At the most, the entry may be treated as an admission of the defendant that the well was waqf. The evidence as to the entry of the well as waqf property in the Register of the Municipal Committee, in our judgment, cannot be used as a piece of evidence against the plaintiffs in this case. The learned Munsif found upon evidence that up till 1880 the plaintiffs or their predecessors-in-title were in possession of the well as owners. The user by the public is said to have commenced from 1890. In our opinion this was not sufficient to raise the presumption that the owners had dedicated the well to the public. In this country ordinarily the owners of wells do not prohibit public from using them. It is considered to be a meritorious act to allow the public to take water even from private wells. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that the mere fact that the public has been allowed to take water from the well since 1890 cannot necessarily lead to the conclusion that the well was dedicated to the public. We have looked at the plan of the well which shows that there are buildings belonging to the plaintiffs on the east and south of the well and that there is an enclosure with walls on three sides within which the well is situated. It is open towards the public road. The learned Munsif has also found that "the well is situate in front of the plaintiffs' house as I have seen twice on the spot and the whole site near the well belongs to the plaintiffs". Under these circumstances, we cannot uphold the finding of the lower Appellate Court on this point. The Committee had no power to act in the manner it did. In our opinion section 56 (b) of the Municipal Act has no application to the facts of this case and the well did not vest in the Committee. If the well appeared to the Committee to be injurious to health or offensive to the neighbourhood it had ample power under section 131 of the Act by notice to require the owner to cleanse, repair, cover, or fill up or drain it off. This was not done by the Committee.

We accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the decrees of the Courts below grant the plaintiffs a mandatory injunction directing the Municipal Committee to restore the well to its original condition with costs in all Courts. If the Municipal Committee fails to do this within a reasonable time, the plaintiffs may themselves restore the well and recover the costs from it.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are as follows:—Bhagelu brought a suit against Musammat Dharma for restitution of conjugal rights and, as Musammat Dharma was a minor, her uncle Sampat was made guardian ad litem. The Trial Court decreed the suit. An appeal was filed in the lower Appellate Court on behalf of the minor by the minor's father Manbodh. There had been no order removing Sampat from guardianship. The lower Appellate Court commented on the fact that, although Sampat had been appointed guardian ad litem in the lower Court, the appeal had been filed through Manbodh. In the result, the Court allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit.

On appeal before us it has baen urged that there was no valid appeal before the lower Appellate Court and our attention was called to the recent decision of a Bench of this Court in Shambhu v. Kanhaya (1), which is exactly in point. It was there held that, where a guardian ad litem to a minor defendant has once been appointed, such appointment continues for the whole of the lis or until it is revoked by Court, and the guardian so appointed is the only person who can file an appeal on behalf of the minor. That decision follows several other decisions of this Court which are mentioned in the course of the judgment and also a Madras case. It seems to us that we are bound to follow this course of decisions. It may be that the defendant has a remedy open to him as suggested in the case of Bawan Das v. Bishnath (2). We allow the appeal, following the decisions of this Court, and setting aside the decree of the Court below restore that of the First Court. We make no order as to costs.

Mortgage—Prior and puisne mortgagees—Foreclosure by prior mortgagee—Puisne mortgagee not impleaded—Right to redeem prior mortgage—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 1.

In a suit by a pusine mortgagee the prior mortgagee was impleaded as a defendant but was discharged as he pleaded paramount title. The puisne mortgagee purchased the mortgaged property in execution of the final decree on 15th November 1916. The prior mortgagee sued on his mortgage without making the puisne mortgagee a party and obtained a final decree on 12th October 1916 and possession on 17th October 1916. The puisne mortgagee sued to redeem the prior mortgagee who in his turn claimed to redeem the former as he had foreclosed the equity of redemption:

Held, that the prior mortgagee could not be allowed to redeem as he would thus get an advantage of his own breach of the law in not impleading the puisne mortgagee as a party to his suit. [p. 900, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The following dates are important in the case. The field in suit was mortgaged to the present appellant on 30th July 1910 and then to the respondent-plaintiff on 26th February 1913. The plaintiff filed a suit, No. 76 of 1914, and impleaded the prior mortgagee as a party. He was discharged on 7th August 1914 pleading his paramount lien. A preliminary decree was passed on 5th October 1915 and a final decree on 25th February 1916 and plaintiff purchased the field in auction on 15th November 1916. The prior mortgagee sued in Suit No. 86 of 1916 not making, as he should have done, the puisne mortgagee a party to it. He got a final decree on 12th October 1916 and took possession on 17th October 1916, i.e., before the auction of the subsequent mortgagee's suit. The present case of the subsequent mortgagee is to redeem the prior mortgagee. His claim has been allowed and the only point pressed in this appeal is that the prior mortgagee has the superior right to redeem as he has foreclosed. The question for consideration is, whether the prior mortgagee who has foreclosed the equity of redemption of the mortgagor and taken possession can insist upon his being maintained in possession by offering to redeem (the subsequent mortgagee?) whose title to possession came into existence subsequent to the foreclosure. The question is, whether the prior or the subsequent mortgagee has the right to redeem.

It is argued that, under O. XXXIV, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, a prior mortgagee is not a person who can be said to be interested in the suit of the subsequent mortgagee. That is, he is not a necessary party, the reason being that what is mortgaged to the subsequent mortgagee is merely the right of redemption; in fact an encumbrance on the equity of redemption. The presence of the prior mortgagee in Court is not necessary to work out the rights of the subsequent mortgagee. If, however, that person impleads a prior mortgagee and he fails to set up his prior lien there are cases which hold that he cannot do so again. In the present case, when joined in the plaintiff's suit, the defendant did set up his prior mortgage and was discharged from the suit on that ground.

It is contended that there has been no adjudication between the two mortgagees and the appellant's rights under the prior mortgage remained intact, or, in other words, the puisne mortgagee works out his right against the mortgagor subject to the prior mortgagee's rights whatever they be. So, if the prior mortgagee brings a suit and obtains foreclosure therein, he can claim to redeem the subsequent mortgagee as the interest of the mortgagor becomes transferred to the prior mortgagee.

On 12th October 1916 the present appellant held the lien in two capacities: one that of a prior mortgagee and the second as the holder of the mortgagor's equity of redemption subject to the encumbrance of the subsequent mortgagor. On 15th November 1916 the equity of redemption as regards the second mortgage was put to auction and purchased by the puisne mortgagee but there was nothing for him to sell or get, as all interest had passed on 12th October 1916, to the prior mortgagee. So nothing was bought or sold. The right of possession is a right incidental to the right to property and in this case would not by his auction-sale pass to the puisne mortgagee. The person who has a prior title would be the prior owner and as such has the right to redeem the plaintiff's mortgage. The appellant, in his capacity of prior mortgagee, had the option to state that he was willing to be redeemed by the puisne mortgagee or to state, qua representative of the mortgagor, that he would permit the puisne mortgagee to redeem him. Having the election, he makes it and offers the latter of the two alternatives to the plaintiff. It is admitted that he will have to pay the decretal amount as fixed by the decree on the second mortgage following the case of Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (1).

Great stress was laid in argument on the decision in Hassanbhai v. Umaji (2) and in Parasram Singh v. Pandohi (3), in which the Bombay case is followed. Against these cases have been quoted Ram Narain Sahoo v. Bandi Pershad (4), Raghoba Sakharam v. Madho Rao Bapuji (5) and Sonba v. Lahanoo (6).

The case in Hassanbhai v. Umaji (2) unquestionably favours the position contended for by the appellant. But it seems to me that in the present case appellant cannot be permitted to gain a position which he would not have gained except by a breach of the law. He was bound to make the puisne mortgagee a party to his mortgage suit. If he had done so, the present plaintiff could have redeemed or, if he had failed to do so, could in turn have been redeemed. It is by not making the plaintiff a party to that suit that the present appellant, having obtained prior possession, is in a position to say, "as I have executed my mortgage decree and hold possession, I must be allowed to redeem the puisne mortgagee." It seems to me that the equities forbid the appellant being allowed to take advantage of his own wrong and that the decisions of the Courts below in the case are correct. No dispute is raised as to the correctness of the price of redemption. The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Letters Patent (Mad.), c. 15—Refusal to alter terms of sale proclamation—Refusal to extend time of Court sale—Order, whether "judgment" and appealable.

An order by a Single Judge on the Original Side of the Madras High Court refusing to alter the terms of a sale proclamation by raising the upset price and dividing the property into lots is purely one of discretion and of merely interlocutory nature. It is not a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent and is not appealable.

An order refusing to postpone a Court sale or to extend the time allowed to raise money by mortgage or private sale of the properties which are the subject of Court sale is also interlocutory and is not appealable.

Letters Patent Appeal from the order of Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri, dated 3rd April 1923, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court, in Civil Suit No. 321 of 1922.

Messrs. L. S. Veeraraghava Aiyar and A. Ramakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—This is an interlocutory appeal from an order of Kumaraswamy Sastri, J., sitting on the Original Side refusing the application by Judge's summons to alter the price fixed as the upset price in the proclamation of sale, to alter the mode of selling a certain part of the property into a sale in convenient lots instead of a sale as a whole, and to postpone the date of the sale.

The suit was a mortgage suit. The preliminary decree gave what seems to be a short time of three months for redeeming. That time having elapsed, no application having been made for extension of the time and no appeal having been taken from the preliminary decree, a final decree was passed ordering a sale. The Court then directed the sale on a certain day and in the ordinary way, under O. XXI, r 66, caused a proclamation to be drawn up. Thereafter this summons was taken out and the learned Judge having dismissed it, this appeal is brought to this Court; and the question is whether such an appeal lies.

Under the Code of Civil Procedure then in existence, which is in many ways similar on this matter to the present Code, a Full Bench of this Court, in Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmania Ayyar (1), held that the Court in exercising its powers settling the terms of the sale proclamation acts ministerially and not judicially, and that, therefore, no appeal lies. I think it is true to say that, for the purpose of that decision, it was not necessary so to hold; but, however that may be, that is a finding of a Full Bench. Speaking for myself, I have very great doubts as to whether it is a correct finding or not, but it is a finding by which we are bound, provided there is nothing in the alteration in the Code to make it no longer applicable. On that, an interesting argument has been addressed to us and I should myself desire to refer that question to a Full Bench, if I considered it necessary to follow that case in order to decide the point before us, but I do not think it is. The question to be determined here must turn on the proper interpretation of clause 15 of the Letters Patent which says: "We further ordain that an appeal shall lie from the judgment (not being an order of a certain kind) of one Judge of this Court." There is no doubt that those words give a right to appeal in respect of many kinds of orders, and the law, so far as this Court is concerned, is to be found in the Full Bench decision in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (2), where a very large number of instances were given of orders, which were appealable and one or two instances were given of orders which were not appealable and the Court came to the conclusion that the kind of order that was not appealable was an order which was described as merely interlocutory. In my judgment, the order in this case was merely interlocutory. It does not finally dispose of the rights of the parties at all. I should add that, in so far as it is not an application to extend the time for the purpose of allowing the amount of the decree to be raised by mortgage or by private sale of such property, the Court of first instance by reason of the terms of O. XXI, r. 83 (3) was expressly forbidden to make such order, and on that ground the Court had no power to make such order and no appeal can lie from its refusal to do so. So far as the question of granting further time is concerned, the power of the Court below to do so must be sought under O. XXI, r. 69 which says that the Court, in its discretion, may adjourn a sale to a specified day, and, in my view, the order in the exercise of that discretion is an order of a merely interlocutory nature. I think the same applies to the question here whether there should be an alteration of the terms of the sale proclamation by raising the upset price, and dividing the property into lots. The matter is so purely one of discretion of the lower Court not affecting the final rights of the parties at all, that it ought to be treated as merely interlocutory.

On these grounds, the preliminary point succeeds and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Coleridge, J.—I agree. I should like to add that, in my opinion, Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmania Ayyar (1) needs to be reconsidered by a Full Bench as, in my opinion, the alteration of the Code was deliberate and was intended to take away the ministerial functions that were alleged to be vested in the Court and distinctly made it a judicial function from which an appeal will lie.

The fact that an only daughter of a Hindu testator who, in the absence of a Will, would have had the estate for life, has been bequeathed the estate should be taken into consideration in estimating the intention of the testator. In such a case the inference is that an absolute estate was intended to be conveyed.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this case is, as to the interpretation of the Will made by Hari Singh in favour of his daughter, Binia Bai, the question being whether it conveys an absolute estate or not. It is to be observed that in any case Binia Bai, the only daughter, would have the estate for her life, and this must be taken into consideration in estimating the intention of the testator, and to a certain extent differentiates the case from those quoted by the learned Pleader, for the appellant, viz., Harilal Pranlal v. Bai Rewa (1) and Motilal Mithalal v. Advocate-General of Bombay (2). The expressions used in the Will are "malik" and "kabiz." These have been interpreted by the Privy Council to convey absolute ownership. The latest case on the point is Fateh Chand v. Rup Chand (3), in which Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (4) is followed, and the words "malik" and "kabiz" are held to unquestionably carry the signification of a full ownership in the property; so also in Thakur Parshad v. Jamna Kunwar (5), it is held that unless there is something in the context qualifying it the word malik used in a Will it bears its technical meaning, and when a testator bequeathed his property to his mother and wife who were to be "malik aur kabiz" it was held that the ladies obtained an absolute interest.

(1) 21 B. 376; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 253.
(2) 11 Ind. Cas. 547; 35 B. 279; 13 Bom. L. R. 471.

In these circumstances, I am of opinion, that the view of the lower Appellate Court is right. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit for rendition of accounts, removal of the defendants from the office of trustees and appointment of new trustees. The Trial Court dismissed the suit and the Appellate Court upheld the decree of the Trial Court. Hence this second appeal was filed by the plaintiffs.

On the appeal being taken up for decision a preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the respondents on the ground that it must be taken to have abated on the following facts:—The judgment under appeal was given on the 21st of January 1922. The appeal was filed on the 19th of April 1922. On the 6th of July 1922 an application was made to remove from the Memorandum of Appeal the name of one Ram Richhpal and substitute the names of Prem Nath and Hukam Chand, as Ram Richhpal had died before the presentation of appeal and his name had wrongly been continued on the record. This application was admittedly made after the period of limitation provided by the law for the presentation of appeals had expired. It, however, appears that, in spite of the fact that Ram Richhpal had died before the decision of the lower Appellate Court, his name by an oversight was retained in the decree of the lower Appellate Court. Mr. Shamair Chand has contended that he and his clerk were misled by the entry in the decree of the lower Appellate Court, that the retention of the name of the deceased was not intentional, that having regard to this circumstance the mistake should be overlooked and the time for appeal against the heirs of Ram Richhpal should be extended under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act. In my opinion the mistake appears to be a bona fide one. I, therefore, extend the period of limitation under section 5 of the Limitation Act and overrule the preliminary objection.

As regards the merits of the case the following facts must be taken into consideration in order to decide the question raised in this second appeal. One Musammat Dhako died in 1875 leaving considerable property, both moveable and immoveable—a dispute arose between the reversioner as to succession. On the 21st of August 1875 a deed of partition was executed by which the ancestors of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and those of the defendants divided the property. By that deed a shiwala with certain shops and Rs. 10,000 were set apart for charitable purposes. The clause relating to the charity is set out in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court as follows.—

"Rs. 10,000 (ten thousand rupees) cash and a house, (shiwala) with shops as a joint property, detailed below, have been set apart for charitable purposes with our consent. We, co-sharers, have no claim to the said cash and house and shops. A sada barat (perpetual giving of alms) will continue to exist. Hence we have written these few words in the form of a deed of partition so that it may serve as an authority:—

"One house (shiwala) with shops under it and Rs. 10,000 (ten thousand rupees), out of the whole heritage of the deceased, have been set apart for charitable purposes as wakf property. The said Rs. 10,000 is to be spent as follows:—

	Rs.
(a) for a sada barat ...	8,000
(b) for the construction of a shiwala ..	1,000
(c) for the expenses in connection with the sati of the family ...	1,000
Total ..	10,000"
